"Finis coronat opus. The concluding verse is fairly bursting with absurdities. We are lost in admiration of the marvellous mariner, who, 'sailing o'er life's solemn main,' has such a prodigious power of vision as to be able to see footprints on the beach. The footprints, however, are equally miraculous in their enabling the mariner to take life again. Common intelligence, however, aided by ordinary imagination, utterly fails to explain how these wonderfully permanent footsteps on the 'sands of time,' can in anywise serve as a guide to the mariner 'sailing o'er,' etc. But we have given too much space and time to this trash."

NEW MUSIC.—Our acknowledgment for the following music from M. Gray, 613 Clay street, has been unavoidably delayed: "Barn Door Jig and Wearing of the Green," "Kissing on the Sly," "Delta Phi Polka," "Fairy Waltz," "Be Thou Near Me," and "Call Me Thine Own"—the latter a very pretty melody by Halevy. "Be Thou Near Me" and the "Fairy Waltz" rank next in quality. The "Barn Door Jig," etc., is a musical reminiscence of Arrah-na-Pogue.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omuibus, two trips u day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Puhlic that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

It was hnilt expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.
Rooms are well ventilated, and the Puhlic will findi Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can he had nn reasonahle terms.

LARGE READING ROOM
Attached to the Hotel,
Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,
Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will he in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and haggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6-3m Proprietor.

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO
411 CLAY STREET,
BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the hest style, hy
M. D. CARR & CO.
je30-3m

DRY GOODS.
FOR CHOICE STYLES IN Dress Goods,
THE VERY BEST MAKES OF IRISH LINEN,
And superior French and English
Calicos,
Go to
S. MOSGROVE,
222 Third st.,
je23 Colton's Building.

PISCO!
G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.
For sale by V. SQARZA,
my28 Lied street, San Francisco.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
MARY SMITH, Plaintiff,
vs.
WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County nf San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk nf said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you hy the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service nn you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, hut in this District, within Twenty Days; nther-wise, within Forty Days—or judgment hy default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing hetween Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, he awarded tn Plaintiff, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled. WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney, 535 Clay street.
je30-3m

HEUSTON,
HASTINGS
& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers
OF
SAN FRANCISCO,

Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive Enropean connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE
STOCK OF
CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,
GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,
TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,
ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT REDUCED PRICES.
je17-3m

A CARD.

M. Howard's Hair Restorative,
NO. 315 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE ABOVE PREPARATION, which has been recently discovered and patented, is purely a Vegetable Extract.

The undersigned are fully aware of the many unsatisfactory and useless preparations for restoring hair that have heen introduced to the puplic, and how little confidence is to be placed in any pretensions to restoring the hair to bald heads, hut,

HAVING TRIED MR. HOWARD'S PREPARATION,

we are ahle to state that it not only prevents the Hair from falling out, hut absolutely reprodnces it, and that we now have good suits nf Hair growing where we were entirely hald. Therefore, as a matter of justice to Mr. Howard, and of consolation to hald heads, we tender him this testimonial Mr H. keeps the article for sale in hottles, with directions for its use, or applies it himself, as may he desired.

San Francisco, April 6, 1866.

Frank M. Thayer,	R. A. Redman,
W. S Davis,	J. O. Rountree,
T. A. Hall,	G. W. Gamble,
A. C. Knox,	J. W. Miller,
Bradbury Sanborn,	E. C. McComb,
George Wells,	D. C. Ross,
Joseph Wells,	jy7

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. SINGHAM, C. S. WEBB

No effort will he spared tn enahle THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal tn the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as heing

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have beeu no less warm and congratnlatory than those which we have received at the hands of onr cotemporaries of the Pacifi Their verdict is unanimously in favor of and all join in pronouncing their unqnalified approval of its unequalled merits.

THE CALIFORNIAN

Its reputation is now fally established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

☞THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must he addressed to the Publishers nf THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchan street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can he procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes hound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT

Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, und removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in nsing them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults... fants.....	25 25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilions Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Billions Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Ridiag,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1	.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....	$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, und book.....	8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book.....	6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any purt of the couatry, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR LIQUID PEARL!

See that the name, GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped ON THE BOTTLE. No other is Gennine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH AND DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay
ap27-3m San Francisco

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mail able priuted matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter uot charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must he prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will he charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM
AT THE
State Fair of California,
The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING Machine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,
General Agent,
111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE
RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.
my10-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Coustipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from
Roots and Herbs
Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.
Try Them and You will be Satisfied.
For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
my11-6m San Francisco

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Confectioners,
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be qual to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods livred etc any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
IMPORTERS O
Drugs, Chemicals, Herbs, PATENT MEDICINES,
PAINTS, VARNISHES,
ACIDS, DYE STUFFS,
OILS, PERFUMERIES,
TOILET ARTICLES,
BRUSHES.

We are just receiving, direct from Spain, a complete assortment of CORKS! CORKS! CORKS which we offer at lower prices than usual

DUSTING, PAINT, VARNISH, SHOE, SCRUB, HAIR AND TOOTH BRUSHES:

We have a splendid stock, which we offer at extremely low prices.

HERBS.

We have received, direct from the Shakers, all kinds of fresh Herbs, and intend to keep every article used of this description.

TILDEN'S SOLID AND FLUID EXTRACTS, PILLS, AND CONCENTRATED PREPARATIONS.

We have on hand, and shall keep a full assortment of the above celebrated preparations, which we offer to the trade at such prices as will defy competition.

FLAVORING EXTRACTS.

A great variety, not to be equalled in the market as to quality and price.

Parties about purchasing would do well to give us a call and examine prices and goods before purchasing elsewhere.

PLAIN
AND GUM TEETH.

We have the largest assortment of any house on the Pacific coast.

GOLD FOIL.

We are manufacturing Foil which we can recommend to the profession as being a superior article. We also have on hand a full assortment, of all the various makers

VULCANIZERS,
DENTAL CHAIRS AND LATHES
FILES,
VULCANITE AND GUTTA PERCHA, FORCEPS,
BURRS, DRILLS AND EXCAVATORS, MIRRORS, ETC.

We have, besides the above, every article used by the Dentist, and are daily in receipt of all the new invcutions in use.

Dentists will find it to their interest to call and examine our stock and prices hefore purchasing elsewhere.

R. H. McDonald & Co.,
CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.
AND
J STREET - - SACRAMENTO.
ap28 3m

TRY LE COUNT'S INK.

CORNER OF
Sacramento and Montgomery streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Post Office Address: Lock Box No. 1477. je30 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S
Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these
LIFE-GIVING PILLS!
Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be
A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,
For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever
AN ETERNAL SPRING!
It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.
THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES
Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none besitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—
FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS
Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest
VEGETABLE COMPOUND.
They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.
FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS
And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills
Invariably cure the following diseases:
Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. ap14-1y

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)
SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1 FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

J. PEIRCE,
FURNITURE AND
Bedding Warerooms.

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
je16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
je30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.
je17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitonian System of Writing—the Best System know

W. HOLT,
de9 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

THE ORGAN.

THEN swelled the organ; up through choir and nave,
The music trembled with an inward thrill
Of bliss at its own grandeur; wave on wave
In flood of mellow thunder rose, until
The hushed air shivered with the throb it gave,
Then, poising for a moment, it stood still,
And sank, and rose again, to burst in spray
That wandered into silence far away.

Deeper and deeper shudders shook the air,
As the huge bass kept guthering heavily,
Like thunder, when it rouses in its lair,
And with its hoarse growl shakes the low-hung sky;
It drew up like a darkness everywhere,
Filling the vast cathedral; suddenly,
From the dense mass, a clear, sweet treble broke,
Like lightning, and the full-toned choir awoke.

In gorgeous beauty shone the light aslant,
Brimming the church with gold and purple mist—
Meet atmosphere to bosom that rich chant,
Where choral voices in one strand did twist
Their vari-colored tones, and left no want
To the delighted soul which sunk abyssed
In the warm music-cloud, while far below
The organ heaved its surges to and fro.

[From James Russell Lowell's "Legend of Brittany."

HAIR-DYEING.

ARE wigs immoral?—because if not, one scarcely perceives a reason why the newspaper moralists who are so fond of describing Anonyma and Cora Pearl with a kind of reprehensive voluptuousness of detail, should waste so much moral strength in denouncing the practice of using hair-dyes. It is not wickeder, one would think, in itself, than wearing false teeth, or scattering powder, or padding, and all those sins have hitherto escaped with very lenient censure from the newspaper pulpit. Hair-powder, it is true, since it became a taxable offence, has been condemned as nasty, which it is, and ugly, which, as any one will acknowledge who has ever seen an old minuet at the opera, it decidedly is not. It suited bright faces very well, though it made the pallid ghastly, and its disappearance, though a gain to cleanliness, was a loss to that variety of appearance which is the greatest external charm of society. People, footmen excepted, have forgotten powder, but they have not forgotten adornments as deceitful as the hair-dyes against which they are so amusingly and unintelligibly indignant.

The practice of using them is not a novel one. Women, and men, too, have dyed their hair from time immemorial, and there has not been an interval within the last three centuries during which hair-dressers have not employed pigments to conceal grayness, whiteness, or eccentricity of color in the hair. The only thing new is the fashionable shade, and the introduction of that shade is in one way a very distinct gain. It has restored the popular faith in the possible beauty of light-haired women. The condition of public opinion upon that subject has for years past been almost a marvel. That a people essentially Northern, among whom five persons in six have hair tinged with some shade of light brown, should prefer black hair is quite natural, for infrequency always increases the piquancy of admiration.

Orientals, on the same principle, admire fair hair and excessive lightness of complexion, and one African race, the Somali, stains its wool with henna and lime till it is of a dull brick-dust hue. But the English horror of light hair in women was almost comical in its intensity, so deep as to affect literature and penetrate the opinions of the uncultivated mass.

One shade of red, that false auburn which is red in the sun and brown under artificial light, was tolerated, chiefly, we imagine, because fashionable opinion is formed under chandeliers; but the true auburn, which has a golden flash in it under the sun and a red flash only by candle-light—the auburn which the Italian painters loved three centuries ago, and Millais can paint now when he will let his imagination work as well as his eyes—was utterly condemned, all the more viciously perhaps because that is the shade in which hair is found most voluminous and silky. Men's judgment was acidulated by the admixture of the one envy which the best women can never quite suppress. Flaxen hair, even that wonderful flax which suggests an aureole, and which—probably from its association with the appearance of little children—conveys an indefinable impression of innocence, for which Thackeray gave it to Becky Sharp, was disposed of summarily as "tow." Golden hair, we mean the true gold, looking as if it had been spun not from any metal so much as from a sunny topaz, was first called "conspicuous," and then, when bands became universal, "sandy." That color is perhaps the only one to which curls are essential, just as black is the only one in which curls can never be most becoming. As to the different shades of red, the language was raosacked to find terms of abhorrence which should be sufficiently expressive, and while the costermonger asked somebody "to put out that 'ere bonnet, it must be burning by now," the peer summed up his dislike in the emphatic word, "Carrots!" So deep was the disgust for this shade that it extended even to men's heads. Nobody ever suggested that men with fair hair could not be handsome, or denied that the highest Norman type, the tall, fair-haired, steel-eyed, light-complexioned man, was the ideal type of all, but everybody professed to abominate red. Hundreds of school-boys have had their lives rendered miserable by a shade too much of the hated color, and grave remonstrances have been addressed to the managers of Christ's Hospital against their uniform, on the ground that the sun by some mysterious process would turn brown hair red.

The sun, if the evidence of fact may be trusted, either blackens the hair, which seems impossible, or induces the race which live under its beams to produce the black hair which most effectually protects the head. No tropical race is light-haired. Part of the objection to red hair no doubt arose from the ugly complexion, and freckles, and turned up nose by which it is often accompanied, but the aversion was felt and expressed even in cases where red hair was only the natural complement of very regular beauty. The new fashion, therefore, of dyeing hair to lighten its color, instead of dyeing it to darken it, strikes right athwart a natural prejudice—so clearly athwart, that, while it has restored people to the use of their senses in judging color, it has also raised an absurd shout of moral reprobation. Dyeing may be immoral possibly, but dyeing red cannot be more immoral than dyeing black. The world does not greatly condemn a fair woman whose beauty is spoiled by untimely grayness for removing the blemish—feeling, though not acknowledging, that beauty is a gift which it is as right to preserve as health or eyesight—and if white hair may be made black, surely brown may be made golden. At all events it is made every day, and if those who make it would only remember that the golden locks of Flavia, who has a cheek like a peach and a brow of milk—not of alabaster, O minor poet! healthy flesh never being absolutely bleached—will not necessarily suit Lalage, who has a face carved out of Derbyshire cheese and a forehead which cannot tan, the golden hair would add to the grace and variety of assemblies.

So rapid has been the spread of this fashion, that the resources of chemistry have been ransacked for dyes, and we have before us a huge volume of receipts for the production of almost any shade. They are all very nasty—nastiness is the real objection to hair-dyes, as it is to rouge and chignons, and is not to false teeth—and all subject to one fatal defect. They do not change the inherent color of the hair, which grows every moment as it was originally made; the pigments therefore must be incessantly reapplied, and the hair, instead of being dyed, as, for instance, a topaz is dyed by burning, is only painted—by no means a very pleasing idea. One would think it primâ facie possible to make a radical change, the coloring matter being an oil held as it were in a tube, and impregnated with substances the character of which has been discovered.

Accordingly to Mr. Cooley, "The chemical constitution of the hair was first made known by Mr. Hatchett, who showed it to consist chiefly of indurated albumen, together with a little gelatine, or matter that yields it. Soft and very flexible hair is said to contain the most gelatine. Subsequently, Vauquelin discovered that hair contains two different kinds of oily matter—the one white and bland, common to all hair; the other, colored, and on which in part the particular color of the hair depends. He also found small and variable quantities of mineral substances in hair. In light-colored hair he found magnesia, and in black and dark hair iron and sulphur. It is the presence of these last that mainly gives to dark hair its color. Fur, wool, bristles, and spines, in their chemical nature, structure, and mode of formation, resemble hair; as also, to a very great extent, do the feathers of birds."

We ought, if that is correct, and we knew how, to be able to feed people into hair of the wished-for color; but then we do not know how, and so are driven back on devices many of which are dangerous or disagreeable. It is easy enough and safe enough to darken the color. A weak solution of acetate of iron dissolved in water and mixed with a little glycerine will, if rubbed daily into the head, gradually and permanently darken the hair and benefit the health besides—a hint we recommend to red-haired beauties when popular prejudice turns against them again, as it will one day. Lead, often used instead of iron, is as dangerous a substance as it is well possible to employ, and the lead comb in which our grandmothers trusted is of very uncertain efficacy. There is no swift mode which does not involve the use of lead or silver to a dangerous extent, and no safe mode except iron, or sometimes after a certain age iron and sulphuret of potassium, which restores the decreasing sulphur. In any case, too, under any temptation, the woman who tries to change the color of her eyelashes is a fool, who risks for nothing penalties which may embitter an entire life. For lightening the hair the following is said to be the formula most in use, and is, when the lime is applied a little too lavishly, as ingenious a device for injuring the head as ingenuity has yet discovered:

"Take of

Carbonate of Lead	1 ounce;
Litharge (pure; levigated, Hydrated oxide of bismuth)	of each ½ ounce;
Fresh slaked lime	2 ounces;
Distilled or soft water	1 pint;

boil, with constant stirring, for 30 or 40 minutes. When cold, pour the whole into a wide-mouthed bottle, add of Liquor of ammonia (.880–.882) 2 fluid drachms;

put in the cork, and shake frequently for some hours. The next day pour off the liquid portion. The sediment, which forms the dye, must then be well stirred together, and again before use. It is to be applied for 8 to 10 minutes to produce an 'auburn color;' 15 minutes, for 'chestnut;' 20 minutes, for 'full brown;' and 30 minutes, or longer, for 'deep brown' and 'black.' For the paler shades it is to be washed off with water containing a little common soda.

"('Liquid Plumbic Dye.') Take of

Hydrated protoxide of lead	¼ ounce;
Liquor of potassa	2 fluid ounces;

mix in a stoppered vial, and agitate it frequently for some days. It must be used more or less diluted, according to the object in view. By its skilful application, every shade, from a pale 'sandy red' to 'dark brown,'' may be produced; and these may be turned on the 'golden brown,' 'auburn,' and 'chestnut,' by subsequently moistening the hair with a weak solution of sulphuret of potassium or hydrosulphuret of ammonia."

Instantaneous hair dyeing is effected by washing the hair in a solution of nitrate of silver, and then in a mixture of hydrosulphuret of ammonia and distilled water, which acts as a mordant, when the hair instantly turns either brown or black. It is, however, on the golden shades that intellect has been recently chiefly expended, and here is a list which includes every color except one—the golden bronze—which is caused by washing with a solution of blue vitriol, followed by another of the ferrocyanide of potassium.

"A strong infusion of safflowers, or a solution of pure rouge, in a weak solution of crystallized carbonate of soda, gives a 'bright red,' like henna, or a 'reddish yellow,' according to its strength, if followed, when dry, by a 'mordant' of lemon-juice or vinegar diluted with one half to an equal bulk of water.

"An acidulated solution of a salt of antimony, followed by a weak 'mordant' of neutral hydrosulphuret of ammonia or the bisulphuret, carefully avoiding excess, gives a 'red turning on the orange,' which tones well on light brown hair.

"A solution of sulphantimoniate of potassa (Schlippe's salt) with a mordant of water slightly acidulated with sulphuric acid, gives a 'bright orange red' or 'golden red color.'

"Golden Yellow.—A solution of bichloride of tin (sufficiently diluted,) followed by a 'mordant' of hydrosulphuret of ammonia, gives a rich 'golden yellow tint' to very light hair, and a 'golden brown' to darker hair, owing to the formation of aurum musivum, mosaic gold, or the bisulphuret of tin.

"A solution of acetate or nitrate of lead, followed by a 'mordant' of yellow chromate of potash, gives a brilliant rich 'golden yellow.' If wanted 'warmer' or 'deeper toned,' a few drops of solution of diacetate of lead (Goulard's extract) should be added to the acetate solution.

"A solution of pure annotta, obtained by boiling it in water slightly alkalized with carbonate of soda, or with salt of tartar, gives a 'golden yellow' or 'flame yellow,' according to its strength, to very pale hair, and corresponding tones to darker hair. A previous 'mordant' of alum water 'deepens' it; and a subsequent washing with water soured with lemon-juice or vinegar 'reddens' it, or turns it on the 'orange.'"

Henna, by the way, is unobjectionable, and never fails, so that if any woman really wishes for bright red hair she has only to make friends with some attaché of the embassy at Constantinople or with Mr. Layard. We must add, that there is now sold in Paris a dye which instantly changes white or flaxen hair into the most glorious gold, which is nearly instantaneous, and never fails, or can fail. It is called orpiment, is the golden sulphuret of arsenic, and has only one trifling drawback, which those who want it probably will not mind. It kills, just as inevitably and as swiftly as doses of arsenic would.

A NEW AND GRAND EPOCH IN MEDICINE.—Dr. Maggiel is the founder of a new medical system. The quantitarians, whose vast internal doses enfeeble the stomach and paralyze the bowels, must give precedence to the man who restores health and appetite with from one or two of his extraordinary pills, and cures the most virulent sores with a box or so of his wonderful and all-healing salve. These two great specifics of the Doctor are fast superseding all the stereotyped nostrums of the day. Extraordinary cures by Maggiel's Pills and salve have opened the eyes of the public to the inefficiency of the so-called remedies of others, and upon which people have so long blindly depended. Maggiel's Pills are not of the class that are swallowed by the dozen, and of which every boxfull taken creates an absolute necessity for another. One or two of Maggiel's Pills suffice to place the bowels in perfect order, tone the stomach, create an appetite, and render the spirits light and buoyant. There is no griping, and no reaction in the form of constipation. If the liver is affected, its functions are restored, and if the nervous system is feeble it is invigorated. This last quality makes the medicines very desirable for the wants of delicate females. Ulcerous and eruptive diseases are literally extinguished by the disinfectant power of Maggiel's salve. In fact, it is here announced that Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhea Pills cure where all others fail. While, for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. MAGGIEL, No. 11 Pine street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box. R. H. McDonald & Co., Agents for Pacific coast, corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco. c14

A LADY of high rank, wife of one of our merchant princes says: "I have tested the merits of that fashionable toilet dressing for the complexion and skin—Davidson's Circassian Bloom—and find it a most delightful perfume, clearing, beautifying, and enriching the tone and purity of the complexion and skin.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obned everywhere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo bits we can save the bites and bills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Barnes & Co., New York.

S—T—1860—X. DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded my self very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all case of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavin etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. ap7-1y

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

E GOLDSMITH & Co., at No. 646 Sacramento street, three doors below Kearny, have just received some beautiful new style Garibaldis and Zouave Jackets, that for taste and style are particularly worthy of the attention of our lady readers. They have also a fine assortment of Ladies' Furnishing Goods of the choicest description. French corsets for one dollar. A great variety of French toilet and fancy articles, the newest styles of buttons and dress trimmings, may always be found at Goldsmith's 646 Sacramento street.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend. JOSEPH SPARROW.

DAINTY WORK.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D.D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN, D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
NEW YORK.
je2 4m

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

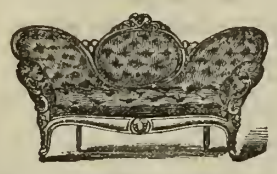
In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important considerationparticularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained.

The peculiar construction of this superior machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quick silver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

W. D. FARRAND



A. ROMAN & CO.'S
LIST OF
Late Publications.

Armadale—a Novel—by Wilkie Collins.
The Dove in the Eagle's Nest, by the author of The Heir of Redclyffe.
Shakespeare's Delineations of Insanity, Imbecility and Suicide, by A. O. Kellogg, M. D.
595 Pulpit Pungencies. with a Table of Contents.
Footlight Flashes, by William Davidge, Comedian.
Hidden Depths—12mo.
Lectures on the Study of History; delivered in Oxford, 1859-61—by Goldwin Smith, M. A.
Kate Marstone; or, Happy Hearts Make Happy Homes.
The Mule Singer—a Novel—by Anna Cora Ritchie (Mowatt.)
Poetical Works of Thomas Buchanan Read—New Edition—3 vols.
Devotions of the Ages; or, Collects, Texts, and Lyrics, illustrative of the Christian Year, by Rev. N. G. Allen.
The Adventures of Captain Castagnette (illustrated, by Gustave Dore.
The Mormon Prophet and His Harem, by Mrs. C. V. Waite.
History of the Gipsies, by Walter Simson.
Josh Billings—His Book.
Beyminstre—a Novel—by the author of The Silent Woman, King's Cope, Mr. Warenne, etc.
Garden Vegetables, and How to Cultivate Them, by Fearing Burr, Jr New Edition.
Brief Biographical Dictionary, compiled and arranged by Rev. Chas Hole and W. A. Wheeler.
Poems of Thomas Hood—New Edition, 12mo.
The Maiden and Married Life of Mary Powell.
The Dean's English, by G. Washington Moon.
President Lincoln Self-portrayed, by John M. Ludlow.
Temperance Recollections—an Autobiography—by John Marsh. D. D.
The Masquerade and other Poems, by John G. Saxe.
Life of Benjamin Silliman, by Geo. P. Fisher, 2 vols
Betsy Jane Ward—Better ½ to Artemus.
The Person of Christ, by Philip Schaff, D. D.
Asiatic Cholera, by R. Nelson, M. D.
The Laws of Short Whist, by J. L. Baldwin.
Speeches of Lord Macaulay—a New Edition, 2 vols.
Treasury of Bible Knowledge, by John Avre.
Martineau's Essays—Philosophical and Theological.
Memoirs of the Right Hon. Richard B. Sheridan, by Thomas Moore.
Gilbert Rugge—a Novel—by the author of A First Friendship.
Short Sermons to Newsboys, by Chas. Loring Brace.
Stanley's History of the Jewish Church, 2d series.
Garden Flowers: How to Cultivate Them, by E. S. Rand, Jr.
Adrift in Dixie, by Edmund Kirke.
The Philosophy of Art, by H. Taine.
Life of Emanuel Swedenborg, by William White.
Baked Meats of the Funeral, by Private Miles O'Reilly.
Recommended to Mercy—a Novel—by the author of Taken Upon Trust, Zoe's Bund, etc.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street.
jy14 San Francisco.

FURNITURE
AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!
LATEST STYLES!
The Best Workmanship,
AND LOWEST PRICES!
AT
Goodwin & Co.'s
FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,
Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - - San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.
(Successors to W. P. Harrison.)
Printers and Electrotypers,
413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.
Stamps of all kinds made to order.
Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.
A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Haad Presses FOR SALE very cheap. my3-3m

SMOKE
THE PATENT
RUSSIAN CIGARETTES,
MANUFACTURED BY
GIBB & STAHL,
S.W. COR. KEARNY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ For sale at all Cigar Stores. ap28 3m

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
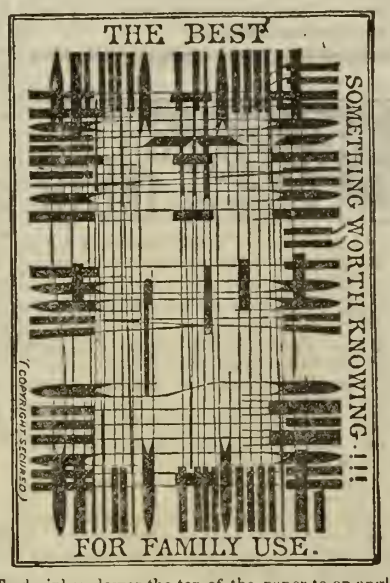
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.
All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.
Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.
JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
je10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!
MONEY TO LOAN



On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,
53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, President

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE

SILK HAT,
1866,
INTRODUCED - - - - - - MARCH 3
BY McGANN & CO.,
FASHIONABLE HATTERS,
No. 654 Washington street,
Two doors below Kearny.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.
CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.
McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.
Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.
☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO
OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.
ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,
Cor. Sansome and California streets, San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.
Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.
Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.
WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.
Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.
Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.
mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

TO FARMERS, MINERS, LABORERS
And all those wishing to secure themselves a portion of
THE MOST VALUABLE AGRICULTURAL AND MINERAL LANDS OF MEXICO,
With an equal interest in the Profits of the Plantations of
THE MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON COMPANY.

HOMES FOR THE POOR AND COMPETENCY FOR ALL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having reserved from their final Subscription List a Limited Number of Unassessable Shares, (the remaining shares of the Company having been taken up by the stockholders,) hereby offer the same for sale at the original subscription price of Sixteen Dollars each, payable in cash. Every holder of a share will be entitled to a portion of the Company's lands, having the privilege to settle thereon and participate in all the advantages and profits of the enterprise, and special privileges granted to this Company by an Imperial Decree of Maximilian, dated 9th January, 1866, without being subjected to the conditions of regular Government emigrants, this Company settling upon their own lands, secured by private purchase, and held under indisputable Spanish titles.
Shareholders becoming actual settlers will also have the privilege of any employment upon the Company's plantation. Portions of land will be allotted to settlers, to be held by them until a final division makes it their property.
For the purpose of increasing the value of the Company's land, and to create all the comforts of a home and society, it is the intention of the company to form a regular settlement and to lay out a town adjoining their present plantation into building lots, which will likewise be fairly divided between the 8,000 shares which comprise the total number of the company.
A large number of shareholders will settle upon the company's lands after the rainy season in October next. Many of them may then be employed by the company, or by others able to plant for themselves, or in developing the mineral resources of the adjoining mountains, etc., etc.
Men of all trades and professions, desiring to emigrate to Mexico, will have great advantages as shareholders of this company. They will find the lands already purchased for them at a rate equivalent to a free gift, to be held by each shareholder as his property, protected by the best Spanish titles, and the good will of all political parties now contending for the reins of government; the climate the most salubrious, and the land rich and fertile beyond description; every kind of game abounding; the rivers full of fish and with extensive beds of large oysters; altogether, a country where it is easy to procure a livelihood and the comforts of a home with less labor and less capital than in any other part of the world.
The extensive placer diggings, veins of silver, and solid quartz ledges, which are to be found in the immediate vicinity, and acknowledged to be rich and very extensive, can, by the presence of a number of settlers, be profitably developed. Many of these mines are to be found within the limits of the company's grant. The Sierra Madre or Mother Mountain of Mexico, situated only within about twenty miles from the coast, can be reached and developed with much greater facility than the more remote mines in the interior, and will therefore make the company's lands the most desirable to locate upon.
For Maps and Survey, and further information, apply at the office of the MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON CO., Beige's Book Store, Russ House, Montgomery street, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock.
☞ All the assessable stock having been taken up by mutual subscription of stockholders, the company will have no more shares to offer after the limited number of unassessable shares have been placed, and shall prefer to sell these to actual settlers—a single share of which will be sufficient to entitle them to a large portion of the lands.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED shareholders in the Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having investigated and satisfied ourselves of the importance of the enterprise, recommend the same to the public. We are convinced that under the management of the present officers of the company, with their efforts to induce industrious parties to locate upon the land, that the enterprise must become very profitable to all parties interested, and most beneficial to actual settlers.
S. R. Kettlewell, Blacksmith, 264 First street.
W. C. Mead & Son, 224 Sansome street.
M. O'Neil, Proprietor New Branch Hotel, 12 Sutter street.
Winall & Clapp, 505 Market street.
R. A. S. Repiton, M. D., 816 Montgomery street.
Wm. Rudolph, Gunsmith, 216 Pacific street.
G. Burkhardt, Jeweller, No. 209 Pacific street.
E. Keil, East India Tea Co., 631 Washington-st.
P. D. O'Regan, People's Bakery, corner Fourth and Jessie streets.
Wm. Meyer, Provision Dealer, 258 Third street.
John Duff, Painter and Paper Hanger, 642 Clay street.
A. E. Mylott, Importer and Dealer in Cigars and Tobacco, 305 Battery street
M. M. Baldwin, Jeweller, 433 Montgomery-st.
S. Baysen, Hatter, No. 346 Kearny street.
Mathew McCloskey, 644 Howard street.
San Francisco, March 20th, 1866. mar24

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,
Teachers of Dancing,
CONGRESS HALL,
On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. my5-3m

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. - - - Petaluma.
mar24-6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

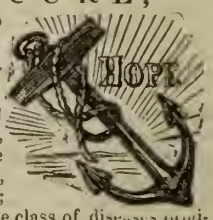
OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.



CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!
STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.
The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."
A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,
M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.
PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

AYER'S
AGUE CURE,

FOR THE SPEEDY AND Certain Cure of Intermittent Fever, or Chills and Fever, Remittent Fever, Chill Fever, Dumb Ague, Periodical Headache or Bilious Headache, and Bilious Fevers; indeed, for the whole class of diseases originating in biliary derangement, caused by the malaria of miasmatic countries.

This remedy has rarely failed to cure the severest cases of Chills and Fever, and it has this great advantage over other Ague medicines, that it subdues the complaint without injury to the patient. It contains no quinine or other deleterious substance, nor does it produce quinism or any injurious effect whatever. Shaking brothers of the army and the West, try it and you will endorse these assertions.
Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
my26-2m and all Dealers.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
SATURDAY, JULY 14, 1866.
GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship AMERICA,
ON SATURDAY, - - JULY 14TH,
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship
SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.
☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,
PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,
THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. je15 3m

COME AND SEE ME!
DR. JOHN HEALD,

DENTIST,
HAS REMOVED TO THE
CORNER KEARNY AND CALIFORNIA STS,
Where he will be pleased to see all old friends, and plenty of new ones. Every variety of Dental Operations performed in the best manner, and at prices that shall suit all persons. ☞ENTRANCE ON CALIFORNIA SREET.
ap28 3m.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper	$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right	05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand	02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100	05
Every additional $100, or fractional part	05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes. If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S.	02
Every additional $100, or fractional part	02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place	10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500	50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels	05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less	50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof	50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office	1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule	25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons	10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50	10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000	25
For every additional $1,000 or fractional part	25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such	25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100	05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y,	25
Certificates, other than specified	05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of band, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale	10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500	1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse	50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr.	25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.	1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction.	50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons	5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels	25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500	50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less	01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1	02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof	05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof	05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof	1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon	25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries	10
To receive or collect rents	25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate	1 00
For any other purpose	50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof	50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft,	25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property	02
Warehouse. for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000	10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for	25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs	25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State	50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid	50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record	50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100	50

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum	$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum	7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum	10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum	12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum	4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum	7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an.	10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.	13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum	15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
38 Walker street, New York.

TYLER BROTHERS,

NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,

SAN FRANCISCO,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

SCHOOL BOOKS,
STATIONERY,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PORTFOLIOS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
FANCY ARTICLES,
CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we stamp with

INITIALS,

In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS
ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.

je23

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware.
mar24-6m Main street, Petaluma.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR JULY:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JULY 30th, - - - - - CONSTITUTION,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth,
(Connecting with the ARIZONA, Captain Maury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

RING'S
VEGETABLE AMBROSIA
IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale and retail, by

JOHN F. SNOW,
Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,
je23 San Francisco.

THE PACIFIC

INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. my5-3m

OCCIDENTAL HOMESTEAD Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

CAPITAL STOCK, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

THIS ASSOCIATION was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 409, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M.

mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

THIS AFTERNOON.....JULY 21.

Miss Kate Denin,

SUPPORTED BY THE OPERA HOUSE COMPANY,

will appear in John Brougham's comedy,

Playing with Fire!

THIS EVENING.....JULY 21,

Benefit of Mr. Robt. Bryant:

On which occasion, the drama of

JACK SHEPPARD

will be produced.

IN REHEARSAL—

THE FEMALE DETECTIVE,

AND

Uncle Tom's Cabin.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - 25

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THOMAS MAGUIRE, - - - Sole Proprietor and Manager.
CHARLES TIBBETTS, - - - - - - Stage Manager.
J. B. MARSHALL, - - - - - - - - Treasurer.

SATURDAY EVENING.....JULY 21,

FIRST APPEARANCE OF

The Howson English and

ITALIAN OPERA TROUPE,

In Balfour's grand Opera of

The Bohemian Girl!

Arline.....Miss Emma Howson
Gipsey Queen.....Miss Clelia Howson
Thaddeus.....Mr. Henri Herberte
Devilshoof.....Mr. S. W. Leach
Count Arnheim.....Mr. Frank Howson
Florestein.....Mons Charles
Buda.....Mrs. Hall

Enlarged Chorus and Orchestra. New Scenery painted by Mr. A. Torning.

IN REHEARSAL:

Loder's Opera of

The Night Dancers.

☞ Box Office now open. Seats may be secured for the week. Books of the Opera for sale at the Box Office.

Dress Circle and Orchestra.....$1 00
Reserved Seats.....50 cents extra
Family Circle.....50 cents
Gallery.....25 cents
Private Boxes.....$10 and $5

MEAGHER, TAAFE & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS OF

DRY GOODS, LINENS,
FURNISHING GOODS,
YANKEE NOTIONS,
FANCY GOODS, ETC.

AGENTS FOR THE

MOUNT VERON DUCK COMPANY,

NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.

RETAIL HOUSE, - - - NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

jy21 3m Lick House.

YANKEE NOTIONS

AND

FANCY GOODS!

MERCHANTS wanting Goods in this line should not fail to examine our stock, which is new and attractive, before buying elsewhere.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,

jy21 3m Battery street, near Pine.

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

Faust Cellar.

Southeast corner of Clay and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc.; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

ja27 tf between California and Pine.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

Bianchi's Grand Italian

Opera Troupe.

FIRST NON-SUBSCRIPTION NIGHT,

SATURDAY EVENING - - JULY 21

Will be presented Bellini's Great Opera,

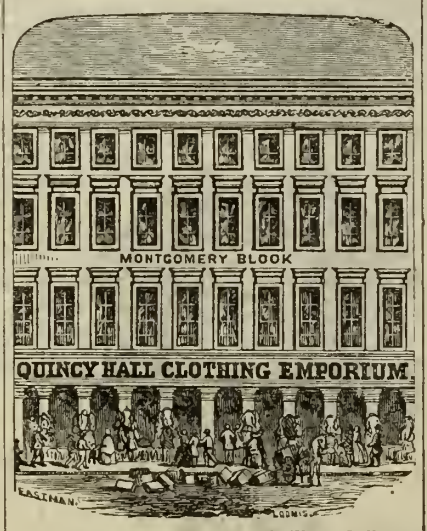
NORMA!

Norma.....Signorina Elvira Brambilla
Adalgisa.....M'lle Louise Tonrny
Pollio.....Signor Eugenio Bianchi
Oroveso.....Sr. S. Milleri
Flavio.....Mr Schraubstadter
Clotilde.....Madame Bernard
Grand Chorus of Druids, Gallic Warriors, Priestesses, etc.

CONDUCTOR.....MR. RUDOLPH HEROLD

Scenery by Mr. Rogers. Costumes by Mr Taylor.

Regular Subscription Nights, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, commencing Monday, July 23d.



PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Dress Circle, Orchestra and Parquette.....$1 00
Reserved seats, 50 cents extra.
Gallery.....50

☞ The Box Office is open from 9 A. M. for the securing of reserved seats for season tickets.

QUINCY HALL,

545, 547, 549 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE LARGEST CLOTHING EMPORIUM in California. The daily sales from the establishment is a sufficient guarantee that the prices are less than those of any other house on the Pacific coast. Here you also find clothing of the best of California Cloth, both for Wholesale and Retail trade. Also, particular attention paid to making up fine clothing to order. jy21

LOW PRICES

IN

Gents' Furnishing Goods,

AT

WARD'S SHIRT STORES,

323 MONTGOMERY STREET,

CORNER OF MARKET AND THIRD STREETS,

SAN FRANCISCO.

P. S.—Printed directions for self-measurement for Shirts and Price Lists of Goods sent free by mail.

ap21 3m

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE

FOR

TAX COLLECTOR,

HENRY A. COBB,

OF THE FIRM OF COBB & SINTON, jy21 NO. 407 CALIFORNIA STREET.

CARPETS.

Removal! Removal!

KENNEDY & BELL

HAVE REMOVED TO

BUSH STREET,

Below Montgomery,

Store lately occupied by the Franco-American Commercial Company.

ap21 3m

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AUCTIONEERS.

Olney & Co., removed to 418 Montgomery street.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.

S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BATHS.

Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery

BOWLING ALLEYS.

Wheelers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.

A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.

Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wentworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

COLLECTOR.

B. Pulvermna, 614 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.

H. M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.

Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.

S. W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mill.)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.

Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.

Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.

Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyce & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.

R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.

Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.

Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.

N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J. J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.

Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.

Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.

Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine

RESTAURANTS.

Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.

Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S. Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.

Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 324 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.

Grover & Baker, R. F. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.

Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.

T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.

Dr Bourno's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.

Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.

Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MAPS.

Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.

J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.

M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PIANO SCHOOL.

Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.

Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

ja27 tf between California and Pine.

VINCENT'S COLD PREVENTIVE.

A Sure Cure

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS

DYSPEPSIA,

CONSUMPTION,

NIGHT SWEATS, AND PULMONARY DISEASES.

Read the following:

REMARKABLE CURE.

San Francisco, September 5th, 1865.

I desire to make known the fact that I was afflicted with a very bad cough for fifteen years, and, during this time, used everything which I could hear of without getting the better of my disease, until I tried Dr. D. B. Vincent's Cold Preventative or Cough Mixture, which cured me sound and well.

NEWTON MOORE.

This is to certify that my wife has been troubled with indigestion for nearly eighteen months, and, by using one bottle of Dr. Vincent's medicine, has been completely cured.

San Francisco, April 6th, 1866.

JOHNSON J. THOMAS.

San Francisco, July 17th, 1865.

I hereby certify that, having had a Cough some five months since, which had troubled me for two years, and I was so bad that I was able to do but little labor of any kind, and could not walk fast without putting myself out of breath. I was so far gone that I had chills over me and night sweats, and had what other physicians called disease of the lungs. I had been doctoring a part of the time for the last year, when I saw Dr. D. B. Vincent, and he gave me a small vial of medicine, which relieved me of the chills and night sweats, and the cough entirely went away, and I do not take cold so easy, and my health is much better in every respect. My appetite is much better; and I heartily recommend all others who are afflicted with similar complaints to him.

JOHN O'NEILL, National Hotel.

The above named diseases nearly all originate from the same or similar causes, and will cure all of them. It is a sure cure for Dyspepsia. Price, 50 cents per bottle.

THE COLD PREVENTIVE

D. B. VINCENT, M. D.,

PHYSICIAN AND OCULIST

Treats all diseases successfully on the Electric system. Particular attention paid to treating all Diseases of the Eyes, Rheumatism, Paralysis, etc. Cures guaranteed, or all moneys refunded—in most cases even where others fail.

☞ OFFICE—No. 103 Kearny street, first floor, where he can be consulted at all hours, unless professionally engaged. All orders from the country promptly attended to. ap7

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,

jy19 1m SAN FRANCISCO.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON WEDNESDAY, - - AUGUST 15,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,

Up stairs, San Francisco.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 10. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, JULY 28, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

The Prayer of Kahonah—By Henry George. Podgerings by the Way—By "Podgers." Copperhead Humor (Editorial). Amusements. POETRY: To the Pliocene Skull—By "Bret." By the Brook—By Charles Warren Stoddard. Selected Sketches, Stories, Literary Notes, etc.

[For the Californian.]

BY THE BROOK.

DOWN across the hill's low brow—
A slender, silver fillet—
Nothing is so musical
As my little rillet.
Ah! that laughing song of yours!
Delicately trill it.

Shall I fret you, hasty brook?
Shall I mar your paces—
Weaver, weaving silver threads
Into silver laces,
Round about and in and out
The sunniest of places?

Loose your tresses in the chase,
Slip about the border
Of yon garden wall, and catch
A blossom, gay marauder!
What shall please my love of ease
As your sweet disorder?

While the world goes jogging on,
Presently I miss you;
Life is made of other stuff
Than your limpid tissue.
Turn a mill, you lazy rill,
While I wait the issue.

Let the beetle while away
The Summer with his drumming.
Foam you at the whirling wheel,
And babble to its humming.
Toil away the livelong day—
It is more becoming.

Creep beneath the sweeping bough,
While each ripple twinkles,
Starlike, in a sky of leaves,
And your frothy crinkles
Form a leathern apron there,
Full of creamy wrinkles.

When the bald and brazen day
Hath donned his dusky visor,
Still you flow a-down apace,
While night's myriad eyes are Watching you; for what they view
No one is the wiser.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

[For the Californian.]

PODGERINGS BY THE WAY.

YOU ask me to tell you what I saw and what I did on my last raid to the mountains. I observe by the papers that quite a number of "tourists" are doing that, and as the trip "up country" is now so common, there are very few people who don't know enough of it not to care about knowing any more. A great many people, too, travel without seeing anything; others see a thousand trifles that seem to make up the general interest and give occupation to the mind. The stereotyped idea that a man must give all his time to business and none to pleasure or recreation, is a Blue-Nose, Puritanical proverb, and it is about time mankind threw aside such old-fashioned notions. A man who don't take a little recreation when he can—can't when he would. All work and no play not only makes Jack a dull boy, but makes dull men more stupid.

Finding myself illustrating the idea, I resolved to go to the mountains; and Tuesday, the 10th day of July, a solitary two-horse, man, and coach from Porter and Covey's, might have been seen (if an object of sufficient interest,) winding his way around some fine openings for young men in the planks down about the wharves, and finally arriving a very slow gait at a very large one, where a man with a taking countenance stops the coach and demands money; and shows no quarter until one is shown to him. This was a case of highway robbery close at home, and rather discouraging at the outset. I thought if such things are permitted here, what can be expected up country? It is one peculiarity of this country that it is variegated. You can't go four blocks in any one direction without meeting with a gate, and having to pay for the sight. I don't see any particular sense in obliging a man to pay 25 cents for the privilege of going on board one of the California Steam Navigation Company's boats, and then paying five dollars, and two dollars, and then one dollar if he wants to sleep and eat; and a great many people have these habits. A company of such magnitude certainly could afford to let people through their gate without charge when they are sure of getting nearly, if not all, their money when they get them on board their boats. But they commence pulling feathers on the very start; and before a young cock or an old one gets fairly clear of their hands, he has scarcely a pin feather left.

The Capital is a capital boat, and requires a big Poole to float her. The passengers on board were not too numerous for comfort: there was the usual number of women and babies—the fashionably dressed, in all the pride of "tilters," and the lean and limp. I have observed, always, that women on board steamboats have an aggravating way of sitting down, staring at each other, and making ineffectual, but persevering attempts to swallow their parasol handles; they keep at it, nevertheless, and remind me always of a tame coon I once had; he was a mischievous rascal, and required constant occupation, or he would play grand smash. To keep his active temperament engaged, I would put a raisin in a bottle, in the morning when I left the house, and give him that. Zip would poke his long nose into the mouth of the bottle as far as it would go, sniff the raisin, then put his eye to the hole and take an optical view of the situation—poke his paw in as far as it could go, and then go to work; the raisin would not, of course, come out, and he couldn't reach it—but Zip never said "Give up." All day he would roll that bottle, turn it up endwise, wrestle with it, sniff at it and poke at it until tired out, then crawl up into his box, take a nap, get up and go at it again—and was the best illustration of perseverance I ever knew. When I came home at night, Zip was rewarded with the raisin; and often when sitting up and enjoying the brief satisfaction of eating it, he has eyed me with an expression which conveyed Mr. Weller's idea of matrimony, when he expresses his doubt to Sam, who contemplates it, "whether it is worth while to go through so much to learn so little."

My coons sat all about the cabin of the Capital, trying the parasol absorption business, with equal perseverance and no better success than the other coon, and without the encouragement of anticipated assistance, as in his case.

Without any unusual incident, we arrived at that exciting city of Benicia, where we troubled a frantic man on the wharf with a line, and came to a pause; during which time, the first families of the place gazed curiously upwards into the faces of the passengers, and they in turn looked down into the open countenances and mouths of the first families aforesaid. Some dozen or more young ladies stood in a row, all engaged, as usual, in trying to get that raisin out of the bottle. Father Gallagher landed somewhat flushed and heated, from being called upon to make a little faster time down the plank than suited the dignity of his calling, consequent upon perceiving a barrel of double extract of strychnine Bourbon following him at rather a gaining pace. I doubt if Father Gallagher would flee from the spirits, good or bad, if they came at him in front; but when attacked in flank and rear, it was rather too much of a good thing, and that too much was coming too fast. Discretion was much the wisest, and when Father Gallagher brought up all standing, by coming in contact with a calm and unexcited citizen of the place, who was standing quietly, with his hands in his pockets, looking up as aforesaid, the sudden blow in the region of his watch pocket caused him to describe the form of the new moon—which Father G. thinking a low bow of apology, replied to by, "All right, sir, no harm done." There was none done to Father G., it is true, but I noticed the citizen for some time still retaining his crescent-like attitude, with both hands clasped over his supper, and the expression of his face had changed wonderfully. It plainly indicated that Father G. had made a decided impression, and that he was much struck with him.

The only inhabitant of Benicia that seemed to have anything to do, was a small lean dog, who had [illegible] a bone somewhere, and had brought it down on the wharf to have room and air to pick it in peace and comfort. He noticed nothing—was in no way excited by the noise and flurry—but lay there, intent upon trying to extract sustenance from that bone. I could not avoid the comparison—here was our boat, the bone from which all Benicia derives its sustenance; the business they bring, barely suffices for food for mind and body, and alas! it is touch and go with the people, as it is with the boats. The greatest consolation Benicia has—the recollection upon which it lives, is that it came very near being a great city, and might have been what San Francisco is, had it not been for the little circumstance of Doctor Semple's having a pair of very long legs. That these lamentable legs lost Benicia its greatness, is vouched for by the following story which I heard a man tell, and swear to it as being true:

In early days when this place was a case of doubt and Benica an unfixed fact, the largest owners of the real estate—the projectors of both places—met by appointment at about the only restaurant in town, to settle the mooted point and harmonize their mutual interests, so as to decide which should be the great city. They chartered one corner of the room and a couple of tables, and after ordering on refreshments, the discussion commenced. They drank some brandy and water and got a little excited by the heat of the argument. Dr. Semple sat at the furthest table and was emphatic, bringing his fist (not a small one,) down on the table in a very decided manner, making the bottles and glasses jingle; and at the same time would bring his feet down with an emphasis. One of the principal parties, after a stubborn resistance, was about giving in; and, although a little irritated, was in the act of signing the paper, when the Doctor, to give emphasis to a remark, brought his foot down heavily, and by sheer accident and bad luck, on the toes of the stubborn man, who, throwing down the pen, sprang up and skipped around the room ejaculating, (turning fiercely on the Doctor, who was perfectly innocent of what he had done,) "D—m your long legs and big feet. Why don't you keep them at home?" The Doctor, taken aback, replied, "Long legs! big feet! My legs?" "Yes, your legs and feet. They are the legs of a giraffe and the feet of an elephant!" The Doctor was a good-tempered man, but he couldn't stand everything. He was as sensitive about his feet as the other man was.

* * * * * * *

As the play bills say, an interval is supposed to have occurred, and the stars represent a muss that occurred in that interval and what some of the party saw.

The meeting broke up, and so did the tables and dishes, and thus it came to pass that Benicia was ruined in toe toe, and came within a foot or so of greatness. Had the good Doctor's legs been a few inches shorter, or had he been a little less playful with his feet, or S—— B., Esq., had not been afflicted with corns, there's no knowing how big that city would have been, and how small we should to-day appear. Upon this melancholy reflection doth Benicia still brood, and it is too bad, for what a nice city could have been built there for half the cost of carting sand in this! And, then, what a Brooklyn Martinez would have been—what delightful country homes perched on the hill sides opposite! When I think of it, I feel myself like jumping on some sensitive man's toes and getting up a fight over it in my own disappointment, for they do say that the climate of Benicia is mild, that it never blows there, and that the sturgeon are of a superior quality—several having been caught from the wharf, by the celebrated fisherman, "the oldest inhabitant." But the bell rings, the plank is coming up, and the newly-come-aboard are planking down. The dog still gnaws his bone—the young ladies are still persevering in their efforts to swallow their parasols—the man Father G. "butted" still stands bent in reverence, and Benicia fades from our sight.

PODGERS.

A MAN'S A MAN FOR A' THAT.

A NEW VERSION.

I.

"A MAN'S a man," says Robert Burns,
"For a' that and a' that;"
But though the song he clear and strong,
It lacks a note for a' that."
The lout who'd shirk his daily work,
Yet claim his wage and a' that,
Or beg, when he might earn, his bread,
Is not a man for a' that.

II.

If all who dine on homely fare
Were true and brave, and a' that,
And none whose garb was "bodden gray,"
Was fool and knave and a' that,
The vice and crime that shame our time
Would fade and fail and a' that,
And ploughmen be as good as kings,
And churls as earls for a' that.

III.

Yon see yon brawny, blustering sot,
Who swaggers, swears, and a' that,
And thinks, because his strong right arm
Might fell an ox and a' that,
That he's as noble, man for man,
As duke or lord, and a' that:
He's but a brute, beyond dispute,
And not for a' that.

IV.

A man may own a large estate,
Have palace, park, and a' that,
And not for birth, but honest worth,
Be thrice a man for a' that;
And Donald herding on the muir,
Who heats his wife, and a' that,
Be nothing but a rascal boor,
Nor half a man for a' that.

V.

It comes to this, dear Robert Burns—
The truth is old, and a' that,
"The rank is but the guinea's stamp,
The man's the gold, for a' that."
And though you'd put the minted mark
On copper, brass, and a' that—
The lie is gross, the cheat is plain,
And will not pass for a' that.

VI.

For a' that, and a' that,
'Tis soul and heart and a' that,
That makes the king a gentleman,
And not his crown and a' that.
And man with man, if rich or poor,
The best is he, for a' that,
Who stands erect in self-respect,
And acts the man for a' that.

[Charles Mackay, in "Blackwood's Magazine."

OPPORTUNE APPEARANCE OF OLD NICK.—Lorenzo Dow being belated one night in his travels, unceremoniously entered an out-of-the-way house and requested lodgings. The woman of the house objected, alledging that her only spare room was occupied by a friend of her husband. But Lorenzo insisted, and she at length consented—immediately fastening, against further unwelcome visitors, the only outside door of the house. Soon a loud knocking was heard. It was her husband unexpectedly returned. Unable to leave the house, and fearing the husband in his drunkenness, the friend, to conceal himself, jumped into a large box conveniently at hand, and hastily covered himself with the hatchelings of flax it contained, by which time the wife had unfastened the door and admitted her husband. Having spent the evening, as usual, at the tavern, he was just tipsy enough to be both boisterous and courageous. He soon made the acquaintance of Lorenzo, whom he had heard much of, but had never seen. He had been told that he could raise the devil, and insisted upon his immediately doing so—not that he believed in any, but, if there was any, he wanted to see him. In vain Lorenzo objected, protesting his unwillingness and the danger attending it, etc.; but the more than half-drunken husband insisted. At last said Lorenzo, "If you are determined to see him, open the door, put out the light, and stand out of his way, or he may take you with him; for, when he comes, it will be in flames of fire, and I warn you of the consequences." Lighting a bunch of matches, that there might be the greater smell of brimstone, and muttering over a few unintelligible sentences, Lorenzo set fire to the hatchelings, and cried out, "Come forth, thou evil one, and be gone forever!" when out sprang the man, completely enveloped in flames, and put for the open door, leaving the house with a most unearthly yell. To his dying day the husband was ready to testify that Lorenzo not only could, but did raise the devil, for he had seen and smelled him.

WORKING OUT.—An unwashed street boy, being asked what made him so dirty, his reply was: "I was made as they tell me, of the dust of the ground, and I reckon it is just working out."

"LA FEMME."

FROM THE FRENCH OF M. MICHELET.

BY "BRET," THE CALIFORNIAN'S CONDENSED NOVELIST.

WOMEN AS AN INSTITUTION.

"IF it were not for women, few of us would at present be in existence." This is the remark of a cautious and discreet writer. He was also sagacious and intelligent.

Woman! Look upon her and admire her. Gaze upon her and love her. If she wishes to embrace you, permit her. Remember she is weak and you are strong.

But don't treat her unkindly. Don't make love to another woman before her face, even if she be your wife. Don't do it. Always be polite, even should she fancy somebody better than you.

If your mother, my dear Amadis, had not fancied your father better than somebody, you might have been that somebody's son. Consider this. Always be a philosopher, even about women.

Few men understand women. Frenchmen perhaps better than any one else. I am a Frenchman.

II.—THE INFANT.

SHE is a child—a little thing—an infant.

She has a mother and father. Let us suppose, for example, they are married. Let us be moral if we cannot be happy and free. They are married—perhaps—they love one another—who knows?

But she knows nothing of this; she is an infant—a small thing—a trifle!

She is not lovely at first. It is cruel, perhaps—but she is red—and positively ugly. She feels this keenly, and cries. She weeps Ah, my God! how she weeps! Her cries and lamentations now are really distressing.

Tears stream from her in floods. She feels deeply and copiously like M. Alphonse de Lamartine in his Confessions.

If you are her mother, Madame, you will fancy worms; you will examine her linen for pins and what not. Ah, hypocrite! you, even you, misunderstand her.

Yet she has charming natural impulses. See how she tosses her dimpled arms. She looks longingly at her mother. She has a language of her own. She says "goo goo," and "ga ga."

She demands something—this infant!

She is faint, poor thing. She famishes. She wishes to be restored. Restore her, Mother!

It is the first duty of a mother to restore her child!

III.—THE DOLL.

SHE is hardly able to walk—yet she already totters under the weight of a doll.

It is a charming and elegant affair. It has pink cheeks and purple-black hair. She prefers brunettes, for she has already, with the quick knowledge of a French infant, perceived she is a blonde and that her doll cannot rival her. Mon Dieu, how touching. Happy child. She spends hours in preparing its toilette. She begins to show her taste in the exquisite details of its dress. She loves it madly, devotedly. She will prefer it to bon bons. She already anticipates the wealth of love she will hereafter pour out on her lover, her mother, her father, and finally perhaps her husband.

This is the time the anxious parent will guide these first outpourings. She will read her extracts from Michelet's L'Amour, Rosseau's Heloise, and the Revue des deux Mondes.

IV.—THE MUD PIE.

SHE was in tears to-day.

She had stolen away from her bonne and was with some rustic infants. They had noses in the air, and large, coarse hands and feet.

They had seated themselves around a pool in the road, and were fashioning fantastic shapes in the clayey soil with their hands. Her throat swelled and her eyes sparkled with delight as, for the first time, her soft palms touch the plastic mud. She made a graceful and lovely pie. She stuffed it with stones for almonds and plums. She forgot everything. It was being baked in the solar rays, when Madame came and took her away.

She weeps. It is night, and she is weeping still.

V.—HER FIRST LOVE.

SHE no longer doubts her beauty. She is loved.

She saw him secretly. He is vivacious and sprightly. He is famous. He has already had an affair with Finfin, the fille de chambre, and poor Finfin is desolate. He is noble. She knows he is the son of Madame la Baronne Conturiere. She adores him.

She affects not to notice him. Poor little thing! Hippolyte is distracted—annihilated—inconsolable and charming.

She admires his boots, his cravat, his little gloves—his exquisite pantaloons—his coat, his cane.

She offers to run away with him. He is transported, but magnanimous. He is wearied, perhaps. She sees him the next day offering flowers to the daughter of Madame la Comtesse Blanchisseuse.

She is again in tears.

She reads Paul et Virginie. She is secretly transported. When she reads how that exemplary young woman laid down her life rather than appear en dishabille to her lover, she weeps again. Tasteful and virtuous Bernardine de St. Pierre! —the daughters of France admire you!

All this time her doll is headless in the cabinet. The mud pie is broken on the road.

VI.—THE WIFE.

SHE is tired of loving, and she marries.

Her mother thinks it, on the whole, the best thing. As the day approaches, she is found frequently in tears. Her mother will not permit the affianced one to see her, and he makes several attempts to commit suicide.

But something happens. Perhaps it is winter, and the water is cold. Perhaps there are not enough people present to witness his heroism.

In this way her future husband is spared to her. The ways of Providence are indeed mysterious.

At this time her mother will comfort her. She will offer philosophy. She will tell her she was married herself.

But what is this new and ravishing delight that breaks upon her? The toilette and wedding clothes! She is in a new sphere.

She makes out a list in her own charming writing. Here it is. Let every mother heed it.*

* * * * * * *
* * * * * * *

She is married. On the day after, she meets her old lover, Hippolyte. He is again transported.

VII.—HER OLD AGE.

A Frenchwoman never grows old.

THE END.

*The delicate reader will appreciate the omission of certain articles for which English synonyms are forbidden.

MY FIRST VISIT.

A CHAPTER OF ACCIDENTS.

I WAS fifteen years old, very shy, and rather sentimental. I had been brought up in the strictest seclusion in my father's country parsonage, and all my mother's time and care had been bestowed upon me, her only child.

I need hardly say I had never been from home, and had never even contemplated the horrors of such a possibility. My dismay, therefore, may be better imagined than described, when one morning after breakfast, just as I was running off to my poultry-yard, my mother called me back, saying that she and my father wished to speak to me. I couldn't help feeling guilty, and very conscious of the fact that Lalla Rookh was at that moment hidden under my mattress. Was it possible that mamma had seen its circulating library cover peeping out? My heart beat fast, and my face was very red, while I stood to hear what she had to say.

"My dear Clara" (of course my name was Clara, and I wore curls,) "my dear Clara, your father and I have thought it best to accept for you an invitation to spend a day and a night at your godfather's, Sir Thomas Bullyon, at Golding Park. How shall you like it?"

I felt that this was "out of the frying-pan into the fire." I had much rather that they should have found Lalla Rookh. I had a horror of strange faces, even when papa and mamma were present to give me the support of their countenance. But the idea of being among strangers, alone, in a great grand house, and for a whole day and night, was insupportable. I wept, and bewailed, and entreated, in what I considered the most moving terms, such as ought to have melted a heart of stone. But in vain! My parents were, for once, inexorable, and I was to go.

I felt it was adding insult to injury when I was forced to assist in the preparations for my visit. The village dressmaker was called in, and set to work at once to make me a white frock, while my dear, unselfish mother began herself to cut up her only silk dress to make me another. I was touched at this, and tried to help with a better grace, but it was dreary work, for every stitch seemed to bring me nearer to my misery.

How well I remember that white frock, and the way it was made! The dressmaker's fundamental rule evidently was that a dress should stick out everywhere. She called it "sitting nicely," I remember. It was anything but nice, as far as my own feelings and appearance were concerned, for I looked and moved like a hog in armor; added to which, it was so tight round the throat that I could not turn my head without turning my whole body. But I bore all this like a heroine, looking upon it as a very minor evil compared with what I was about to undergo.

At last the dreadful day dawned. I was not to go till the afternoon, Lady Bullyon having promised mamma to send the carriage for me, and I was expected to reach the park, only twelve miles distant, in time for dinner. My dear mother spent the whole morning in trying to reason me out of my fears, and impressing upon me the advantage it might be to me in after life, should I secure the friendship of two such rich and influential persons. The idea of the riches and grandeur, however, only frightened me the more, and the sight of the carriage, with its powdered coachman and footman, its coat of arms, and pair of prancing bays, quite overcame me. I couldn't speak, I couldn't even cry, when I said good-by to mamma. I was the personification of stony, speechless misery. I had a certain conviction that the coachman and footman were laughing at me, as I dare say they were, for in my nervous haste and flurry I had missed my footing on the carriage step, had fallen forward on my face, and muddied my nose, which was now very red with agitation and friction combined.

I could not help enjoying my drive, and for a time forgetting my troubles, in admiration of the lovely scenery through which I was passing. But as I neared my journey's end my fears revived, and by the time we had passed through the great iron gates, and, driving up a beautiful avenue of chestnuts nearly a mile long, stopped at the ponderous door of a large stone built mansion, I was as bad as ever again. The deep tones of the bell resounded through the house, the door instantly opened as if by magic, the steps of the carriage were let down, and I alighted. Such was my humility, and so greatly was I impressed with the magnificence of all I saw, that, if I had had any voice left, I believe I should have apologized to the footman for the trouble I gave him in helping me out. I had a vague idea that perhaps Lady Bullyon would be in the hall to receive and welcome me. You see I had never been in a great house before, and was not up to those fashionable manners which disdain to "Welcome the coming, speed the parting guest."

So she was not there when I entered a fine hall, hung round with old portraits, banners, stags' heads, and other trophies of war and of the chase. "These are his ancestors and their spoils," I thought. "How delightful!" But I learned afterwards that the house belonged to an ancient but impoverished family. They had let it to Sir Thomas, a man without a grandfather, who had got his money by the manufacture of gold lace, and his baronetcy by a lucky casting vote at a ministerial crisis. This by the way. We will now return to my insignificant self, and my various sensations.

As I have said, I entered the hall with faltering steps, and, on looking round I beheld, instead of Lady Bullyon, and besides the footman who had opened the door, a most gentlemanly person, rather portly and rubicund, with silver hair, and in an irreproachable evening dress suit. Behind him stood a lovely cherub-like boy of ten years of age, attired in a suit of dark green velvet, with a profusion of silver ornaments. I immediately decided that the first individual must be Sir Thomas, and wondered why he did not come forward to shake hands with me, instead of standing there with every demonstration of extreme respect. It was not so easy to make up my mind about the little boy, but I knew Sir Thomas had lately been abroad, and I supposed therefore that this must be some young foreign prince, in the costume of his native country, who had returned to England with him on a visit. My astonishment was great, after arriving at all these satisfactory conclusions, to hear the supposed Sir Thomas address the young prince by the name of William, and desire him to call my lady's maid, an order which he immediately and meekly obeyed. The gentleman then turned respectfully to me with "My lady has gone to dress, Miss. The dinner will be served at seven o'clock, and it is now half-past six. Will you be pleased to walk up stairs." It was Sir Thomas' family (?) butler, and the young foreign prince was my lady's pet page! I shuddered as I thought what might have been the consequences of my mistake, and for once I felt thankful for the shyness which had prevented my introducing myself to my supposed host.

I proceeded slowly up the broad oak staircase, wondering much what would happen to me next. At the top I was met by a most elegant young lady, whose elaborate dress and fashionable air made me feel more dowdy and countrified than ever. I was on the look-out for fresh mistakes, however, and did not therefore suppose her to be anything but the lady's maid, as indeed she was. She conducted me to a large room, with a large bed, a large fire, everything, in short, on a gigantic scale except myself and my poor little trunk, which looked decidedly out of keeping in one corner. She then frightened me more than ever by offering her services to assist me in dressing, and as I dared not refuse, she opened my trunk and began to take out the various little newspaper parcels of brushes and combs, shoes, etc., all of which I had, in the absence of mind caused by my grief, packed on the top of the unfortunate white frock. I will not detail the mysteries and miseries of that toilet. Suffice it to say it was nearly over, I was duly arrayed in that wretched frock, and the maid was just tying my sash in an elaborate bow, when suddenly a dreadful sound in the hall below almost made me jump out of my skin. This sound was a sort of whizzing and grinding, accompanied by two or three heavy blows.

"Goodness! what's that?" I exclaimed, frightened out of my shyness, and speaking for the first time. "Something dreadful is happening, some one is being killed!" "It is the gong for dinner, miss," was the calm reply, with ever so slight a smile. "You must make haste down, if you please."

The bare idea of being late for dinner was so awful that, without waiting to blush at this my second blunder, I flew down the stairs. But, alas! I was unaccustomed to the slippery, polished oak. I lost my footing and came tumbling into the hall with a loud crash, just as the drawing-room doors were thrown open and Sir Thomas and Lady Bullyon appeared. Could anything have been more unlucky? I jumped up in a moment, before Lady Bullyon, who ran forward, could reach me; and though I was bruised and shaken from head to foot, I strenuously denied being in the least hurt, and refused all the remedies which were kindly pressed on me by my host and hostess, whom I did not dare to look at. What I minded more, far more than the bruises, was that those horrid footmen were all standing by to witness this my second downfall, and I saw them laugh this time.

As Sir Thomas and Lady Bullyon preceded me into the dining room, I ventured to inspect them, and saw that they put all their finery on their servants' backs, and not on their own. They were both little and shabby-looking: my lady was even shorter than I was, and wore an old black satin dress, instead of the gorgeous attire in which I had pictured her to myself. This comforted and reassured me somewhat, and as I was very hungry I began to hope that dinner might be a less awful business than I had anticipated. But the size of the room, the quantity of plate, and, above all, those magnificent footmen with the gentlemanly butler at their head, undid all the good effects produced by the homeliness of my entertainers' appearance, and I sat down to table with renewed trepidation.

I got through the soup and fish pretty well, though without daring to speak or look up. Sir Thomas and Lady Bullyon kindly left me alone and talked to each other till dinner was half over. Then Lady Bullyon turned to me and made some kind inquiries after mamma. Unfortunately I had just at this moment put a very hot piece of potato into my mouth. My contortions in endeavoring to dispose of it with the smallest amount of personal inconvenience, and yet in time to answer Lady Bullyon's question, must have been truly ludicrous, and I had the mortification of seeing all the servants turn away their heads to hide their merriment, while even the heads of the house could not repress a smile. I need hardly say that the question about mamma was never answered, and that I was mute and more than miserable for the rest of that long dinner.

I heard Lady Bullyon whisper to Sir Thomas, as we passed out of the dining-room, "How painfully shy," which remark in no way tended to restore my composure. But she made the kindest efforts when we were in the drawing-room to draw me out, and I was just beginning to feel more at home, when tea-time brought in Sir Thomas, with a request for some music. Now I was extremely fond of playing, and knew I could perform very creditably, but the idea of any other audience than my father and mother was too much. I was too frightened to refuse, and far too frightened to play. I only succeeded in sitting down to the piano, putting my hands before my face, and bursting into tears.

"Poor child!" said Lady Bullyon; "we won't tease her any more;" and, coming up to me, she kindly led me to a distant sofa, gave me a book, and told me to try and fancy myself at home. I couldn't quite do that, but I managed to amuse myself tolerably till bed-time, when, after a kind good-night, I went up to my room, and found, to my horror, that the lady's-maid was witing there to undress me. "Am I never to be let alone?" I thought. But I had to submit to her fingers and her tongue, which latter never stopped, to make up for the silence of mine, I suppose. Among other things she particularly cautioned me not to mistake a rope, that hung beside a closet door, for a bell-pull. I inquired why? "Oh! miss, don't you know?" she said, evidently delighted at the notion that she was about to astonish me by what she had to tell. "Why, miss, the people that lived here before had a raving mad uncle with a great deal of money, and this was his room, miss, where he lived with his keeper. That closet, miss, is a shower-bath, with a great, big cistern over it, big enough to drown you and me; and when he was more than common fractious, his keeper used to lock him in there (you see the key is on the outside) and pull that rope, which let all the water down on his poor old head till he was half dead. One day, when they went to take him out he was quite dead, and his family got all the money. Which 'ill-gotten gains never prosper,' as you've doubtless heard, miss; and it didn't do them much good, seeing they haven't a penny now, owing to spending it all, and was obliged to let this house to Sir Thomas, and hide their heads in foreign parts. They do say, miss, that the poor old gentleman may often be seen at night in his shower-bath, beweeping and bewailing the cruelty of those that killed him, which they did for certain. Good night, miss, and I hope you may sleep comfortable."

She had certainly not taken the best means to insure that happy result; but though I was so shy, I was not in the least nervous about those sort of things, and consequently did not trouble myself much about her parting words. I had to turn my whole thoughts and energies to the consideration of an important question, viz., how I was to get into bed! It was piled up so high, that any ordinary means would have been wholly inadequate. The chairs were all so large and heavy (I suppose to prevent the mad old gentleman throwing them at his keeper,) that I found it quite impossible to lift one to the bedside, and help myself up that way. The only plan was to take a run and a jump, and, after many failures, I at length alighted on the top of this mountain of feather beds. There I lay for some time, watching the flickering of the fire on the ceiling, thinking of home, and of my different misadventures since I had left it so short a time ago. The house had become quite quiet every one must have been in bed, when all at once an odd fancy seized me to look into the shower-bath and see what sort of a place it was. I fought against the idea for some time, but, finding it kept me awake, I thought it best to indulge it; and after much hesitation, and not a little laughing at myself for being so inquisitive, I descended carefully from the bed, and advanced on tip-toe towards the mysterious door.

I had already placed my hand on the handle, when I suddenly heard a slight noise within. My heart stood still. I thought for a moment, what if it should be the old madman's ghost?

But as quickly dismissing so absurd an idea, I remained perfectly still, holding my breath to listen. There! I heard it again, a low rustling, such as would be caused by a person breathing heavily in rather stiff clothes. I had no longer any doubt that some one was hidden there with an evil design. Quick as thought I turned the key so as to lock the door, and seizing the rope which hung close beside, I pulled it violently, at the same time screaming for help. A gasping, strangled shout came from within the closet, and then no sound was to be heard but my own screams and the steady down-pour of the water from the cistern. Soon footsteps came running from all directions; my door was opened, and a confused troop of servants, with Sir Thomas at their head, rushed in. But I still clung to the rope as if for my life, screaming, "Don't let him out! Don't let him out! He'll kill you!"

Sir Thomas, in the shortest of night-shirts, and the most wonderful night-cap, with a tassel at the top, stood motionless with astonishment, grasping in one hand a pair of trousers, and in the other an old scabbard without a sword. The servants, too, overcome with terror, did not stir beyond the door; and had not the water in the cistern failed at last, I know not how long we might all have remained in our respective positions. When nothing came of all my tugs at the rope but a few slow, heavy drops, I let go my hold, and gasped out to Sir Thomas, "He's in there; I'm sure of it. But you may open the door now: I don't think he can hurt you." They did open the door, and sure enough, there lay a half-drowned, fustian-clothed ruffian, whose bunch of skeleton keys, and other burglarious implements, sufficiently showed what he had come for. He was thrust into the strong room as soon as he had recovered his consciousness, which was not for some time, thanks to my exertions with the rope.

A guard was placed at the door, and he was left to his own meditations till he could be conveyed in the morning to the nearest magistrate, who would commit him to the county jail I was taken to Lady Bullyon's own bed, where, all my shyness having departed in the excitement of the moment, I answered all her questions, returned her kisses, and then fell into a dreamless slumber, from which I did not wake till a late hour on the following morning.

The hero of the shower-bath had been already carried off to prison when I at length awoke, but Lady Bullyon told me he had owned to having selected that place of concealment on account of the superstitious horror in which it was held by the servants, as was well known in the village. He had been watching his opportunity some time, and had made himself so well acquainted with the ways of the household and the interior of the house, that while the servants were at supper, and we were in the drawing-room, he quietly walked in at a side door, and went up stairs to the haunted closet. The arrival of so unimportant a person as myself, and the fact of my occupying that room, had not reached his ears, else he might probably have deferred the execution of his project till another night. As it was, he felt so secure of being uninterrupted, that without even locking himself in, he merely shut the door, leaving the key on the outside, and being tired, and the closet, or rather bath, being very roomy, he sat down on the floor to fill up the time by taking a nap. Thus he never heard me come to bed, nor the maid's conversation, nor indeed anything, till down came the water and roused him with a vengeance, only to deprive him of breath and consciousness almost immediately after. We afterwards heard that he was fully committed for trial at the next assizes, where he was condemned to penal servitude for seven years.

Sir Thomas and Lady Bullyon overwhelmed me with praises and thanks. They did not know how to make enough of me, and I was only afraid their gratitude might take the form of inviting me to stay longer. But I showed such evident uneasiness when they hinted at it, that they kindly let me go at the time agreed upon, not, however without many expressions of friendship, and many wishes that they might some day have an opportunity of doing me an essential service in their turn. I need not tell you of my dear mother's delight at hearing of my exploit. "Who knows what may come of it?" she said; and something substantial did come of it. When Sir Thomas died, some few years afterwards, his will was found to contain a bequest to me of £300 a year, "as a mark of gratitude for the important service she rendered me, and of admiration for her courage and presence of mind." Upon this £300 a year I live, retired and happy. I was too shy to marry, or even ever to be asked to marry, but I am not the less content on that account. Often when sitting alone with my cats and dogs in the winter evenings, and looking round on my many comforts, my memory carries me back to the various accidents and the happy results of My First Visit.

THE ASSASSINATION OF THE DUKE OF PARMA.

ONE day I had the honor to dine at the table of King Jerome (Bonaparte) at Quarto, near Florence. Some of the most eminent people of Tuscany were at the table; Prince Corsini, Don Nexi Corsini, his brother, and old Fossombroni; the latter is the same person Napoleon found Minister in Tuscany, and who so astonished him by the grandeur of his ideas. Napoleon said, as he left him, "He is a giant in a closet."

Prince Corsini was the grand-nephew of Pope Corsini—Lorenzo XII. He was an old man of seventy, very fond of dress, and painted his face just as our lorettes do. He was to be met every night in the streets of Florence, after the receptions and assemblies of the evening were ended, dressed in white duck or some light-colored cloth, a small blue coat with gilt buttons, a ribbon around his neck, and an enormous nosegay in his waistcoat. When he met any acquaintance, he drew down his straw hat towards the passer, as if he desired to conceal his face; but he hoped, if the latter met him the next day, he would be guilty of the amiable indiscretion of saying, "Where were you going, past one o'clock last night, with a nosegay in your waistcoat, Prince? Ah! I recognized you!"

The Prince would deny that he was the man, he would shake his head, and play the comedy of the discreet man. It was a curious study.

He was, notwithstanding all this, a man of talents. His brother was Minister of the Grand Duke, and Prince Corsini, as well as the Grand Duke, held the intellectual powers of his brother in the greatest contempt. Whenever the Grand Duke complained to him of the way in which political affairs were managed, the Prince would reply: "It is not astonishing, Highness, when you keep such a jackass as my brother, Don Neri, for your Minister.

So I was dining, as I have said, at King Jerome's table, with all these great dignitaries of the Tuscan Court, when Don Neri—who honored me with particular attention, which was all the more courteous on his part, as he held in his hands the Ministries of the Interior and of War—asked me, from the other end of the table: "Are you going to the Lucca Baths this year, M. Dumas?"

"Yes, I think so, your Excellency."

"If you do, you had better take care of yourself."

"Why so?"

"Because there is on the road between Lucca and the baths the boldest highwayman we have seen in Tuscany this many a year."

"Bah! what is his name?"

"Norcino."

"An admirable brigand's name."

"Would you believe, that rascal carries his impudence so far as to go to mass every Sunday in his village church?"

"Every Sunday?'

"He does n't miss one."

"Why don't you capture him, then?"

"'Tis impossible! The fellow is always armed."

This reply, in the mouth of a Minister of War, rather corroborated the opinion Prince Corsini expressed about his brother.

A short time afterwards we heard that the terrible Norcino was captured by the Duke of Lucca's carabineers. These carabineers formed a singular army at that epoch in Italy. It was composed solely of Corsicans who had killed a man at home, and who had instantly leaped into the great wake made by vessels plying from Bastia to Leghorn, to come to Lucca and enter the Duke's service.

I was well acquainted with the Duke of Lucca. He reigned under the title of Charles II., and was a man of great talents. His subjects would have been the happiest people on earth, if the taxes they paid could have proved sufficient for the expenses of the Duke. Unfortunately, he was a Bourbon of the Spanish race, and sustained the honor of his family by spending twice his revenue. One day I was still in bed, when the servant announced, not his Highness, Duke Charles II., but the Duke of Lucca. I put on slippered pantaloons and a dressing-gown, and ran to my drawing-room. I began to offer excuses.

He stopped me short, saying: "I have come to ask you to do me a favor. You have a right to receive me as you pleas."

I expressed to the Duke the delight it gave me to think I had it in my power to serve him.

"You are going to leave for France to-morrow?"

"Yes, your Highness."

"Then be so good as to take this portrait, and have it lithographed."

He gave me a water-color drawing, which represented the features of an old scholar, who was teaching him Sanscrit.

The Duke of Lucca was a man of fickle imagination, who often pursued for a fortnight studies which required whole years of persevering labor. Sanscrit was one of those studies.

I brought the portrait of the Duke's Sanscrit-Master to France with me. I carried it to the only man who could make a lithograph of the drawing, without losing its character—Amaury Duval. This was, I believe, in 1841. Amaury Duval was then at the commencement of his career, and even then he had the reputation of being one of M. Ingres' best pupils. I said to him: "What will you charge me, my dear friend, to make a lithograph of this portrait?"

"If it is for you, nothing. If it is for anybody else, twenty dollars." I drew forty dollars out of my pocket, saying, "My dear fellow, it is for the Duke of Lucca, and he is able to pay twice as much as a plain citizen."

Amaury Duval made a magnificent lithograph. I carried it to the Duke. He was delighted with it, and exclaimed it was altogether too cheap. He, nevertheless, did not offer to repay me. A month afterwards, I received a visit, not from the Duke of Lucca, but from his Minister of Foreign Affairs. He said to me: "M. Dumas, his Highness has charged me with the agreeable commission of announcing to you, he has made you a Grand Cross of the order of St. Louis of Lucca. He sends you the cross and the letters patent. As for the forty dollars, due as fees, he begs you will not think of them."

The Duke of Lucca had not dared to take out of his purse and pay me back in my hand the forty dollars, and he contrived this princely way of paying the debt he owed me.

[M. Dumas, on visiting the Duke, subsequently, met the young Prince, his son, twelve years of age.]

"Robert," said the Duke, "can't you bear witness to M. Dumas I read nothing but his works?"

"O yes, his works—and Paul de Kock's works, father."

"You saucy rogue!" exclaimed the Duke, laughing, and drawing from under his pillow the volume he had concealed. It was Paul de Kock's Sister Anne.

I was greatly astonished when I heard that this handsome, sprightly lad proved a tyrant when he became the Duke of Parma. Chance has enabled me to give details about his assassination which very few people have it in their power to give.

The little Duchy of Lucca was a real emerald set in the gold of Italy.

A singular peculiarity of its inhabitants is, that in general the same man does not speak five or six languages, but five or six men together speak each a different language. Half the inhabitants of Lucca are figure-mongers. Those poor creatures we meet in the streets carrying on their heads (which are protected by a pad) a board filled with all the Pagans and Christians who have ever lived are for the most part natives of Lucca.

I said to one of them, "I never see you sell any of your plaster figures; how do you manage to get your living?"

"O, sir, there are the accidents!"

"The accidents! what do you mean?"

"People break a great many of our plaster figures."

Of a truth this is the real profit of these people. People in a hurry jostle the poor figure-monger. Two or three statuettes lose their balance in consequence of the shock and come tumbling to the ground. They are shivered to atoms. The pedler begins to cry. A crowd collects. He is pitied, and murmurs are raised against the author of the mischief. He is in a hurry. He knows the value of time. He throws four or five pieces of silver to the poor pedler and passes on. This is the way they make their living.

These figure-mongers go all over the world—to France, England, Germany, Holland, Hungary, America, Oceanica, and even to China. They return stammering in broken accents the languages of all the countries they have visited. Hence it is that more languages are spoken in the Duchy of Lucca than in any other one place.

If one wishes to exasperate an inhabitant of this duchy, one has but to tell him, that, when Christopher Columbus landed for the first time in America, a native of Lucca was the first person he saw, and he came up to Columbus asking him if he did not want to buy statuettes of Ferdinand and Isabella.

About a quarter of the population of Lucca go to Corsica during harvest-tide. The Corsicans themselves are too lordly to reap. These laborers live on four cents a day, and return after harvest with thirty dollars in their pockets.

Meanwhile, the rest remain at home, and so carefully cultivate their singularly fertile soil, that they are able to raise three crops a year on it.

In going to visit the country house which my friend is repairing two miles from the Lucca Baths, I met a man employed by the day. He told us he had not for the last ten years spent more than four sous a day. He ate nothing but bread, and drank only water. Another man heard him boast of his frugality, and shrugged his shoulders. I questioned the latter. He spent six cents a day, and he had anchovies for dinner, and drank a glass of wine at each meal.

We went to-day to visit a village called Braga. It is situated on the summit of one of the spurs of the Apennines.

Braga was situated in the plain till 1300. When Castruccio Castrocciani—that petty tyrant to whom Machiavelli did the honor of writing his history—re-entered Lucca, and was made leader of the Ghibellines, he waged war on all the Guelph cities. Braga was then obliged to retreat before the conqueror (it was a Guelph city:) it climbed the mountain, and fortified itself on the summit. The church alone remained at the foot of the mountain, and indicates to travellers where old Braga stood.

We were on the theatre of Norcino's exploits. The conversation turned upon him. One of the persons present was the son of a miller, to whom Norcino had done a great service. After two bad harvests, this miller got behindhand in business. His landlord got impatient for his rent, and at last distrained. The rent due was $240. Bills were posted, advertising the sale of all the miller's property. The prayers of the miller, his wife and children, had all been in vain. The landlord was inexorable. He ordered the sale to be made without postponement The following day was appointed for the sale. The evening before the sale, a stranger presented himself at the mill, gave the miller $240, and bade him pay his landlord.

"The miller exclaimed: "But how can I repay you this money?"

The stranger replied, "Never mind that. I will repay myself. Take care to send a messenger to your landlord, to ask him to come and receive the money in person, and give you a receipt for it."

The landlord came, received the money, and gave a receipt in full to the miller. A hundred yards from the mill, Norcino lay in wait for him on his return, and, as he had said, he repaid himself. It is by actions like these that the Italian banditti secure inviolable retreats for themselves, when they are hunted.

The miller's son told us another anecdote of Norcino, which proved the famous bandit did not disdain to mix comedy and tragedy, like modern dramatists. The first time he was made prisoner, Norcino was carried to the Pescia jail. He succeeded in escaping from this prison by cutting a hole in the wall. As soon as the hole was cut, it became very important that he should be able to hide it from all eyes for a whole day. He asked the turnkey to give him a sheet of paper, a pen and an inkstand. The turnkey granted his request. He drew a vessel, about to sail, on the large sheet of paper, wrote under it, Domani parte—"It leaves to morrow," and pasted it over his hole. In good truth the vessel went next day, and Norcino with it!

I have spoken of the frugality of the people of Lucca. We had additional evidence of it at Braga. Signor Tulinucci told us that more than half the population lived on chestnuts, gathered from the chestnut-trees with which the mountains are covered. As soon as the chestnuts are gathered, they are dried and ground to flour. Each one secures his stock of bread for the year by picking up chestnuts. Everybody makes his own bread. It is made by mixing up chestnut flour and water, making it into cakes, which are cooked on stones heated in the fire. We ate some of these cakes; they are agreeable to the palate, but must be terribly heavy to the stomach.

As I returned from Braga to the Baths of Lucca, I saw hanging on the flanks of the mountain, from which the medicinal waters flow, the little castle of Lucca, where I went to thank Duke Charles Louis, and where he presented his son Charles III. to me. After the death of Napoleon's widow, Marie Louise, Charles Louis, Duke of Lucca, became Duke of Parma, in conformity with the stipulations of the Treaty of Vienna. At the end of two years, either from fatigue or political calculations, he abdicated in favor of his son, Charles III., the same sprightly boy who had denounced to me his father's sympathy for Paul de Kock's literature.

Charles III. (who married the daughter of the Duchess of Berri, and sister of the Count de Chambord) inherited not only his father's sympathy for Paul de Kock's literature, but, moreover, for Paul de Kock's heroines. He was the fondest man of grisettes that ever lived, and the place where he died showed he sometimes sought still less difficult amours.

This dissolute life, which held nothing as sacred, had raised up a great many enemies to the young Duke Charles III. of Parma. One of these enemies was both a political enemy and the brother of a sister injured by the Duke. This was too much! Armed with a sharp dagger, which is on my table as I write these lines, the murderer followed the Duke. The Duke entered a house adjoining a cafe. The murderer hid in the staircase, and lay there awaiting the Duke's departure. When the Duke came down stairs, the murderer told the Duke who he was, that the victim might know beyond doubt whose hand gave him the fatal blow. He then killed him with one stroke of the dagger, which was so well aimed that the Duke did not give a single cry, not one sigh, as he fell a corpse. The murderer then concealed his dagger (which he wished to preserve as a relic,) entered the cafe, ordered a half-cup of coffee, took up a newspaper and began to read.

Ten minutes afterwards screams were heard in the neighboring house. Somebody had discovered the Duke's body. The murderer waited in the cafe; he foresaw what was going to take place, and wished to free himself at once from the suspicions of the police. The cafe was surrounded and everybody in it was arrested and examined. He was arrested and examined with the others. Nobobody suspected the man who so quietly sipped his half-cup of coffee, and read his newspaper so attentively, as being the murderer. He was released.

A few days afterwards he went to the staircase where the murder was committed to get his dagger. He found it. He then went to London, and from London to the United States. He gave his dagger in London to a friend who did him an act of kindness, and who in dying bequeathed it to one of my friends.

One evening I was sitting in my carriage taking an ice at Imoda gate. A man of sixty years of age got on the steps of my carriage. I looked at him with astonishment.

He said, "Don't you recognize me?"

"No, sir, and I try in vain to recall your face to memory."

"I am ——, I was the Duke of Lucca."

Then he threw himself in my arms, saying, "You know they have assassinated my poor Charles?"

But of his lost duchy he did not say one word.—Alex. Dumas, in "Le Soleil."

THE SEA-SERPENT.

"I BELIEVE in the Great Sea-Serpent." Unconsciously, I uttered these words aloud, as I stood one night on the forecastle of an American clipper. We had just escaped from the China Sea, after sixteen days' hammering against head gales, and were gently gliding into the Pacific under a crowd of cotton canvas, which, in the full moonlight, almost pained the eye by its brightness. The deck was crowded with a strange, motley mass of human beings, the prevailing type of humanity being Chinese, for we had about six hundred Celestials on board, rushing to the El Dorado of California.

The sailors were men of all nations, and a vast variety of costume; many of them wore red shirts, thereby relieving the monotonous blue cotton of John Chinaman. I had wandered forward, and, finding myself alone on the forecastle, had been standing there, mayhap, half an hour, enjoying the rare luxury of solitude, and watching the porpoises darting backwards and forwards across our bows, as the noble old ship rose to each long smooth swell, and then made a stately bow towards the blue hillock, as it swept away from her.

It was a mild, peaceful night, and doubly delightful after the pitching and tossing, the jerking and groaning, we had undergone for a fortnight. My thoughts naturally reverted to the mysterious inhabitants of the element on the surface of which we were floating. What wonderful creatures might at that very moment be beneath our keel, perhaps never requiring, possibly unable, to reach the surface! The monsters which are revealed to us by the microscope may have mammoth relatives; the fantastic forms of fossil reptiles may be outdone by living creatures beneath us, and possibly in view of those playful, long-snouted porpoises beside me. Perhaps the sea-serpent; ah, the sea-serpent! Imagination at once mounted on stilts; memory brought before me the various accounts of its appearance—accounts so numerous, so full in detail, attested by so many witnesses, and agreeing in the main so thoroughly with each other, that it seems impossible to discredit them. The objection raised by Professor Owen, that none of its bones have been found, weighs little against the positive evidence of the captain and officers of a British man-of-war, so lately as 1848, that they passed within one hundred yards of a snake which they estimated to show sixty feet of his body above water, and to have probably forty feet more underneath.

That sea-snakes of small size do exist cannot be questioned. A few miles off the coast of Borneo, I have passed many hundreds of them on the surface of the smooth sea, measuring about eighteen inches or two feet in length, and of a dark color, barred with yellow. I recollected what a stampede took place one night on board a ship lying in the Hooghly, opposite Calcutta, when the forecastle was taken charge of by a six-foot snake, which had crawled up the chain cable and through the hawsepipe.

Turning these matters over in my mind as I stood alone in the bows of the ship, the words I have commenced this paper with involuntarily found utterance: "I believe in the Great Sea-Serpent."

"So do I, sir," came back to me like an echo. The voice came from near my feet, and, looking closely at the place, I found an old-salt coiled up on the heel of the cathead, but hidden from me before by the black shadow of the jib. The man was quite a character on board, singular in appearance and manner, rough and surly with strangers, but improving on acquaintance. He was a thorough seaman, and had already proved himself one of the most reliable men on board for any service requiring courage and judgment. Our crew had found nicknames for each other, and I had learned to distinguish Irish Mike, Soldier Harry, and One-eyed Sam. The old sailor beside me was known by the sobriquet of Jake the Whaler. He spoke in such a marked and earnest tone, that it roused my curiosity. "Why do you believe in the great sea-snake; have you ever seen him, Jake?"

"I have, sir," said Jake.

The tone and look of the old man were like those wherewith the Ancient Mariner chilled the blood of the wedding-guest. Not another word passed for several minutes; Jake seemed in a revery, and, for myself, I was wondering whether the old man was mad, for I could not doubt his being thoroughly in earnest. That voice and look could not have been assumed by the best actor that ever wore buskin. After a pause, during which I lighted my pipe and sat down on the anchor-stock, I said: "Come, Jake, tell me all about it; when did it happen, and where."

"I'll never tell it now, sir," said he; "I can't bear to be laughed at, and told that it was all delirium and fever. For two years past, I haven't even heard the name of the sea-serpent; though day and night I think of him, and shall while I live."

"But, Jake," said I, "you need not fear that I shall laugh at anything told in earnest; and of all things in the world I should like a yarn about the sea-serpent."

"Don't call it a yarn, sir," said Jake; 'tis too true and too horrible to be called a yarn."

"Fok'sle there," hailed the mate from the waist of the ship.

"Ay, ay, sir, "answered my companion. "Eight bells."

As the eight measured strokes were given, and the sweet sharp sound filled the air followed by the boatswain's hoarse voice, I felt that all chance of hearing Jake's story for that night was over, and strolled back to the poop, had my nightly glass of grog, and turned in, determined to find an early opportunity of learning the old sailor's secret.

Early next morning, I came on deck, and found a strange and menacing change of weather had taken place. The wind had died away, and the ship pitched uneasily in a heavy, confused swell. A heavy bank of clouds was rising in the south-west, illuminated every few moments by vivid flashes of lightning. The barometer had been gradually falling, and the men were engaged taking in the light sails. Fitful puffs of wind sang through the rigging, and the sails alternately thrashed back on the masts, and then tugged forward, straining to their tackle like chained fiends. The main-course was now reefed, and the topsail brailed up sharp, looking like a row of great bladders, as it blew out from the yard. I glanced to windward, and saw the rapidly advancing bank of cloud was edged with white, where the coming blast ploughed up the sea in its course.

"Send another hand to the wheel, Mr. Blow," shouted the captain.

The words had scarcely left his lips when the gale struck us, and the ship heeled over till the water rushed in at the ports, and everything loose on deck flew into the lee-scuppers. The halliards of the upper topsail yards were let go, but, while the yards were coming down, the foresail tore adrift, split into long streamers, which fluttered out, flapping and cracking like gigantic stockwhips, till they were borne off by the gale. The ship righted and gained way at the same moment, and we flew through the water with the wind on our quarter.

For eleven days and nights the weather never moderated, and we ran before the gale at a terrific rate of speed, crossing the North Pacific in as short time as it had ever been done by a sailing vessel. There was but little chance of hearing Jake's yarn during this time, but I kept the matter in my mind, and when at last the gale ceased, and we were no longer rushing through the screaming foam pursued by great, green mountains with threatening crests, but calmly gliding towards the golden land, I got the old sailor to unburden his mind to me, and shall now try to give an accurate version of his story, though I cannot follow his exact words.

"'Tis eight years, sir," said he, "since I shipped aboard the brig Mermaid, bound from Liverpool to the west coast of Africa on a palm-oil voyage. She was a poor craft and we had a bad set on board of her. The skipper spent most of the time he was sober in tormenting the cabin-boy, but, after the poor lad was lost overboard—most of us thought he jumped overboard to escape his tyrant—the captain was seldom off his sofa, where he lay swigging rum and swearing at the steward. The mate had to navigate the brig, and he was such a stupid, thick-headed fellow, that it was little wonder we ran off our course, and made the African coast a little below Cape Blanco, and far to the northward of where we ought to have been. Our water had fallen very short, and the mate coasted along for some miles till we found a small bay, and, after considerable search, discovered a stream from which we could fill our casks. He brought the brig to anchor about a mile from the coast—the breeze was very light, and sea almost calm.

"The next day we were busy getting water, but we made slow work of it, as the small stream was nearly dry. The mate didn't much like stopping where we were, so close to the shore, but he had no choice, for it fell dead calm, and kept so for a whole week. It was on the evening of the third day after anchoring that the captain came on deck and sat down on the break of the poop, smoking his pipe. He was almost sober, and had a quieter way with him than usual, but suddenly he dropped his pipe, and gave two or three wild shrieks, like a frightened woman. The mate ran to him, and asked what was the matter.

"'Look there, look there!' he said, pointing to the water, about a boat's length from the brig.

"I looked at the place, and saw a queer swirl on the surface, and the stain of blood, just as if a whale had been lanced and sounded.

"'There was a big shark there,' says the skipper, his eyes staring, and trembling all over; 'there was a big shark there, lying quiet on the surface, and suddenly a great pair of jaws opened and seemed to swallow him as you might swallow a shrimp.'

"'Only another shark falling out of him, captain,' said the mate; 'I've often seen them bite each other.'

"The skipper called out for rum, and lay down on the deck, shaking as if he had the ague. The mate looked at me, shook his head, and said 'Gone mad at last;' and I certainly thought that liquor had turned the captain's brain. We soon learned what good reason he had for his terror.

"It was not more than an hour afterwards that he rose alongside, and with his head as high as our mainyard, looked down on the deck, opening and shutting that horrible mouth the skipper had first seen."

"What rose alongside, Jake?" said I.

"The Sea-Serpent," said Jake, in the solemn, earnest tones he had employed when speaking to me first on the subject.

I had the conviction that the man was in earnest. "Well," said I, "tell me all about it; and first, what length and thickness might he have been?"

"Judging by the length of our brig, sir, I think he must have been good two hundred feet, and he looked more like a monstrous conger-eel than anything else I can think of. His body was as thick as a cart-horse, and his head was flat like an eel's, and a couple of fathoms long. He had great gills, too, like an eel. His eyes were very big and bright; and when he lifted his head, opening and shutting those frightful jaws, as he had a habit of doing every few seconds, he was the most awful sight you can fancy. Some of the men said they saw his teeth, and that he had a double row like a shark, but I can't say that I saw them myself. It was his eyes, sir—his eyes I was always looking at, and always with a fear that I should find them looking right at me. His skin was dark and glossy, like the skin of a whale—I didn't see any hair anywhere about him; and when we afterwards saw him swimming about, he wriggled through the water eel-fashion; and you could see that the dark color of the back got gradually lighter on the sides, and the belly was nearly white. But those matters I noticed afterwards, for at the time I speak of, when he rose alongside, and stared down on our decks, as I've told you, I was sitting on the deck cleaning some brass work, and when I looked up and saw that dreadful head, I just sat where I was, and stared at him with my mouth open, till he sank down gently out of sight.

"My head felt dizzy and my eyes dim for half a minute, and then I heard the captain howling, and saw that he was lying on the deck flat on his face. The mate and myself lifted him up, but he kept shrieking, and wouldn't open his eyes; so we carried him below, and laid him on the sofa. On the cabin table was the captain's case-bottle of rum, and the mate filled himself a full glass, and drank it off; then he filled a glass for me, but his hand shook so that good part of it was spilled. When I went on deck again, I found that the men had shut themselves up in the forecastle, in spite of the heat, and two of them, who had been ill with coast-fever for some days, were now quite out of their senses. Well, sir, that night the steward got so frightened by what he had seen, and by the horrible yells of the skipper, that he went forward amongst the men, taking a small keg of rum with him; and the hands were soon all drunk, and fighting among each other like devils. The mate and myself took it in turns to mind the skipper; and about daylight I was wakened from a short snooze by a sudden quiet coming over the ship, and there was the captain quite dead, his chin fallen, and his eyes wide open. The same afternoon, the two men who had been ill of coast-fever died, and there were three others in their berths raving. Twice that day we saw the great snake—once about a mile from us, and the next time some six miles out to seaward, and we hoped that he had left us altogether; but the next day he rose about two hundred yards form our starboard beam, and moved his head about as he had done at first.

"Eight times in all we saw him, sir; and once the steward, who was wild with drink, got the captain's gun out, and would have fired at him, but the mate took it out of his hands. On the seventh day from the time we came to anchor, the weather suddenly changed, and a heavy tornado came on, and blew us right out to sea. We lost most of our spars, being so short-handed; and as soon as the gale moderated, we hove overboard the captain and four of the hands who had died in that bay, but whom we had been afraid to bury before, lest the snake might take a fancy for human flesh. At last, we reached Sierra Leone, nearly dismasted, and with only three hands on board fit for duty. We got help from another vessel before we could bring the ship to anchor; and after that I could remember nothing, till I found myself recovering from fever in the Sierra Leone hospital, my head shaved, and my limbs as weak as a child's.

"The brig had left the port with a new crew, and the few survivors of her former crew had returned to England in another ship. They laughed at me when I told them about what we had seen and gone through; they told me it was only my dreams when I had brain fever. I wish I could have thought so, sir; for it was all too true—too true."

Again the sharp, sweet sound of the ship's bell, again the hoarse call of the watch, and old Jake the Whaler and I parted company.—Chambers' Journal.

ABOUT PIANOFORTES.

"PIANOFORTES, sir! stuff, sir!" said my uncle: "the most abominable things ever invented. Girls do nothing in these days but strum on those confounded pianofortes. When I was a young man they used to be taugbt sewing and cooking; they didn't waste their time over trashy novels, and love songs, and pianos; but now, sir, they're not content with the occupations of sensible women, they must needs make fools of themselves, and ruin the patience and digestion of their fellow-creatures into the bargain. If I attempt to go to sleep after dinner, that pianoforte begins upstairs witb tbe 'Dead March' in Saul, or an imitation of the bagpipes; and when I complain, I am told that sleep after dinner is not good for me. In the morning, sir, that is to say when your intended wife is staying in the house, I am awakened by scales before breakfast. If I go to the seaside for peace and quiet, I am driven out of the house by pianos on botb sides; and if I go out to dinner, the men hurry over their wine and get upstairs to the women, who squall and bang the piano for the remainder of the evening. You tell me you are going to be married, sir; I am glad to hear it. You say that Emily plays; I am sorry for it. You say she'll want a new piano for her new house; I've no doubt of it. But if you suppose for one moment I am going to indulge idleness by encouraging the manufacture of those abominable instruments, you're mistaken, sir!" And so saying, my uncle took out his yellow silk bandana, threw it over his face, and leaning in his arm-chair, was soon asleep.

My uncle was the kindest-hearted of men, but this was his peculiar method of expressing himself. Emily certainly wanted a new piano, and we both thought the uncle might give us one; nor was I seriously discouraged at tbe manner in which he took my broad hint to that effect. "Omnia vincit amor," said I; and I was not far wrong, as the event proved, for it appeared that Emily knew a trick worth two of mine. I was just rising to leave tbe room, when I heard a soft, well-known step outside; the door gently opened, and Emily herself peeped in.

In another minute we had both passed out of the dining-room window on to tbe lawn. A spreading cedar stood black against the sky, and the first stars seemed to hang like pale gems amongst its branches. After a few turns we came in. My uncle had a curious objection to finding himself alone when he awoke. He liked to believe that he never exceeded his forty winks, and I used to humor him in this harmless fancy by generally appearing innocently in the room about the time he woke up, as though I had never left it. Much to our relief, we found him still asleep. Tbere was an Indian sofa by tbe window. We sat down and continued our conversation in low tones.

"And now talk sensibly," said Emily, settling herself very demurely with her hands before ber. (It was quite clear there was to be no more nonsense.) "You promised to tell me what you had been writing about the pianoforte." And so whatever sentiment there may bave been in the garden was brought to an end; and owning her gentle power to control and regulate my pulses—as far as an instrument owns tbe touch of a cunning artist—I drew one or two loose notes out of my pocket, and collecting my wandering thoughts, began:

"Before tbe Pianoforte came the Harpsichord, and before the Harpsichord came the Spinet, and before the Spinet came the Virginal, and before the Virginal came the Clavichord and Monocbord, before these the Clavicytherium, before that the Citole, before that the Dulcimer and Psaltery, and before these the Egyptian, Grecian, and Roman harps, and lyres innumerable."

"But," said Emily, "you've already got right away from tbe pianoforte."

"Into the remotest ages of antiquity, my love; it's necessary, you know, in treating a subject philosophically; but where would you like me to begin in tbe series?"

"What's the citole?" said Emily; "and what has the lyre and harp got to do with any of them?"

"Ah, I see, I must begin at the beginning. Some of the harps of antiquity were struck witb a quill or 'plectrum'—we know very little about them except that some were round and some square, some with three corners, some with more, some had ten strings, some thirteen; and modifications of these varieties formed tbe staple of stringed instruments in the middle ages. The middle ages tben bad harps of all kinds, and out of the barps grew the psaltery, the dulcimer, and citole. The Psaltery* was a box with metal strings stretched over it; it was plucked with a quill. The Dulcimer† was also a box with strings stretched over it; but it was struck with two crooked sticks. The Citole, or 'little chest,' was another box with strings stretched over it; but it was played with the fingers. And now roll all tbese into one, and you get the first glimmering notion or embryo of a piano. A piano has three fundamental ideas—Percussion (hammer,) Vibration on sonorous box (sounding-board,) and Finger touch through mechanical action (keyboard) From the dulcimer, sometimes called hacbret, or hack-board, (alas, how many young ladies go back to tbe dark ages and turn their pianos into hack-boards!)—from the dulcimer, I was observing, you get percussion with a hammer, and from all three you get the sonorous box, or sounding-board; but no one bad yet thought of that crowning glory—that now at length, so perfect and subtle a minister of touch, the keyboard. As early as the eleventh century the keyboard was applied to the organ, and some time afterwards an unknown Italian (perhaps Guido—not the painter, my dear) adapted it to stringed instruments, and hence arose the Clavicytherium or Keyed-lyre. For many reasons the Clavicytherium was not extensively popular, and for centuries after we read that at the feasts there was 'Cytolyng and eke harping, y^e lydle dovcemere, y^e psaltery and voices sweet as bell.' But little mention is made of the Clavicytherium, the 'dark horse' which was, after all, to be the winner. The fact is, in those days people progressed by moving one step forwards and two backwards: e. g., the Clavicytherium was fitted with catgut strings and plucked with quills, called jacks; and so, incredible, as it may seem, the instrument, in gaining a keyboard, actually lost its metal strings and the percussion touch! The construction of the Clavicytherium was coarse and simple to a fault. I have no doubt that, like our first harmoniums, it was always getting out of order—keys sticking, catgut snapping, and was, altogether, much less manageable and portable than hack-boards and citoles.

"The Clavichord* (1500) was a real advance; it was in most respects like the Clavicytherium, with the restoration of metal strings and the addition of that sine qua non of all harmony—the damper. The damper, as every one knows, is a piece of cloth which descends upon the strings after they have been struck, to check the vibration and prevent the sounds running into one another.

"The Clavicymbal differed only from the Clavichord in shape; it bore the same relation to the Clavichord that a small squre piano does to an upright semi-grand.

"With the Clavichord and Clavicymbal we enter civilized regions; instead of having to fall back upon unknown dulcimer players, copied from old manuscripts, and ladies out of stained windows with citoles on their laps, we have tbe solemn figure of old Sebastian Bach, with his neat periwig and silk stockings, thrumming those wonderfully melodious jigs and sarabands on his favorite instrument the clavichord. 'I find it,' he says, 'capable of expressing the most refined thoughts. I do not believe it possible to produce from any harpsichord or pianoforte (i. e., a pianoforte of the Bach period) such a variety in the gradations of tone as upon this instrument, which, I allow, is poor in quality and small in scale, but extremely flexible.' In 1772 Dr. Burney visited C. P. E. Bach, and heard him play. 'M. Bach,' he writes, 'was so obliging as to sit down to his Silberman clavichord, on which he played three or four of his choicest compositions In the pathetic and slow movements, whenever he had a long note, he absolutely contrived to produce from his instrument a cry of sorrow or compluint, such as can only be effected on the clavichord, and perhaps by himself.'

"The Virginal and Spinet were still nearer approaches to the pianoforte; they were an improved and more expensive kind of clavichord; they were much in vogue towards the end of tbe sixteenth century, and were found chiefly in the Elizabethan boudoirs of the fine ladies of that stirring and romantic epoch. Here, for instance, is a description of Mary Queen of Scots' virginal. It was made of oak, inlaid with cedar, and richly ornamented with gold; the cover and sides were beautifully painted with figures of birds, flowers and leaves, and the colors are still bright. On the lid is a grand procession of warriors, whom a bevy of fair dames are propitiating by presents of wine and fruit."

"Why was it called a virginal?" here interposed my fair listener.

"Some think virginal refers to Elizabeth, the virgin queen. Dr. Johnson says it was a compliment to young ladies in general, who all liked to strum on the virginal. But another writer, with better judgment, reminds us how in the pleasant twilights of convents and old halls it served to lead sweet voices singing hymns to the Virgin. The very sound of the word virginal reminds me of St. Cecilia sitting, as Rapbael bas painted her, in a general atmosphere of music, with angels listening; or else the light must fall through stained glass upon old impanelled wainscots of dark oak, or upon purple velvet cushions and rich tapestry. And there, in some retired nook of an ancient palace, at sunset, my love doth sit, saith Spenser,

'Playing alone, careless, on her heavenlie virginals.'

Or here is another picture drawn from life; it is to be found in the Memoirs of Sir James Melvil, 1683, ambassador from Mary Queen of Scots to Queen Elizabeth: 'After dinner my Lord of Hundsen drew me up to a quiet gallery, that I might hear some musick (but he said that be durst now avow it,) where I might hear the Queen (Elizabeth) play upon the virginals. After I had hearkened awhile, I took by the tapestry that hung before the door of the chamber, and seeing her back was towards the door, I entered within the chamber and stood a pretty space, hearing her play excellently well: but she left off immediately she turned about and saw me. She appeared to be surprised to see me, and came forward, seeming to strike me with ber hand, alleging she used not to play before men, but when she was solitary, to shun melancholy. She asked how I came there. I answered, as I was walking with my Lord Hundsen, as we passed by the chamber door I heard such a melody as ravished me, whereby I was drawn in ere I knew how—excusing my fault of bomelilness as being brought up at the court of France, where such freedom is allowed. Then she sate down low upon a cushion, and I upon my knees by her. She inquired whether my queen or she played best. In that I found myself obliged to give her the praise.'

"Again he writes—'She (Elizabeth) asked me if she (Mary Queen of Scots) played well? I said, 'Reasonably, for a queen.' This reminds us of Handel's reply to his royal patron, who asked him how he liked his playing on the violoncello. 'Vy, sir, your highness plays like a Prince'

"Abont the year 700 the Virginal went out of fasbion, and its place was finally taken by the improved clavichord, called Spinet, [from "spina," a thorn—heuce "quill."] and later on harpsichord. In 1760, a first class harpsichord by Racker, the most celebrated maker, cost one hundred guineas. A grand harpsichord looked precisely like a grand piano, only it was provided with two keyboards, one above the other, the top one being to the bottom one very much what the swell keyboard of the organ is to the main keyboard. To every note there were four strings, three in unison, the fourth tuned an octave higher, and there were stops capable of shutting off or coupling any of these together. The quality of the sound depended upon the material of which the jack was made—whether, that is, the string was struck with cloth, quill, metal, or buff leather; the quantity did not depend, as in the piano, upon the finger touch, but upon the number of strings coupled together by the stops. It now at last occurred to admirers of tbe harp and violin that all refinement of musical expression depended upon touch, and that whereas you could only pluck a string by machinery in one way, you might hit it in a hundred different ways.

"The long-abandoned notion of striking the strings with a hammer was at length revived, and by tbe additiou of this third and last element, the harpsichord emerged into the Pianoforte. The idea occurred to tbree men at the same time, about the beginning of the eighteenth century—Cristofali, an Italian, Marius, a Frenchman, and Schroter, a German: the palm probably rests with the Italian, although, so clumsy were the first attempts, that little success attended them, and good harpsichords on the wrong principle were still preferred to bad pianos on the right one; but the key-note of the new instrument had been struck in more senses than one—the object of centuries was, in fact, accomplisbed—the age of the quill, pig's-bristle, thorn, ivory tongue, etc., was rapidly drawing to its close. A small hammer was made to strike the string, and awake a clear, precise, and delicate tone unheard before, and the 'scratch, with a sound at the end of it,' was about to be consigned, after a long reign, to an eternal oblivion.

"We cannot wonder at the old harpsichord and clavichord lovers, even the greatest of them, not taking kindly at first to the pianoforte; the keys required a greater delicacy of treatment, it became necessary for musicians and amateurs to change their style of playing, and this alone was enough to hand over the new instrument to the rising generation. Silberman showed two of his pianofortes to Sebastian Bach, who praised them as ingenious pieces of mechanism, but complained of their feebleness of tone. Silberman, nothing disconcerted, retired into his workshop, and, after some years of study, during which no expense was spared, he at last produced an instrument which even Bach, wedded as he was to the clavicbord, pronounced to be 'without fault.' From that moment a rapid demand for Silberman's pianos rose throughout Germany; they could not be made fast enough.

"Frederick the Great, who indulged in a variety of the most improbable pursuits, bad several of them about his palace; and having the finest pianos, he was naturally anxious to hear the finest player in the world play upon them. But Sebastian Bach, like other great 'spirits of the vasty deep,' would not always come when called for. At last, one night in the year 1747, as the king took up his flute to perform a concerto at a private concert in the palace, a messenger came in with a list of the guests already arrived. With his flute in his hand, the king ran over the names, and turning suddenly to the musicians, in a most excited manner, said: 'Gentlemen, old Bach is come!' The great man had indeed alighted, after his long journey, at his son's house; but by express orders from the king he was hurried to the palace. The concert was suspended; no doubt the courtiers, in little groups, began eagerly discussing tbe new event; and the king's enthusiasm speedily spread through the assembly. Presently the door opens, and 'old Bach,' in his dusty travelling coat, his eyes somewhat dazzled with the sudden glare of light, steps into the midst of this lordly company of powdered wigs and doublets, and diamonded tiaras and sword hilts. His majesty,

*Psaltery, from "psaltendo," singing. †Dulcimer, "dulce melos," sweet sound.

*"Clavi," a key: "chorda," a string.

after a warm and unceremonious greeting, besought the great contrapuntist to improvise to the company; and Bach passed the remainder of the evening, going from room to room, followed by troops of admiring court ladies and musicians, and trying 'forte pianos, made by Silberman.'

"But the man who, more than any other, made the piano and pianoforte music popular in England and all over the Continent, was Muzio Clementi, born at Rome, 1752. At eighteen he composed his Op. II., which forms the basis of all modern pianoforte sonatas, and which Sebastian Bach observed, only the devil and Clementi could play. Clementi was educated in England, by the kindness of Mr. Beckford, and soon rivalled Bach as a popular teacher. In 1780 he went to Paris, and was perfectly astounded at his reception. He was dubbed the greatest player of the age, Mozart perhaps excepted, and soon afterwards left for Vienna, where he became acquainted with Mozart, the reigning star, father Haydn, and old Salieri, who was decidedly going off, and hated the new music, new pianos, and everything new. 'What right, forsooth, had these young upstarts to write music which the old men could not play? And such music, too! Mozart was a charlatan, Beethoven an impostor, and even Schubert, the dear little quire boy, who might have carried on the glorious old Italian traditions, was becoming tainted, and writing music like Mozart!' Poor Salieri! if he could only have heard the seventh Schubert Sympbony and the B minor Sonata, what would have become of him?

"One evening, Mozart and Clementi met in the drawing-room of the Emperor Joseph II.; the Emperor and Empress of Russia were the only others present. The royal trio were longing for a little music; but how could one great master take precedence of the other? At last, Clamenti, the elder of the two, consented to begin, which he did with a long improvization, winding up with a sonata. 'Allons,' says the Emperor, turning to Mozart, 'd'raut los!' (now fire away!) and Mozart, after a short prelude, played one of his own sonatas. The royal audience appear to have been delighted, and probably thought the one about as good as the other; but Mozart observed of Clementi, 'He is a good player, and that is all; he has great facility with his right hand, but not an atom of taste or feeling!'—Argosy.

A SCENE OF RETRIBUTION.

A PICTURE, representing the sale of a quantity of old furniture, seized for rent, was exhibited, some years back, in the window of a dealer in Lyons, France, and attracted considerable attention. In the foreground was placed a poor woman, holding in her arms a child, and watching, with a sorrowful eye, the progress of the sale. The sweet face of the child stood out in strong contrast to the distressed countenance of the poor mother. Further back were the persouages connected with the sale, represented with great vigor. The following is stated by a Lyons journal to be the history of the scene depicted:

"A few years since, the painter of the picture in question, an eminent artist at Lyons, while passing through the Rue des Terreaux, approached a number of persons who were gathered together, witnessing the sale of the furniture of a poor workman. A woman was seated on the pavement, with a child in her arms. The painter spoke to her, and was told that the furniture which was being sold belonged to her; that her husband had lately died, leaving her with the child she held in her arms; that she had struggled hard to maintain herself, by working day and night, and submitting to every privation, but that her landlord had at length seized her furniture for some months' rent which was due to him. The artist was much affected by this simple recital, and inquired who was her landlord.

"'There he is,' replied the poor woman, pointing to a man who was watching the progress of the sale; and he was recognized by the painter as a person who was suspected of having amassed a considerable fortune by usury, so that to make any appeal to his feelings on behalf of the poor woman would be useless.

"The artist was considering within himself what other plan he could adopt to benefit her, when the crier announced a picture for sale.

"It was a miserable daub, which, in the summer, this poor woman had used to hide the hole in the wall through which the pipe of the stove passed during the winter. It was put up at one franc. The artist at once conceived a plan for taking revenge of the landlord. He went over, examining the picture with great attention, and then called out with a loud voice, 'One hundred francs!' The landlord was astounded at the bid, but conceiving that a picture for which so eminent an artist could offer that sum was worth more than double, boldly offered 200f. 'Five hundred!' said the painter, and the contest between the two bidders became so animated that the prize was at length knocked down to the landlord at 2,200f.! The purchaser, then addressing the painter, said:

"'In seeing an artist of your merit bid so eagerly for the picture, I supposed that it must be valuable. Now, tell me, sir, at what do you estimate its value?'

"'About three francs and a half,' replied the painter, 'but I would not give that for it.'

"'You are surely jesting,' said the landlord, 'for you bid as high as 2,100 francs for it.'

"'That is true,' replied the artist, 'and I will tell you why I did so. You, who are in possession of an income of 25,000f. a year, have seized on the furniture of a poor woman for a debt of 200f. I wished to give you a lesson, and you fell into my trap. Instead of the poor woman being your debtor, she is now your creditor, and I flatter myself you will not compel her to seize your furniture for debt.'

"The artist then politely saluted the astonished landlord, and having announced her good fortune to the poor woman, walked away."

VAGUE PEOPLE.

WITH the Professors and Disciples of the Vague School certain phrases are used as equivalents for long stories and explanations. As in the phrase "All that sort of thing." Thus:

Vague Questioner (much interested)—You saw Whatshername the other day. What did you say to her?

Vague Respondent (who wishes to give his friend a general notion of the importance of the communication without going into lengthy and troublesome details)—Oh! I told her it was almost impossible for Thingummy to manage it; and if she—er—(thinks how he can abbreviate the narrative)—er—thought that—er—I could after all do the—

Vague Questioner (perfectly understanding him so far)—Yes, I see. Well?

Vague Respondent (satisfied that his friend won't understand it a bit better if he talks for half an hour, hesitates as to finishing at once or not)—Yes—and so we—er—talked it over several times ("several times" is artistically thrown in to give the idea that the conversations weren't of much importance as regards the result, and therefore are not worth recounting)—And she said that—er—it wasn't at all the sort of way to—(finds that he's getting into a dialogue form, and simplifies the matter by skilfully bringing in the "vague phrase") and, in fact, all that sort of thing.

Vague Questioner (perfectly satisfied)—Oh! and so there was nothing more done?

Vague Respondent (much relieved by his Vague friend's quick apprehension)—No, nothing.

Two other vague phrases, which obtain among the Vague people: "You know the sort of thing I mean." The first is, "you know," used flatteringly; the other, "you know the sort of thing I mean," used causa troublam suvendi. e. g.:

Vague Questioner (ready to ask anything about everything for the sake of conversation)—What is a Rantoon? (His friend has been talking of Rantoons.)

Vague Respondent (probably lounging and smoking)—A Rantoon? Oh, don't you know? (Superfluous question: an inartistic method to be avoided.) It's—er—(inspects the ash of his cigar, as if he saw a plan of a Rantoon in it) it's a—er—one of those sort of things like a thingummy with large wheels (his friend smokes savagely)—goes along the road—(says by way of flattering him and avoiding further question,) You know. (Friend nods as if he was in possession of several secrets of this sort.) Well—it's only larger—(knocks the ash of his cigar)—and goes quicker—er—and (gets bored with the explanation) you know the sort of thing I mean.

Vague Friend (who being totally uninterested in Rantoons is perfectly satisfied for the second time)—Oh yes, I know.

Now, if at some future time Vague Questioner is asked what a Rantoon is, he will reply somewhat in this form:

Vague Questioner—A Rantoon? Oh yes, I know very well. (As if he'd been living among them all his life.) Whatshisname was talking about it only the other day.

His Friend (not a Vague Disciple, but one really seeking information)—Well, what is it?

Vague Questioner (half laughing, as if there was something so utterly ludicrous associated with a Rantoon as to beggar description)—Oh (little vague laugh) it's a thing that runs along—(Friend thinks he's going to hear of an animal)—you go along, you know, on a sort of a—um—dear me—(in an annoyed tone as if he'd forgotten the name, which, indeed he has)—er—(sees that his friend doesn't understand vagueness, and is anxiously waiting for an answer) you know—what you go on along a road—without a horse (Friend thinks of "legs" and "a railway" no—no—Perambulator—(recollects that that isn't the word, but determines that it must do for the present) and you know the sort of thing. Good bye, old fellow, see you again soon. (Leaves his friend wondering what the deuce a Rantoon is.)

Vague People never know the names of streets. Let a stranger to London meet a Professor of Vagueness by St. St. James' Palace, at the bottom of St. James' street, and ask his way to Hanover Square.

Vague Professor (who has allowed his thoughts to wander as he strolled along, is now utterly unable to collect them in order to meet the demand)—Eh? Hanover Square? (Thinks if he'd been asked for Belgrave Square he could have told him.) Hanover Square. (Considering) Well, you must go up here—(forgets the name of St. James street) and then you know—into whatsitsname street—to the right—rather—and (hopelessly) there you are—(corrects himself and suggests a way out of all difficulties) at least any one will tell you. (Gets rid of him.)

When the stranger has gone, the Vague Person will wonder to himself where the dickens Hanover Square is, and whether the fellow didn't mean Grosvenor Square: he then recalls the fact that he has been to a ball in Willis' Rooms, in Hanover Square; on second thoughts, he says to himself, "Willis' Rooms are in Grosvenor Square, or no, in Thingummy street where St. James' Theatre is;" and then he makes a happy hit by arriving at the conclusion that the Hanover Square Rooms are in Grosvenor Square. Finally, meeting a friend, he asks where the Hanover Sqnare Rooms are, and is told in Hanover Square, whereupon he identifies the spot by remarking, "Oh yes, I know, there's a statue of Old Thingummy in it," and straightway congratulates himself upon his accurate knowledge of London.

Vague people, being generally persons with no occupation, are prone to scandal. They perhaps do less harm than your regular gossip by their ingenious use of blanks and dashes in conversation—e. g.:

Vague Person—You've heard of course of—er——?

Vague Friend (who would like to know all about it, but thinks that a show of ignorance will defeat his object.) Oh, you mean about—er——?

Vague Person (quite up to him)—No, no. I mean Whatshisname in the —— There are two of 'em—you must have heard it.

Vague Friend (unwilling to give in)—What, do you mean the case that was in the paper (he hasn't of course the slightest notion of what he's talking about.)

Vague Person (interested)—No, what was that?

Vague Friend (baffled)—Oh! I thought you'd seen it. (They consider whether they shall exchange confidences: slight pause.) Oh, it's nothing. I thought it was the same affair.

So the conversation continues, and ultimately Vague Friend learns that there is "some sort of a row between old Whatshisname, you know the fellow, and the chap who—let me see what did he do last year?—however, you know both parties well enough—however, that's the state of the case." Londou Punch.

A FUNNY DOG STORY.—When the war in Italy commenced, the Zouaves embarked for Genoa; but as they were going on board the ship, they saw a formal order forbidding the entrance of dogs upon the vessel. As they were very much attached to their dogs, they were stricken with grief. It was not easy to deceive the sharp lookout kept by the intendant, for every soldier advanced along the narrow gangway, one by one, as their names were called. Necessity is the mother of invention. The drummers unscrewed their drums, and the best dogs of the regiment were concealed in the drums, which were screwed up again. When regiments embark, no music is played; but on this occasion the colonel determined there should be music. He ordered the trumpets and drums to take the head of the column, and to play a lively tune. The face of the drummers—every one of whom had a dog in his drum—may be conceived! The trumpets sounded; the drums were all silent. The colonel got angry, and bawled to know the reason why the drums did not beat. There was but one thing to do, and that was to beat. The moment the drums began to beat, innumerable dogs began to bowl and bay, to the astonishment of everybody but the Zouaves. Everybody looked right, left, backward, forward—no sign of a dog anywhere; and yet, the more the drummers beat, the more the dogs howled. At last a spaniel fell out of a drum, rolled over and over on the ground, got up and took to his heels, bowling louder than ever. Roars of laughter greeted this explanation of the mysterious howls. The intendant ordered the drummers to advance on board one by one, and to roll the drum as he came. If a barking was heard, the drum was unscrewed, and the dog put ashore. Only one dog got on board; this was "Toutou," who kept quiet through all the rolling. It need not be said the Third Zouaves adore "Toutou." He made his entry into the city of Paris at their head, a few days since.

A COTEMPORARY, referring to aspirants for political office being brought out before the public by means of "calls" numerously signed, instead of coming out flat-footed, in the old-fashioned way, says it reminds him of the story of O'Mulligan and his wife. "Biddy," said O'Mulligan to his wife, "it's a bad cowld ye have. A drap of the craythur ud do no haarrum," "Och, hone!" said Biddy, "I've taken the pledge, but ye can mix a drink, Jimmy, and force me to swally it."

BATHOS.—An editor announces the death of a lady of his acquaintance, and touchingly adds: "In her decease the sick lost an invaluable friend. Long will she seem to stand at their bedside, as she was wont, with the balm of consolation on her tongue and a cup of rhubarb in her hand."

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, JULY 28, 1866.

Full volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

COPPERHEAD HUMOR.

THE expression of the Democratic press as a general thing is not cheerful. The wildest Abolitionist, in his most radical moments, turning from the rapt contemplation of an immediate alliance with a negress—which we all know and it is perfectly useless to deny, is his regular mental occupation—never charged this inconsistent weakness upon it. We say inconsistent, because it must be apparent that gentlemen who, from education or natural peculiarity, really believe that the world is going to perdition—who see in progress only destruction and annihilation, cannot consistently be cheerful. With a Freedman's Bureau in active operation, and public offices filled with Republicans, levity becomes simply blasphemous.

Again, if we look more closely into this serious peculiarity, we shall find that the low vice of humor is essentially demoralizing, levelling, and of a Northern and Republican character. The quality of Southern aristocracy—and, indeed, all pure aristocratic conditions—are "grand, gloomy, and peculiar." Gentlemen who have the responsibility of a long line of ancestors on their shoulders have something else to do than to make low jokes for common people to laugh at. People who quote the gloomiest portions of Lord Byron, who have tournaments in the nineteenth century, who talk of chivalry and "ladye fair," should be, and are careful how they admit this pestiferous and disorganizing quality among them. Indeed, it may be broadly stated that a society which recognizes a bowie-thrust as a legitimate reply to banter, and accepts a pistol bullet as the highest form of repartee, offers but slight inducements to the development of playful satire or humor. For this reason, in its literary exhibitions, we are more apt to recognize the snapping whip and elegant heroics of the ring master, than the hearty laughter of the clown. It is true that "Bill Arp" and "Brick Pomeroy" aspire to the somewhat distinguished title of Southern humorists. As we have never had the felicity of perusing any of the former's writings, and as we are informed that appreciation thereof is restricted to certain isothermal lines, we are unable to pass upon their merits. Of "Brick Pomeroy," while there can be no doubt of his masterly genius, there seems to be a difference of opinion regarding the quality of that genius. In speaking lately of General Grant, he says: "Ah, but old dog of Galena, your teeth are gone, and, as the age of miracles has passed away, you are not likely to grow a new set right away. What an aspiration for a man by whose orders the torch swept the fair and beautiful Shenandoah!" Now, this is not humor, but poetry. And poetry, we may be permitted to remark, of a very high and imaginative order. It is the sublime prematurely arrested on its way to become ridiculous.

But, for a perfect blending of poetry and humor we must look nearer home, and the Daily National, published at Grass Valley, seems to offer a felicitous combination of these qualities. To relieve the monotony of mere provincial gossip, the editor treats his readers to a series of remarkable essays which, when collected into one volume, will, we think, add a third name to the list of Southern humorists. In its issue of the 24th inst., we have an article entitled "Americans of Chinese Descent," which, as the title might easily suggest, is playfully ironical. That the author has, since its publication, been more than once tapped on the shoulder by feminine parasols and told he was an extremely dangerous person, we can readily imagine. The text is not much—simply the fact that a Chinese agent has been soliciting emigration to labor in the South and West. But in the hands of a skilful humorist what might it not suggest? The National man sees already "twelve millions of Chinamen at work on the Pacific Railroad," with an eye on the "fat, fruitful lands of Missouri." By the use of a finely turned figure, he also sees them as a "Chinese Army Worm" eating his patient way around, until, by another equally fine figure, he sticks to the "soil of the West as barnacles to the keel of a ship." But the mere contemplation of this dreadful picture causes the writer for a moment to forget his irony: "Through our licentious and fanatical ideas of equality and freedom, America seems destined to become the reservoir where shall be deposited all the confluent filth, ignorance, bilge-water and degradation of Europe and Asia combined." "Our posterity," he adds, and we think with considerable reason, "will certainly curse us for corrupting and squandering their just inheritance." How they will curse us we learn in the next sentence. "A few centuries hence, as in the fable of the frogs and the boys, our children will exclaim, 'It might have been fun for you, but it is h-ll on us." While it is questionable which is the most dreadful to contemplate in the future—the manners of posterity, as plainly shown in the above illustration, or their situation, which is only vaguely hinted at—if the writer means that in this mysterious future all will be changed, and Chinese children will be permitted to throw stones and filth at full grown white Caucasians, we can only tremble at this prospect of even-handed justice.

In the contemplation of this future the editor of the National indulges in a fine flow of humor. "Let us," he continues, "send for the Knoloocamba, and the Chempanzee next, and embrace them as brothers too, on the principle of orology, for they look much like niggers, and, may have souls as well, for all we knew." As long as we are not aware who the "Kooloocamba" is, and fail even to recognize the "Chempanzee" under its peculiar orthography, we must refuse to embrace them as brothers, even on the "principles of orology" which we have hitherto regarded—wrongly no doubt—as the science of mountains. But this doubtless is a touch of humor, as is also the following:

"Education for a few million years might do wonders for them; let's try the experiment. As for our own species, it matters not. The idea of the day is, not how the nobler beings of creation shall be still farther exalted, but, to what extent the inferior beings of the world can be improved! Noble ambition! Let us die for the nigger, as Christ died for us, and be crushed out by the Chinamen! Equality is the shibboleth of the age. Deny it, and damnation quick take thee! Let us be equal, though we sink from empyrean to Styx-like horrors! Let us be equal, though we reek in filth, and exult in shame!"

That this fine climax is worthy of a better definition than that of being simply humorous we shall not attempt to deny. That there is an epithetic force in "damnation quick take thee" is equally clear. But when the writer says "Let us be equal, though we sink from empyrean to Styx-like horrors! Let us be equal, though we reek in filth and exult in shame!" and we perceive that he means "Let us be unequal" though the same disgraceful and unpleasant results happen to us—we know that this is irony. And being irony, it is funny. The evidence of humor is at once established.

We think we have shown that the Copperhead humorist is "fearfully and wonderfully made." Laboring under the disadvantage of being the but of civilization, his attempts at retaliation are maliciously conceived and clumsily executed. Like Falstaff he may say: "Men of all sorts take a pride to gird at me; The brain of this foolish compounded clay, man, is not able to vent anything that tends to laughter more than I invent, or is invented on me: I am not only witty in myself, but the cause that wit is in other men."

Croquet.—The noble game of croquet has at last arrived in San Francisco. A. Roman & Co., booksellers and publishers, No. 417 and 419 Montgomery street—by what system of reasoning we cannot say—have made it a prominent addition to their stock, and given it a kind of literary introduction to San Francisco. From their show-windows the mysteries of balls and mallets are made clear to the promenader. Whether the game will be popular as an outdoor amusement in this breezy metropolis, remains to be seen—though, anticipating that objection, there is a parlor edition. As an evidence of the enthusiasm excited by croquet we give the following extract from one of C. H. Webb's (Champlain, N. Y.) letters to the Boudoir:

"What do we do up here, you ask? Well, in the present pleasant weather, in the morning we play—croquet. In the afternoon, we play—croquet. In the evening, we play—croquet. The only hours of the day that croquet is not played are those which lie between twelve o'clock Saturday night and one o'clock Monday morning—for, to guard against any infringement of the fifth commandment, an hour's leeway is always given to the Sabbath. Perhaps you know something about croquet—its mallets, its hoops or arches, the stakes—often reached by a miss—the red rover, the "splitting stroke"—sometimes made by irate young ladies on the skull of an awkward partner—and all the balance of the nomenclature and technicalities of the mysterious game? I have played it constantly—when it didn't rain—since my arrival in the country."

The first volume of the Memoirs of Maximilian, Emperor of Mexico, is announced by a Leipsic publisher. It is a reproduction of the account of the Emperor's travels, of which a few copies, issued from the imperial printing office of Vienna, had been distributed to members of the imperial family and to a few intimate friends, with a request not to publish any extract. This prohibition must have been removed unless the Leipsic publisher has obtained a copy surreptitiously and is printing it without the consent of the author.

In Paris, recently, the first edition, 5,000 copies, of La Contagion, a new comedy by M. Emile Augier, was sold the day it was issued.

(For the Californian.)

TO THE PLIOCENE SKULL.

A GEOLOGICAL ADDRESS.

A human skull has been found in California, in the pliocene formation. This skull is the remnant not only of the earliest pioneer of this State, but the oldest known human being. * * * * * The skull was found in a shaft one hundred and fifty feet deep, two miles from Angel's, in Calaveras county, by a miner named James Matson, who gave it to Mr. Scribner, a merchant, and he gave it to Dr. Jones, who sent it to the State Geological survey. * * * * * The published volume of the State Survey on the Geology of California states that man existed here contemporaneously with the mastodon, but this fossil proves that he was here before the mastodon was known to exist.—Daily Paper.

"SPEAK, O man, less recent! Fragmentary fossil!
Primal pioneer of pliocene formation,
Hid in lowest drifts below the earliest stratum
Of Volcanic tufa!

Older than the beasts, the oldest Pulæotherium;
Older than the trees, the oldest Cryptogamia;
Older than the hills, those infinitile eruptions
Of earth's epidermis!

Eo—Mio—Plio—whatsoe'er the "cene" was
That those vacant sockets filled with awe and wonder—Whether shores Devonian or Silurian beaches—
Tell us thy strange story!

Or has the Professor slightly antedated
By some thousand years thy advent on this planet,
Giving thee an air that's somewhat better fitted
For cold-blooded creatures?

Wert thou true spectator of that mighty forest
When above thy head the stately Sigillaria
Reared its columned trunks in that remote and distant
Carboniferous epoch?

Tell us of that scene—the dim and watery woodland
Songless, silent, hushed, with never bird or insect,
Veiled with spreading fronds and screened with tall club-mosses,
Lycopodiacea—

When beside thee walked the solemn Plesiosaurus,
And around thee crept the festive Ichthyosaurus,
While from time to time above thee flew and circled Cheerful Pterodactyls.

Tell us of thy food—those half marine refections,
Crinoids on the shell and Brachipods ou naturel—
Cuttle-fish to which the pieuvre of Victor Hugo
Seems a periwinkle.

Speak, thou awful vestige of the Earth's creation—
Solitary fragment of remains organic!
Tell the wondrous secrets of thy past existence—
Speak! thou oldest primate!"

Even as I gazed, a thrill of the maxilla
And u lateral movement of the condyloid process,
With post-pliocine sounds of healthy mastication,
Ground the teeth together.

And, from that imperfect dental exhibition,
Stained with expressed juices of the weed Nicotian,
Came these hollow accents, blent with softer murmurs
Of expectoration:

"Which my name is Bowers, and my crust was busted
Falling down a shaft, in Calaveras county,
But I'd take it kindly if you'd send the pieces Home to old Missouri!" Bret.

LITERARY NOTES.

We get from the Nation, Round Table, and other valuable exchanges, the following items:

The late James Sheridan Knowles left a posthumous play which is on the eve of publication, under the title of True Unto Death. Originally written as an opera, it was recently produced as a drama in two acts at the Strand Theatre, with moderate success.

The King of Saxony has recently printed the third volume of his translations of Dante, Das Paradies. The annotations of his Majesty are said to place him in the first rank of Dante scholars.

Mr. Martin Farquhar Tupper is about to publish a bijou edition of his Proverbial Philosophy, which completes the two hundredth thousand of that work. It is to be dedicated to Mr. Gladstone.

Miss Christina G. Rosetti is about to publish a volume of poems entitled The Prince's Progress, and Other Poems. It will be illustrated with two designs by D. G. Rossetti.

Another translation of Homer is forthcoming in London. "The first book of Homer, rendered faithfully into the heroic couplet," by Omega.

Hans Christian Andersen has a new volume ready, of which an English translation, by Mrs. Bushby, is announced. Its title is A Poet's Fancies.

Mrs. Henry Wood has a new novel in the press entitled Elster's Folly.

Mr. Charles Collins, a brother of Mr. Wilkie Collins, is about to publish a new novel, At the Bar.

Mr. Edmund Yates is the next novelist whom Mr. Dickens has selected to fill the pages of All the Year Round.

Victor Hugo is said to have lost £15,000 by the recent failure of a London bank.

[For the Californian.]

THE PRAYER OF KAHONAH.

A TRADITION OF THE NORTHWEST COAST.

BY HENRY GEORGE.

ALONG, long time ago, ere our people had become few and weak; generations on generations before a pale face had been seen on the land or a fire-canoe on the great water; when the streams were filled with fish and the valleys were alive with game, there lived a mighty chief, whose power and knowledge have never been equalled.

His life had been spent in meditation and the study of the mysteries. He had learned all things that man can learn—no plant hid from him its virtues; with each animal he could talk in its own tongue; he understood what the birds said, and the comings and goings of the fishes of the sea; he knew the signs and seasons of the stars of the night, and read their warnings of things to come.

Though too old to go forth to battle, yet his counsel was better than the strength of all his warriors. Under his wise rule the tribe had increased and flourished. No war party that he sent forth returned without glory; no hunting expedition that he planned came back empty-handed. His people loved and revered him; the farthest tribes owned his power and sought his friendship. From the huts of the little men of the North to the walled cities of the South; along the shores of the salt sea, and far over the great mountains, spread the fame of his wisdom—the little people of the North brought him furs, and the kings of the South sent him gold and rich vestures.

He was an old man; of the gray-haired elders none could remember his boyhood, none had seen his youth. The years of his strength had been spent seeking wisdom in solitude and fasting. When from the silence of the mountains he had come to the lodges of men, the marks of age were already on him; yet since then many moons had gone by, though without bringing him weakness. If not as strong of arm or fleet of foot as the young men, yet the decay of age was not on him and his wisdom grew not less, but more.

But when he knew all that can be known—when his fame had spread far and wide—in a blazing star that stretched across the midnight heavens he read that he must shortly go to the spirit land. And returning to the lodges of his people, from the solitudes of the mountains where none durst follow him, his heart was solemn and his step slow. For he was loth to leave the people whom he loved; to leave his fame and his power; to have men say, "He was wise; he was great—he is dead!" He saw the maiden and her lover; the young men telling of their deeds; the joyous games of the children; the mother singing to her babe—and he yearned for their joy, and was sad to think his days had almost gone by—that that which was not done must forever be undone; that the delights he had missed he could never attain.

So he came to the place of council and called his tribe together. "I am old," said he; "my years are more than those of your oldest; yet my will is not weak nor do I feel the decay of age. But the sign which I know has told me that I must soon pass to the spirit land. With glory have I led you; with wisdom have I guided you; who is there who will take my place?"

But his people, answering not, cast down their faces in sorrow. They knew there was no one, nor could there be, who would guide them as he had done—for he knew all that man can know.

Then an old medicine-man, the oldest and wisest, spoke: "Must it be so? Will not the Master of Life, who has lengthened your days and given you wisdom, be entreated to leave you a little longer with your people?—for there is none who can take your place."

And all kept solemn silence till Kahonah answered: "I know not; such thing hath never been: yet while there is time will I ask the Lord of Life. Who will go with me on the journey I must make—to the end of the world; past the fountain of the North Wind?"

Up sprang the warriors; but the medicine-men sat still: "To the end of the world we will go with thee; be it through water or through fire!"

"Not so," said the old man; "your conrage I know; that for aught mortal ye would not turn back; yet where I go your hearts would fail you and your strength become as weakness. Those who go with me must be wise as well as brave—men skilled in the mysteries, who have been purified by fasts and watchings.

Then said the wise men, solemnly: "We know whither thou goest and through what thou must pass; yet that thou mayest be spared to thy people will we go with thee."

So of the wise men took he seven of the wisest, and at the first of the moon, while the whole tribe kept a solemn fast and prayed with their faces to the ground, he and the seven entered the sacred canoe.

Slowly, with measured strokes, they left the land behind, going northward till over their heads they saw the great white bird; then they sat still and began their mystic chant In the bow sat Kahonah, wrapped in his medicine mantle, and clasped round his head the golden fillet—the golden serpent with eyes of diamond and scales of ruby, which the priests of the South had sent him. In the bow he sat, with his face to the North, and the seven sat in their places; they neither set sail nor paddled, but chanted their mystic chant, and swifter than if urged by sail or paddle glided their canoe

In its strength the fierce north wind swept across the sea, seeking the warmth of the South. On either hand it curled the waves, but left unrippled a smooth way before the singers of the mighty song. Softly the water opened for their prow, silently it closed up behind, and all things living fled away from the mighty song they might not hear—the song of mysteries—the chant of life and death; of the secret of life and the meaning of death—of awful words, potent even in the realms of death. But over them the great white bird that knows the icy sea sea sailed motionless, as if upborne by the mystic song; and in the sky at night blazed the fiery star, pointing to the North, red with the dancing lights.

Many days they sailed along, and behind them, at noon, the sun was lower and lower; many nights they sailed along, and before them the red lights flashed brighter and flashed higher. Swiftly, silently, with no sound save the sound of the mighty song, they sped towards the end of the world. They passed the lands where the little people dwell; they passed great mountains and fields of ice, which silently opened before them; and they entered the silent sea. Around them rose a great white mist—a thick white mist through which the red lights hardly shone.

They had passed the cave which is the fountain of the North Wind; they came to the shore which is the end of the world. Then the seven ceased their chant, and with shut eyes and downcast heads were motionless. And Kahonah, casting off his magic mantle and unclasping from his head the golden serpent, left them by the shore which is the end of the world, and went into the mist. And with his hands above his head, he fell prostrate on the ground, and prayed to the Master of Life.

And through the mist a voice came to Kahonah, though the seven heard it not, for their eyes were closed in a trance: "What seekest thou?"

And prostrate on the ground, Kahonah answered: "I have come to entreat thee to lengthen my days yet a little. Though my years are many, yet the decay of age is not on me. My people need me yet; I have yet much to do ere I can come in peace. Thou knowest that my strength has been spent in fasting and prayer; I have not known the love of woman, nor have I looked into the eyes of my child. The lifetime of man is short; I am yet young in wisdom; leave me, I pray thee, longer with my people!"

Through the mist the voice again spoke: "I know that thou hast sought wisdom, and from thee I have kept the decay of age; much of men's pleasure thou hast not tasted, yet thou hast learned all that man can learn. Art thou willing to again become a child; to grow again as thou hast grown; to gather again thy wisdom?"

But his power and wisdom were sweet to Kahonah, and he answered reverently: "No, O Master, for by fastings and long watchings, through pain and weariness, with toil and denial, have I gained my wisdom. Give me then, I pray thee, time to use it. Grant me the life and strength of my youth, and let me keep my knowledge."

"What thou askest canst not be, nor could it give thee joy;" and as he spoke, the mist lifted for a moment, and beyond the shore which is the end of the world, Kahonah beheld the bright waters of the spirit land, and across the happy sea saw balmy tree-tops tossing in the sweet breeze, while waves of silver fell on sands of gold—"What thou askest canst not be; yet, O man to whom much has been given—though thy time has come, and beyond those waters they wait for thee—for thy instruction and for the instruction of thy people, retain knowledge and life. Youth with wisdom thou canst not have; but my messenger shall not call thee and the weakness of age shall not fall on thee. Return again to thy people, and when the peace which is beyond seems sweeter even than thy power, come of thyself."

And out of the thick mist, into the boat, unto the sleeping seven, came Kahonah; and his face was as the face of the dead, for he had stood on the shore which is the end of the world and had seen the waters no mortal eye before had looked upon.

Swiftly they drifted back from the shore which is the end of the world; past the cave whence comes the North Wind; through the fields and hills of ice; and they came again to the land of their people, who watched for them—for the blazing star had disappeared.

And with joy and gladness, but in silence—with reverent joy and thankfulness, the wise men of the tribe bore the seven to the great medicine lodge. And Kahonah walked before, yet spoke to no one, and his face was as the face of the dead.

After seven days had passed, Kahonah and the seven again came forth and mingled with the people, yet they spoke not of what they had seen, and none durst ask them. And Kahonah ruled as he had ruled before: with greater wisdom he could not; and his fame still spread, and his people continued to flourish. Yet his face was grave and his heart was sad. When he sent forth a war party, he knew it would return in triumph; when he planned a hunting expedition he knew it would come back laden; more he could not learn, for he knew all that man can know—his power, through long use, lost its charm, and there seemed nothing new to him under the sun. His people revered him; his slightest gesture was law; but he was alone—when he came they were silent; when he held his peace, none spoke, for to his knowledge their wisdom was foolishness. The maidens bent their heads and the children hushed their games as he passed by; only the infants smiled on him, for they looked through his eyes and saw the good soul within. And his heart went back to the days of his childhood, for he had beheld the sea whose waters blend the future and the past. And from the lost freshness of his childhood faces looked upon his soul and voices lingered in the air, for his eyes had seen the tree-tops of the happy island, and he had heard the waves of silver falling on sands of gold.

And he sought the spot where his mother had sung him to rest, where his father had stroked his hair, and his sister and his brother had played their plays of glee. The flowers bloomed around him—he knew now their names and uses—but they had lost their charm. The birds sang above—he knew what they said—but their joy found no echo in his heart. The squirrels peeped upon him from the tree—he could now speak to them—but saw them with no shout of glee. The little stream murmured as before—but he had heard the music of the boundless sea—and the little stream sung to him only mournful songs of the time that was gone and the love that he missed.

And his soul was sated with wisdom and power, and he longed for the peace which is beyond the grave, and for the love of those who had loved him in his childhood.

The flowers were happy in the sun; though the winter must come, they knew they would bloom again. The winds sang words of joy, for they trusted to the giver of their life; the old squirrel watched the gambols of his young, nor dreaded to be gathered to his fathers. The brook ran away to the sea, nor feared it would lose its way. All things were content—in Kahonah's heart his wisdom seemed foolishness, and his power was weariness.

And again he called the tribe together, in a solemn council, round the great medicine lodge, and said to them:

"I sought the Master of Life, and entreated him that my days might be lengthened. And for my instruction, and for the instruction of my people, he bade his messenger call me not. Yet now I perceive that my desire was vain, and my wisdom was foolishness. The companions of my youth have long since past away, and my heart longs to join them. Choose, therefore, from among you a chief, for I will again seek the Master of Life and beseech him to recall his gift and let me depart."

And at the new moon, in the twilight, he again set forth, while his people stood in silence on the shore. And, with one foot in the sacred canoe, he turned and blessed them, and said:

"The Master of Life, who is greater than we, is also far wiser than we. He who knows all things knows what is best; where he has set bounds, let none try to pass: but when his messenger comes, go tranquilly and with hope.

And blessing them again, he wrapped himself in his mantle and laid down in the canoe as one who, wearied, peacefully seeks rest, and into the gathering darkness it glided away, till his people, who prayed with tears by the shore, could see it no more.

The English correspondent of the Boston Post says: The Dean of Westminster has been telling how sixteen gentlemen were invited to meet the author of Ecce Homo, and not one of them went away the wiser. This reminds me of a story I heard lately, though perhaps it is an old one, at the expense of Mr. Vernon Harcourt, the "Historicus" of the Times, Saturday Reviewer, Q. C., etc, etc. Four gentlemen bet they would bring to dinner at Richmond the most disagreeable man in London. Accordingly a dinner for eight was ordered. But when the time arrived, the persons who appeared were the four gentlemen and—Mr. Vernon Harcourt. With suggestive unanimity, they had all invited him, and he never was the wiser as to the part he played in the banquet. But to return to Ecce Homo, the continued excitement about it is conclusive evidence of the undying popularity of theological speculation.

THE nineteenth volume of the Correspondence of Napoleon the First has lately appeared.

A NUMBER of Shakspeare's plays have been translated into Hindostanee and published at Bombay.

MR. HARRISON AINSWORTH will publish at once his new novel, The Constable de Bourbon.

PROFESSOR GOLDWIN SMITH is to resign his chair of modern history at Oxford at the close of the present academical year.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper ..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons 10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

The London Quarterly Review (Conservative.)
The Edinburgh Review (Whig.)
The Westminster Review (Radical.)
The North British Review (Free Church.)
Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum..... 7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
38 Walker street, New York.

TYLER BROTHERS,

NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,

SAN FRANCISCO,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

SCHOOL BOOKS,
STATIONERY,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PORTFOLIOS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
FANCY ARTICLES,
CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we stamp with

INITIALS,

In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS
ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.
je23

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware.
mar24 6m Main street, Petaluma.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR JULY:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

JULY 30th, - - - - CONSTITUTION,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth,
(Connecting with the ARIZONA, Captain Maury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

On Wednesday, - - August 15,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 Tons, for New York.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
, Up stairs, San Francisco.

MEAGHER, TAAFE & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS OF

DRY GOODS, LINENS,
FURNISHING GOODS,
YANKEE NOTIONS,
FANCY GOODS, ETC.

AGENTS FOR THE

MOUNT VERON DUCK COMPANY

NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.

RETAIL HOUSE, - - - NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
jy21 3m Lick House.

YANKEE NOTIONS

AND

FANCY GOODS!

MERCHANTS wanting Goods in this line should not fail to examine our stock, which is new and attractive, before buying elsewhere.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
jy21-3m Battery street, near Pine.

THE PACIFIC

INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. my5-3m

OCCIDENTAL HOMESTEAD Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Capital Stock, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

This Association was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 499, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say, COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M.

mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of Californin. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late GREAT INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES

NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY

And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important considerationparticularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscilluting motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained.

The peculiar construction of this superior machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quick silver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

W. D. FARRAND

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m - H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

TO FARMERS, MINERS, LABORERS

And all those wishing to secure themselves a portion of THE MOST VALUABLE AGRICULTURAL AND MINERAL LANDS OF MEXICO,

With an equal interest in the Profits of the Plantations of

THE MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON COMPANY.

HOMES FOR THE POOR AND COMPETENCY FOR ALL.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

The Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having reserved from their final Subscription List a Limited Number of Unassessable Shares, (the remaining shares of the Company having been taken up by the stockholders,) hereby offer the same for sale at the original subscription price of Sixteen Dollars each, payable in cash. Every holder of a share will be entitled to a portion of the Company's lands, having the privilege to settle thereon and participate in all the advantages and profits of the enterprise, and special privileges granted to this Company by an Imperial Decree of Maximilian, dated 9th January, 1866, without being subjected to the conditions of regular Government emigrants, this Company settling upon their own lands, secured by private purchase, and held under indisputable Spanish titles.

Shareholders becoming actual settlers will also have the privilege of any employment upon the Company's plantation. Portions of land will be allotted to settlers, to be held by them until a final division makes it their property.

For the purpose of increasing the value of the Company's land, and to create all the comforts of a home and society, it is the intention of the company to form a regular settlement and to lay out a town adjoining their present plantation into building lots, which will likewise be fairly divided between the 8,000 shares which comprise the total number of the company.

A large number of shareholders will settle upon the company's lands after the rainy season in October next. Many of them may then be employed by the company, or by others able to plant for themselves, or in developing the mineral resources of the adjoining mountains, etc., etc.

Men of all trades and professions, desiring to emigrate to Mexico, will have great advantages as shareholders of this company. They will find the lands already purchased for them at a rate equivalent to a free gift, to be held by each shareholder as his property, protected by the best Spanish titles, and the good will of all political parties now contending for the reins of government; the climate the most salubrious, and the land rich and fertile beyond description; every kind of game abounding; the rivers full of fish and with extensive beds of large oysters; altogether, a country where it is easy to procure a livelihood and the comforts of a home with less labor and less capital than in any other part of the world.

The extensive placer diggings, veins of silver, and solid quartz ledges, which are to be found in the immediate vicinity, and acknowledged to be rich and very extensive, can, by the presence of a number of settlers, be profitably developed. Many of these mines are to be found within the limits of the company's grant. The Sierra Madre or Mother Mountain of Mexico, situated only within about twenty miles from the coast, can be reached and developed with much greater facility than the more remote mines in the interior, and will therefore make the company's lands the most desirable to locate upon.

For Maps and Survey, and further information, apply at the office of the MEXICAN SEA ISLAND COTTON CO., Betge's Book Store, Russ House, Montgomery street, between the hours of 11 and 1 o'clock.

☞ All the assessable stock having been taken up by mutual subscription of stockholders, the company will have no more shares to offer after the limited number of unassessable shares have been placed, and shall prefer to sell these to actual settlers—a single share of which will be sufficient to entitle them to a large portion of the lands.

WE, THE UNDERSIGNED shareholders in the Mexican Sea Island Cotton Company, having investigated and satisfied ourselves of the importance of the enterprise, recommend the same to the public. We are convinced that under the management of the present officers of the company, with their efforts to induce industrious parties to locate upon the land, that the enterprise must become very profitable to all parties interested, and most beneficial to actual settlers.

S. R. Kettlewell, Blacksmith, 264 First street.
W. C. Mead & Son, 224 Sansome street.
M. O'Neil, Proprietor New Branch Hotel, 12 Sutter street.
Winall & Clapp, 505 Market street.
R. A. S. Repiton, M. D., 816 Montgomery street.
Wm. Rudolph, Gunsmith, 216 Pacific street.
G. Burkhardt, Jeweller, No. 209 Pacific street.
E. Keil, East India Tea Co., 631 Washington-st.
P. D. O'Regan, People's Bakery, corner Fourth and Jessie streets.
Wm. Meyer, Provision Dealer, 258 Third street.
John Duff, Painter and Paper Hanger, 642 Cluy street.
A. E. Mylott, Importer and Dealer in Cigars and Tobacco, 305 Battery street
M. M. Baldwin, Jeweller, 433 Montgomery-st.
S. Baysen, Hatter, No. 346 Kearny street.
Mathew McCloskey, 644 Howard street.

San Francisco, March 20th, 1866. mar24

MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. my6 3m

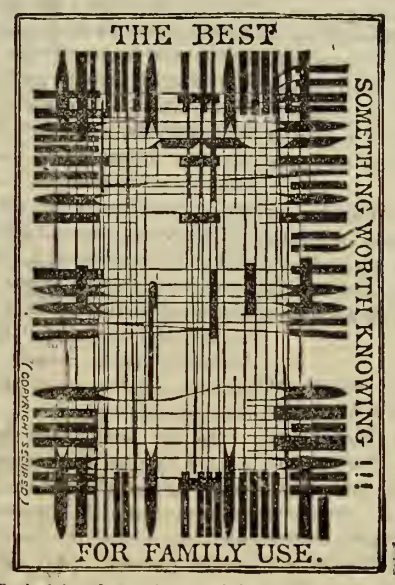
AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. - - - Petaluma.
mar24 6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

SPRING AND SUMMER STYLE SILK HAT, 1866,

INTRODUCED - - - - - - - MARCH 3

BY

McGANN & CO.,
FASHIONABLE HATTERS,
No. 654 Washington street,
Two doors below Kearny.



SPRING AND SUMMER STYLES.—Silk, Felt, Beaver, and other HATS for sale at the lowest prices.

CAPS of every description, suitable for all ages, made to order.

McGANN & CO., being experienced and skilled in all the branches of the manufacture of Hats, feel confident of giving entire satisfaction to their patrons. Every description of Hats and Caps made to order.

Remember, McGANN & CO., Practical Hatters, 654 Washington street, two doors below the Plaza.

☞ New Goods by every steamer. mar10

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

Cor. Sansome and California streets, San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

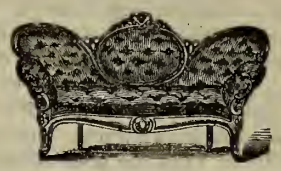
Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.



One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

FURNITURE AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - - San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.
(Successors to W. P. Harrison,)

Printers and Electrotypers,

413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome.)
SAN FRANCISCO.

ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.

ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.

Stamps of all kinds made to order.

Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.

A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. my3-3m

SMOKE THE PATENT RUSSIAN CIGARETTES,

MANUFACTURED BY

GIBB & STAHL,
S.W. COR. KEARNY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

☞ For sale at all Cigar Stores. ap28-3m

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Brnces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.

je10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!

MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,

53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, President

AMUSEMENTS.

AT Maguire's Opera House, The Female Detective was played on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday evenings. The plot of the piece, of course, is that the "Female Detective" discovers any amount of villainy in some wretch of the opposite sex, who has already married one femalc, and who is trying to marry, elope with, or carry off three or four others; all of which is prevented by said female detective. Miss Kate Denin played the "Detective"—in which she assumed a half dozen disguises—with that degree of talent and versatility for which she is accredited. Mrs. Sophie Edwin personated the loving and confidant wife of the villain, to whom she was secretly married, with feeling and fervor. Mrs. Jackson ably played the part of the principal young lady whom the villain wished (for the sake of her property) to inveigle into a marriage with him. Mr. Wilson personated the villain aforesaid, and Mr. McCullough the important part of a male detective, whose simple duty seemed to be to do nothing but get handcuffed by the scoundrels he wished to arrest, to be cast in prison on their accusations, and, by his dullness, set off the remarkably brilliant exploits of the female detective. The piece drew well, which was all that could be asked of it; and served to add to the variety of that dramatic feast which Manager Maguire is weekly serving up at the Opera Housc.

Uncle Tom's Cabin was revived on Thursday night, and will be presented as the featnre for to-day's matinée. This evening, the "Dashaways" havc a benefit, and present Asmodeus, or, The Little Devil's Share, and the farce of Delicate Ground. The benefits that the members of this association have rendered to the community will, we trust, be in part receiprocated by their being the recipients of a bumper of a benefit to night—this being the only class of bumpers a grateful public can give them in return for the great good they have done.

On Monday evening, Mr. Richard Younge, a tragedian of reputation, who recently arried here from Australia, will make his first appearance, as "Sir Giles Overreach." Mr. Younge's name is a familiar one to the European theatres, and he was to have supported the late Gustavus Brooke in his Australian engagement.

—

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—The Bohemian Girl, brought out last Saturday night, was very smoothly rendered and had quite a successful run of four consecutive nights. Miss Emma Howson, as "Arline," sang the music very creditably and to the general satisfaction of her audiences. If the young prima donna did not fulfil the exacting requirements of some of our more highly-cultivated music lovers, she at least gave them an "Arline" who looked and acted the character better than any who have preceded her. Her younger sister, Miss Clelia Howson, made a very youthful "Gipsy Queen"—which may be set down as its principal fault. Her voice and action have not yet ripened into the fullness required for the part; the lady stands in the half-enviable position of being yet too young to personate effectively not only that, but the characters she is usually cast for. The pleasant-voiced tenor, Mr. Herberte, would certainly render his parts more acceptably if he would throw more animation in both the singing and the acting of them. With the exception of "The Fair Land of Poland," in the last scene, his "Thaddeus" was too tamely given; though his rendering of that song plainly proved him capable of better things if he would only conquer the general apathy which pervades his personations. This song was encored every evening. The spirit and animation shown in it was always a pleasant surprise for the audience. Mr. Frank Howson as the "Count," was good; and Mr. Leach, in his excellent characterization of "Devilshoof," added materially to the success of the opera. The concerted pieces and chorus, were excellently given; and the opera, as a whole, proved a very pleasant and enjoyable entertainment.

The Night Dancers, a light and very pleasant English opera, was given, for the first time in America, on Thursday night. There is so much familiar music in it—especially in the last act—which has been popularized by political and Ethiopian airs, that the audience raised the same objections to it that the countryman did to Hamlet, upon seeing it played for the first time—that "it was too full of quotations." When we add that the refrains of "Marching Through Georgia," "The Union Fovever," and "Johnny Comes Marching Home," are all plainly traced in the beautiful airs which the female chorus sing, while appearing as the Wilies, or Night Dancers, the point will be seen. The Night Dancers was composed by E. Loder for Madame Albertazzi (sister of Mr. Frank Howson, and aunt of the younger members of the troupe of the same name,) and was produced in London some twenty years ago. So the priority of the opera, like the question between Hamlet and the quotations, is easily settled.

Neither Miss Emma nor Miss Clelia Howson have appeared in any parts which they sustain so charmingly, both as to singing and action, as those of this opera. The female chorus came out quite brilliantly in the last act, and gave undeniable evidence of musical aud vocal attainment. We are sure that The Night Dancers will prove a popular opera, and will draw well as soon as its merits become known to the public. It will be repeated to-night.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.—The Italian Opera season, at the Metropolitan Theatre, has completed its second week in a manner equally gratifying to the manager and satisfactory to the musical public, especially to the subscribers, who have had a greater variety of entertainment than many of them probably expected. Ernani, Il Trovatore, La Traviata, Lucrezia Borgia, and Norma, have occupied the five regular nights. Norma having also been given on Saturday—an off-night—prior to its regular introduction to the subscribers last evening. Five operas more thoroughly familiar to the public could hardly have been selected; nor could the artists have encountered a severer test than the keen and undivided attention thus relieved from any consideration of the music itself, and devoted entirely to the manner of its performance. From such a test, however, and in spite of crowding recollections of Morelli, Adelaide Phillips, and other favorites, the present company may be said to have risen not only without defeat, but with a reasonable measure of triumph—perhaps enough to warrant us in anticipating for it a more thoroughly successful season, musically and financially, than has fallen to the lot of any company ever collected here. Meantime, there are two or three weak places which demand notice and improvement. The female chorus, though increased in number, lack confidence, or voice, or both; there is room for some energetic training here. The orchestra has not strings enough to balance the wind instruments—a common fault all over the United States, and especially in California, but more than usually noticeable this season: we hope the manager will be able to give us one or two more first violins, and that Mr. Herold will induce the gentlemen on his right to play more softly than they sometimes do. The increased volume of wind, however, arises partly from the fact that the bassoon, an important instrument, is now in the hands of a competent artist—a new face to us—and is played as we do not remember to have heard it here for many years; the exquisite little obligato which commences the tomb scene in Ernani was so well given as to receive a hearty round of applause. There are several other performers in the orchestra who are fully competent to their work, but it is chiefly (and we suppose unavoidably) composed of those who have not that perfect familiarity with the music of opera, and the style of accompanying recitative, which is almost more necessary than mechanical correctness.

The new artists have strengthened the favorable opinion created by their first appearance, and it is difficult to say which has proved the more successful. Signor Milleri has the advantage of being undoubtedly the best basso profundo who ever visited this coast, while Signor Mancusi has to struggle against the inevitable comparison with Morelli, whom we all delighted to honor, and whose imperial presence, powerful and sonorous voice, and unrivalled knowledge of stage business, are fresh in our memory. Mancusi has played "Don Carlos" in Ernani, the "Count de Luna" in Trovatore, and "Giorgio Germont" in Traviata—the last named character being generally, we think, considered his finest impersonation so far. Milleri, as "Silva," in Ernani, "Ferrando" (a minor part, kindly assumed by him) in Trovatore, "Duke Alfonso" in Lucrezia, and "Oroveso" in Norma, has appeared to great advantage. Lucrezia, on Wednesday evening, was marked by the debut of Miss Jenny Landesmann, a young contralto, already favorably known as a concert singer. Her impersonation of "Maffio Orsini" showed great confidence and presence of mind on the stage, a dramatic talent and training quite remarkable in a debutante, and considerable skill in the use of a promising voice: her rendering of the famous "Brindisi" was by no means equal to her singing of some other passages, but was enthusiastically applauded. Signorina Brambilla, the prima donna of the season, is singing her best, and Signor Bianchi appears to be in remarkably fine voice; Messrs. Schraubstadter, Roncovieri and others, deserve creditable mention for their careful rendering of minor characters.

Lucia di Lammermoor will be produced this evening as a non-subscription performance. On Monday, the sixth regular night of the season, Attila will be given, for the first time in ten years.

AT last, after a labor of sixteen years, Mr. S. Austin Allibone has completed his magnum opus, the greatest bibliographical undertaking of this country. In a letter to a friend, dated May 30, he says: "The dictionary of authors which I projected in 1850, and commenced preparing for the press Aug. 1, 1853, was completed last night at twenty-seven minutes after eight." Those who have used Mr. Allibone's first volume, and have become acquainted with its excellences, will be eager for this second and concluding part, which will soon be published by Mr. G. W. Childs, of Philadelphia. The book contains the sum and essence of all bibliography. It is a ready guide to the writings of all the world's authors.

The mausolcum to the memory of Prince Albert, in Hyde Park, is partially finished. It is 160 feet in height, and is to be surmounted by a statue of the prince, upon which Marochetti is now engaged. The work has been going on for two years, and will occnpy two more.

SPRING AND SUMMER FASHIONS.

FASHION, this season, is pleased to be very gay and very peculiar. Odd little bonnets of the quaintest designs form the apex to objects constructed on no architectural model save that of the Pyramids, the base being exceedingly wide and broad, and differing from those ancient Egyptian specimens of art only in the modeling of waist and the projection of arms.

Take the whole effect, however, and, save where there is unnecessary exaggeration, it is not bad. The contrast of color is pleasant without being too glaring. Harmony is insisted upon; and though there are many novelties, and great variety in style, material, and trimming, good taste suggests the impropriety of mixing or overloading with ornament any article of costume, and finds much more elegance in quiet simplicity than in vulgar display.

Embroidery has been revived to an extent which renders it a most important element in ornamenting dresses, suits, skirts, and articles of clothing of all kinds. Scarcely an article of dress comprised in ladies and children's wardrobes but is indebted to this method of producing a highly decorative effect. The fashionable impetus has undoubtedly been given by the beautiful embroidery executed by the GROVER & BAKER Machine, by the furore which it has excited abroad, and the admiration and patronage which it has received in the highest circles. Not only dresses, cloaks, suits, Balmoral skirts, and the more important articles of clothing are now ornamented with machine embroidery, but parasols (which are afterward dotted, or filled up with beads,) slippers, both kid and satin, and gaiter boots, both for walking and visiting wear.

This fashionable rage renders the possession of a GROVER & BAKER Machine indispensable to dress-makers, and most desirable to families where the mother executes most of the sewing, and wishes to dress herself and children handsomely, and, at the same time, economically.

Morning dresses are made of cambric, or pique. If of the latter, they are either gored, or made into a skirt and short jacket, which is worn with a white tucked chemisette. The gored dresses are beautifully embroidered down the seams in a narrow and very simple pattern, and sometimes scolloped out round the bottom; the jackets are also embroidered, and the skirts, either in an apron pattern, as a border, or in small pyramids upon the skirt.

Striped cambrics are very often trimmed with fril's of the material; but plain cambric dresses are extremely pretty trimmed with bands of cumbric of a contrasting color, stitched on with the machine.

We hardly know whether this is the proper place to discuss such matters, but we may just mention, for the benefit of housekeepers, that the newest and most stylish library-table and piano covers are made of plain light brown, or neutral, shades of cloth, stitched upon the edge, and ornamented in the centre with beautiful designs in embroidery machine stitching.

VARIOUS.

MRS. KEBLE, widow of the poet, died recently at Brookside Bournemouth, England, in the same house where her husband died. On the removal of her husband's body to Hursley, she begged that his grave might be kept open for her—she should not be long apart from him. Her words were singularly verified: she survived him but sixty-six days.

The following advertisement appeared in a New York country paper recently, says the Boston Post:

"Manure—Wanted, stable manure. Any person having from five to fifty loads to dispose of will please send word or drop it through the post office."

Not in a New York paper, but in a New Haven paper, by the gentleman recently elected Lieutenant Governor of Connecticut.—"Fact," in a New York Paper.

A widower with seven children recently married in Western New York a widow with five. Each had concealed from the other the fact of the offspring, and the discovery made a pleasant episode.

Illinois is bigger than New England and New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland besides, the latter States having altogether an area of 54,836 square miles, while Illinois has 55,405.

A stuffed eel-skin, with a hook at the end, is the tempting bait that lures the blue fish to his ruin.

A dish of over-done meat recently called out the fire department of Providence.

At Springfield, Mass., a lady sent the following volunteer toast: "Spruce old bachelors, the evergreens of society."

The marriage of Princess Mary of Cambridge and Prince Treck took place on the 12th ult.

Artemus Ward was offered $20,000 and his travelling expenses for a six months' lecturing tour in England.

All the doctors of the Stute were in Portland, Maine, one day lately, and Portland survived.

Peaches are $1 00 a-piece in New York.

ONE of the most brilliant women, among the fashionable throng at the Springs, declared in confidence to a friend that she ascribed the beautiful clearness and richness of her complexion to the use of Davidson's Circassian Bloom.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywhere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Roaches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere two bits we can save the bites and bills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Barnes & Co., New York.

S—T—1860—X. DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

P. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded myself very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all case of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavin etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion. Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. ap7-1y

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person, holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

E GOLDSMITH & Co., at No. 646 Sacramento street, three doors below Kearny, have just received some beautiful new style Garibaldis and Zouave Jackets, that for taste and style are particularly worthy of the attention of our lady readers. They have also a fine assortment of Ladies' Furnishing Goods of the choicest description. French corsets for one dollar. A great variety of French toilet and fancy articles, the newest styles of buttons and dress trimmings, may always be found at Goldsmith's 646 Sacramento street.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend, JOSEPH SPARROW.

DAINTY WORK.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN, D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth Street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
je2 4m NEW YORK.

BREWSTER & CO.'S
Carriage Manufactory,
372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE
WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with
BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S
LIST OF
Late Publications.

Armadale—a Novel—by Wilkie Collins.
The Dove in the Eagle's Nest, by the author of The Heir of Redclyffe.
Shakspeare's Delineations of Insanity, Imbecility and Suicide, by A. O. Kellogg, M. D.
595 Pulpit Pungencies, with a Table of Contents.
Footlight Flashes, by William Davidge, Comedian.
Hidden Depths—12mo.
Lectures on the Study of History; delivered in Oxford, 1859-61—by Goldwin Smith, M. A.
Kate Marstone; or, Happy Hearts Make Happy Homes.
The Mule Singer—a Novel—by Anna Cora Ritchie (Mowatt.)
Poetical Works of Thomas Buchanan Read—New Edition—3 vols.
Devotions of the Ages; or, Collects, Texts, and Lyrics, illustrative of the Christian Year, by Rev. N. G. Allen.
The Adventures of Captain Castagnette (illustrated, by Gustave Dore.
The Mormon Prophet and His Harem, by Mrs. C. V. Waite.
History of the Gipsies, by Walter Simson.
Josh Billings—His Book.
Beyminstre—a Novel—by the author of The Silent Woman, King's Cope, Mr. Warenne, etc.
Garden Vegetables, and How to Cultivate Them, by Fearing Burr, Jr New Edition.
Brief Biographical Dictionary, compiled and arranged by Rev. Chas. Hole and W. A. Wheeler.
Poems of Thomas Hood—New Edition, 12mo.
The Maiden and Married Life of Mary Powell.
The Dean's English, by G. Washington Moon.
President Lincoln Self-portrayed, by John M. Ludlow.
Temperance Recollections—an Autobiography—by John Marsh, D. D.
The Masquerade and other Poems, by John G. Saxe.
Life of Benjamin Silliman, by Geo. P. Fisher, 2 vols
Betsy Jane Ward—Better 3 to Artemus.
The Person of Christ, by Philip Schaff, D. D.
Asiatic Cholera, by R. Nelson, M. D.
The Laws of Short Whist, by J. L. Baldwin.
Speeches of Lord Macaulay—a New Edition, 2 vols.
Treasury of Bible Knowledge, by John Avre.
Martineau's Essays—Philosophical and Theological.
Memoirs of the Right Hon. Richard B. Sheridan, by Thomas Moore.
Gilbert Ragge—a Novel—by the author of A First Friendship.
Short Sermons to Newsboys, by Chas. Loring Brace.
Stanley's History of the Jewish Church, 2d series.
Garden Flowers: How to Cultivate Them, by E. S. Rand, Jr.
Adrift in Dixie, by Edmund Kirke.
The Philosophy of Art, by H. Taine.
Life of Emanuel Swedenborg, by William White.
Baked Meats of the Funeral, by Private Miles O'Reilly.
Recommended to Mercy—a Novel—by the author of Taken Upon Trust, Zoe's Band, etc.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED,
ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street.
jy14 San Francisco.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,
San Francisco, Cal.

THE OBJECT OF THIS INSTITUTION IS TO IMPART a sound practical education at the lowest possible cost, thereby placing its advantages within the reach of all. The Course of Instruction, besides the usual English Branches, comprises Mathematics, Book Keeping, Ancient and Modern Languages, so that boys, whether destined for Mechanical, Commercial or Professional Pursuits, can select such studies as will best fit them for their future avocation.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25
No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance, with a deposit for current expenses, books, etc. No Student will be received without such deposit.

For further information, application may be made to any of the Catholic Clergymen of the State, or to jy1 REV P. I. GREY, President.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 onnces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will he forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must he prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optioual.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM
AT THE
State Fair of California,
The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MAchine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,
General Agent,
111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE
RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.
my10-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

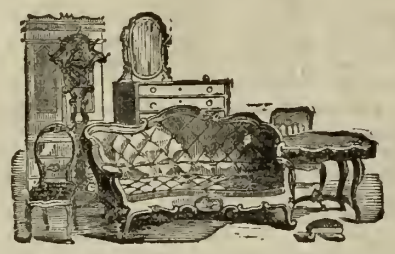
ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the
BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,



And when once used will always he called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner
From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from
Roots and Herbs
Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaiots.
Try Them and You will be Satisfied.
For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
my11-6m San Francisco

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Confectioners,
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

J. PEIRCE,
FURNITURE AND
Bedding Warerooms.

Nos. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.
J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
je16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
je30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.
je17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Babbitoniao System of Writing—the Best System know
W. HOLT,
de9 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

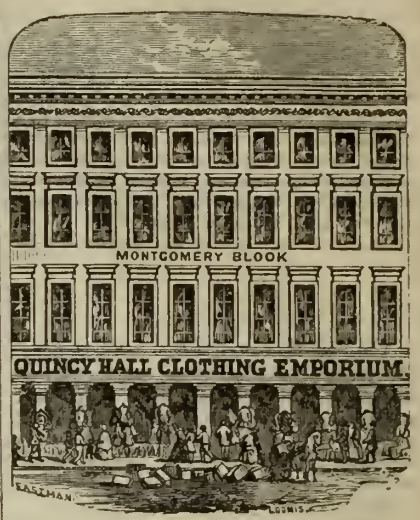
TRY LE COUNT'S INK.

CORNER OF
Sacramento and Montgomery streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Post Office Address: Lock Box No 1477. je30 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S
Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these
LIFE-GIVING PILLS!
Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be
A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,
For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever
AN ETERNAL SPRING!
It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.
THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES
Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—
FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS
Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest
VEGETABLE COMPOUND.
They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.
FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS
And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!



Dr. Maggiel's Pills
Invariably cure the following diseases:
Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.
☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine,
ap14-1y Agents for Pacific Coast.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,
509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)
SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."
ja1 FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

QUINCY HALL,
545, 547, 549 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE LARGEST CLOTHING EMPORIUM in California. The daily sales from the establishment is a sufficient guarantee that the prices are less than those of any other house on the Pacific coast. Here you also find clothing of the best of California Cloth, both for Wholesale and Retail trade. Also, particular attention paid to making up fine clothing to order. jy21

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE
FOR TAX COLLECTOR,
HENRY A. COBB,
OF THE FIRM OF COBB & SINTON, jy21 NO. 407 CALIFORNIA STREET.

RING'S
VEGETABLE AMBROSIA
IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale and retail, by
JOHN F. SNOW,
Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,
je23 San Francisco.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Loue Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.
Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM
Attached to the Hotel,
Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,
Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6-3m Proprietor.

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO
411 CLAY STREET,
BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by
M. D. CARR & CO.
je30-3m

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,
PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,
THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. je15 3m

COME AND SEE ME!

DR. JOHN HEALD,
DENTIST,
HAS REMOVED TO THE
CORNER KEARNY AND CALIFORNIA STS,
Where he will be pleased to see all old friends, and plenty of new ones. Every variety of Dental Operations performed in the best manner, and at prices that shall suit all persons. ☞ENTRANCE ON CALIFORNIA SREET.
ap28-3m

PISCO!
G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.
For sale by V. SQARZA,
my28 Lied street, San Francisco.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

☞ THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,
No 532 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear. or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam-engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,
SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.
Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.
COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing; etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.
PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	fants.....	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings.....	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance-	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00
These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR LIQUID PEARL!

See that the name,
GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped
ON THE BOTTLE.
No other is Genuine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay
ap27-3m San Francisco

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
MARY SMITH, Plaintiff,
vs.
WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one-half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, be awarded to Plaintiff, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled. WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.
A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney, 535 Clay street.
je30-3m

HEUSTON,
HASTINGS
& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE

STOCK OF

CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT

REDUCED PRICES.

je17-3m

A CARD.

M. Howard's Hair Restorative,
NO. 315 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.

THE ABOVE PREPARATION, which has been recently discovered and patented, is purely a Vegetable Extract.

The undersigned are fully aware of the many unsatisfactory and useless preparations for restoring hair that have been introduced to the public, and how little confidence is to be placed in any pretensions to restoring the hair to bald heads, but, we are able to state that it not only prevents the Hair from falling out, but absolutely reproduces it, and that we now have good suits of Hair growing where we were entirely bald. Therefore, as a matter of justice to Mr. Howard, and of consolation to bald heads, we tender him this testimonial. Mr H. keeps the article for sale in bottles, with directions for its use, or applies it himself, as may be desired.

HAVING TRIED MR. HOWARD'S PREPARATION,

San Francisco, April 6, 1866.

Frank M. Thayer, R. A. Redman,
W. S Davis, J. O. Rountree,
T. A. Hall, G. W. Gamble,
A. C. Knox, J. W. Miller,
Bradbury Sanborn, E. C. McComb,
George Wells, D. C. Ross,
Joseph Wells, jy7

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

THIS AFTERNOON.....JULY 28.

Miss Kate Denin,

SUPPORTED BY THE OPERA HOUSE COMPANY,

will appear in John Brougham's comedy,

Uncle Tom's Cabin.

THIS EVENING.....JULY 28,

Benefit of The Dashaways,

On which occasion, the comedy of

ASMODEUS!

And the Farce of

DELICATE GROUND,

will be performed.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - - 25

GUARDIAN'S SALE

OF

REAL ESTATE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California, made on the 19th day of July, A. D. 1866, in the matter of the estates and guardianship of Violet Blair, Jesup Blair and Lucy J. Blair, minors, the undersigned, the guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder, for cash, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Monday, the thirteenth day of August, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock M., at the office of the undersigned, in Rooms Nos. 4 and 5, Barron's Building, northwest corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets, in the city und county of San Fraucisco, where offers or bids will be received, all the right, title, interest and estate of the said Violet Blair, Jesup Blair, and Lucy J. Blair, minors, in and to all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying and being in the said city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows, to wit:

1. The lot on the northerly side of Bryant street, commencing 100 varas westerly from Fourth street, running thence westerly or southwesterly along Bryant street, 100 varas front by a uniform depth, northerly or northwesterly, of 100 varas, being the lot knowu on the official map of the city of the San Francisco as 100-vara Lot No. 179. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-half of said lot.

2. The lot on the southwesterly corner of Main and Folsom streets, fifty varas sqnare. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-half of said lot—subject to lease.

3. The lot on the southerly side of Filbert street, fifty varas square, commencing 50 varas westerly from Powell street, ruuning thence westerly, 50 varas front by a uniform depth southerly of 50 varas, being the lot known ou the official map of the city of San Francisco as 50-vara Lot No. 431. The interest of said minors thereiu is claimed to be an undivided one-half of said lot—subject to lease.

4. The lot on the southeast corner of Dupont and Broadway streets, being sixty feet front on Dupont street by a uniform depth easterly on Broadway of fifty feet. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided oue-half of said lot—subject to lease.

5. Lot on southeast corner of Powell and Greenwich streets, being 137½ feet front on Greenwich street by a uniform depth southerly on Powell street of 206 feet and 3 inches. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided oue-half of said lot—subject to lease.

6. The lot on the northerly side of Silver street, commencing 75 feet easterly from Third street, thence northerly parallel to Third street 70 feet, thence easterly parallel to Silver street 150 feet, thence southerly parallel to Third street 70 feet, hence westerly along Silver street 150 feet to the point of beginniug, being part of the 100-vara Lot No. 85. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-fourth—subject to contract for lease and improvements.

7. The lot next adjoining the above, fifty feet front on Silver street by a uniform depth northerly of 70 feet, being part of 100-vara Lot No. 85. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-fourth.

8. The lot on the southerly side of Silver street, commencing 100 feet easterly from Third street, thence easterly along Silver street 175 feet, thence southerly parallel to Third street 155 feet to Bryant street, thence westerly along the northerly side of Bryant street 175 feet, thence northerly 155 feet to place of beginning, being part of 100-vara Lot No. 85. The interest of said minors thereiu is claimed to be an undivided one-fourth. The same can be sold in subdivisions.

9. Lot on the southeast corner of Sansome and Broadway streets, being fifty feet square. The interest of said minors thereiu is claimed to be an undivided one-eighth—subject to lease,

TERMS OF SALE.—Cash, in gold coin of the United States: ten per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of the sale; balance on confirmation of sale by the Probate Court. Deed to be made (including United States revenne stamps) at purchaser's expense. R. C. ROGERS,
Guardian, etc.

San Francisco, July 28, 1866.

NOTICE.—The remaining undivided interests in said lots, except Parcel No. 9, will be sold at same time.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

Bianchi's Grand Italian Opera Troupe.

NON-SUBSCRIPTION NIGHT,

SATURDAY EVENING - - JULY 28

Will be presented the Opera,

Lucia di Lammermoor,

With

BRAMBILLA, MORLEY, MANCUSI,

AND MILLERI,

in the principal rolos.

MONDAY EVENING, JULY 30,

First Night of Verdi's grand tragic opera, of ATTILA.

Attila, King of the Hnns.....Sr. S. Milleri
Ezio, a Roman General.....Sr. Muncusi
Odahella.....Signorina Elvira Brambilla
Foresto, a cavalier.....Signor Eugénio Bianchi
Uldino, a young slave of Attila..Mr Schraubstadter
Leone.....Mons Roncouvieri

Grand Chorus of Druids, Warriors, etc.

CONDUCTOR.....MR. RUDOLPH HEROLD

Scenery by Mr. Rogers. Costumes by Mr Taylor.

Regular Subscription Nights, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays, commeucing Monday, July 23d

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Dress Circle, Orchestra and Parquette.....$1 00
Reserved seats, 50 cents extra.
Gallery.....50

☞ The Box Office is open from 9 A. M. for the seeuring of reserved seats for season tickets.

AYER'S PILLS.

ARE YOU SICK, FEEBLE and complaining? Are you out of order, with your system deranged nnd your feelings uncomfortable? These symptoins are oi teo the prelude to serious illness. Some fit of sickness is creeping upon you, and should be averted by a timely use of the right remedy. At once TAKE AYER'S PILLS, and cleanse out the disordered humors, purify the blood, and let the [illegible] move on unobstructed in health again. They stimulate the functions of the body into vigorous activity, purify the system from the obstructions which make disease. A cold settles somewbere in the body, and deranges its natural fuuctions. Tbese, if not relieved, react upon themselves and the surroundiug organs, producing general aggrsvation, suffering and derangement. While in this conditiou, and see how directly they restore the natural action of the system, and with it the buoyant feeling of health again. What is true and so apparent in this trivial and common complaint is also true in many of the deep-seated and dangerous distempers. The same purgative effect expels them. Caused by similar obstructions and deraugements of the natural functioos of the body they are rapidly and many of them surely cured by the same means. None who know the virtue of these Pills will neglect to employ them when suffering from the disorders they cure, such as Headache, Foul Stomach, Dysentery, Bilious Complaints, Indigestion, Derangement of the Liver, Costiveness, Constipation, Heartburn, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Worms and Suppression, when taken in large doses.

TAKE AYER'S PILLS,

They are Sugar-Coated, so that the most sensitive can take them easily, and they are surely the best purgative medicine yet discovered.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
jy26-2m and all Dealers.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that, in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco made on the 2d day of April, 1866, in the matter of the Estates of Herman R Haste and Julia Haste, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder, for cash, payable in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Saturday, the 18th day of August, 1866, at twelve o'clock, noon, of that day, at the office of D. P. Barstow, Esq., No 6 Montgomery Block, in the City and County of San Francisco, all the right, title and interest of said minors, Hermao R. Haste and Julia Haste, of, in and to all the one undivided one-half part of all that certain lot of land situated in the City and County of San Francisco, and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Merchant street, 23 feet easterly from the north east corner of Merchant street and Dunbar's Alley; thence running easterly along said line of Merchant street 20 feet 2 1 2 inches; thence at a right angle northerly 68 feet and 9 inches; thence at a right angle westerly 20 feet 2 1 2 inches, and thence at a right angle southerly 68 feet and 9 inches to the point of beginning.

Offers or bids for said property will be received at the office of D. P Barstow, Esq., No. 6 Montgomery Block, from this date till Saturday, the 18th day of August, at twelve o'clock, noon, by the undersigned,

CHRISTIAN KIRK,
Guardian of Herman R. Haste and Julia Haste, minors.
(jy28-td)

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.

THOMAS MAGUIRE, - - Sole Proprietor and Manager.
CHARLES TIBBETTS, - - - - - - Stage Manager.
J. B. MARSHALL, - - - - - - - - Treasurer.

SATURDAY EVENING.....JULY 28,

The Howson English and

ITALIAN OPERA TROUPE,

Loder's Opera of

The Night Dancers.

Gisello.....Miss Emma Howson
Mary.....Miss Clelia Howson
Myrtha.....Mlle Acosta
Albert.....Mr. Henri Herberte
Fridolin.....Mr. Frank Howson
Godfrey.....Mr. John Howson
Duke.....Mr. Wunderlich
Bertha.....Mrs. Hall
Gretchen.....Miss Cameron

Conductor.....Mr. F. A. Howson

Enlarged Chorus and Orchestra. New Scenery painted by Mr. A. Torning.

☞ Box Office now open. Seats may be secured for the week. Books of the Opera for sale at the Box Office.

Dress Circle and Orchestra.....$1 00
Reserved Seats.....50 cents extra
Family Circle.....50 cents
Gallery.....25 cents
Private Boxes.....$10 and $5

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
jy19 1m SAN FRANCISCO.

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,

751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE.

This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY

Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a

PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION

should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other important and interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, Presideot fc17 Business College, San Francisco.

THE PACIFIC INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. my5-3m

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AUCTIONEERS.
Olney & Co., removed to 418 Montgomery street.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.
S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Stell. Pioe and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Weutworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 614 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.
S. W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mill.)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyce & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J. J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N E cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pine

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 606 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. C. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento.

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.
T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.
W S. Pierce, removed to 524 Market, opposite Second

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 11. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 4, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE.

To and Fro—No. 3—By Kuzzilbash.
Podgerings by the Way.
Amusements.
English Writers on America.
Mark Twain at Honolulu.
The Bagne at Toulon—No. 9999.
Up in the "Flies."
Balzac.
A Home Trait and a Home Want.
The Races Racily Reported.
Licensed Thieves.
What Woman Can Do.
At the National Portrait Exhibition

POETRY:

Watching the Flocks.—By Emile Lawson.

[For the Californian.]

WATCHING THE FLOCKS.

THE gentle shepherd-boy,
Who dreams away his life among the hills,
Finds there the purest joy—
Poesy in leaves, and soft songs in the rills.

He calls his sportive lambs
The laughter of the hills; he thinks the breeze
Stirring the fragrant calms,
Dead shepherds—talking to him through the trees.

He hears the rock—half-hid
By throbbing mosses—call in whispers sweet,
"Come to me, wee'st kid!
Come tiniest lamb! I will not bruise thy feet."

When Summer suns are bright,
He prays: "Dear Lord, who giv'st the golden flood!"—
When clouded from his sight:
"Dear Christ, thy soft rains give the flocks their food."

When in the starlit fold
The sleeping lambs bleat softly in their dreams—
Dreams of the flowery wold—
Of gambols by the marge of twinkling streams.

With simple tenderness,
He plucks a mountain-rose and hies to seek
A little shepherdess
With oleander blossoms on her cheek.

EMILIE LAWSON.

EDITORIAL PARAGRAPHS.

MUNCHAUSEN.—Every reader of Blackwood will feel a regret that the soul-stirring adventures of a Confederate officer, which have lent such a vivid interest to its pages, close with the present number. It can be easily imagined that a gentleman who makes nothing of dashing across a wide river and capturing an entire company of Federals, as a slight outside episode of an engagement, does not finally quit the field of his exploits without a struggle. Our hero was wounded—not like an ordinary Yankee—but in a manner and under circumstances worthy of a high-toned Confederate ally. With his arm shattered and the blood "spouting from a large wound in his neck," "the hateful thought" of becoming a prisoner of the vile Yankee, inspired him with such superhuman courage that he mounted his horse and rode some miles away. The driver of an ambulance, who afterward persisted in running away with him, was obliged to stop by a cocked pistol in the hands of this wounded hero. With a ball through his windpipe, a hole in his right lung, and a perforated left arm, he lies in bed with an unshattered sword and revolver, ready to shoot down the first of the enemy's troopers who should enter. In this physically maimed but spiritually-unconquered condition, he passes out of the pages of Blackwood, and it may be some satisfaction to the trembling American reader to know that he eventually takes up his abode on English soil. Apropos, we regret to hear that Belle Boyd Hardinge, who also excited the sympathies of our English brethren, has not been favorably received on the boards of an English stage, however successful she has been as an actress during the rebellion.

WAR MAP.—A. Gensoul, of the Pacific Map Depot, 511 Montgomery street, has just published a very useful map of reference, embracing the territory of the seat of war in Europe, with the boundaries of Prussia, Austria, Italy, etc., and the locality of all their principal cities and towns clearly defined. It appears to be very carefully and correctly compiled.

NEW OPERAS.—We have received from M. Gray, No. 613 Clay street, the librettos of the following operas: Halevy's La Juive, Meyerbeer's L'Africaine, and Crispino e la Comare by the brothers Ricci. Interspersed with the English and Italian words are the melodies of several arias, choruses, etc.

EPIDEMIC CHOLERA: A treatise on the modes of treatment of this disease, their respective results, and directions for prevention; and what to do in cases of sudden emergency, by John F. Geary, M. D., has been laid on our table. H. H. Bancroft & Co. are the publishers.

[For the Californian.]

PODGERINGS BY THE WAY.

No. 2.

IT is astonishing how much encouragement one gets from his friends, when he sets out to write something for their express edification and amusement. An unappreciative and matter-of-fact friend of mine, after perusing THE CALIFORNIAN of last week without ever changing countenance, going through gay and grave without the slightest expression or contraction of a muscle, threw down the paper with a yawn, and remarked, "Great Heavens! you have used up a whole page of three columns, and only got as far as Benicia. When are you coming home?" Now, that sort of a chap should travel only on express trains. He would take a first class passage on the telegraph wire or a streak of lightning if he could. He would have me go over the mountains—go fishing, as I did—make a visit at Virginia City, and home—all in one chapter. It is a great consolation to reflect that I am not the first individual that has was written a whole chapter without getting a great way on his subject. I wish to announce that I am not in a hurry, if my friend is, and am not going to increase my speed to please him. I am like the San José cars, which could make the trip in two hours if they pleased, as everybody knows; but, as they don't please, three hours is the consequence. What a man might do is seldom what he does do. It wears out the best machinery to force it up to its full powers all the time—and it isn't economy.

I left my readers and Benicia simultaneously at the end of my last chapter. The steward, commiserating the gaunt and hungry appearance of the half-dozen passengers that came aboard at that attenuated city, forthwith sounded the tocsin for dinner to those who had not dined, and supper to those who had. The additions to our number, rescued from further suffering at Benicia, looked as if they had been cast away there a couple of days previous; and, being so unfortunate as to have a seat near them, I had indisputable evidence of their exhausted state. The consequence was, the California Steam Navigation Company made a net profit out of me of at least seventy-five cents, and must have been a dollar and a half a piece out of pocket on the acquisitions. They ate everything within their reach, beginning on what was nearest—which happened to be sauce for the pudding. The gentleman next me was not at all particular in what shape it came. He took everything suggested by the waiter, and when halfway down the bill, accommodatingly accepted a plate of soup that I had ordered early in the action, but which, owing to the dilatory movements of the waiter, and alarmed for my chances, I had gone on without. Subseqnently he took fish, which arrived between a course of pudding and pie; and, after ice cream, added a postscript in the shape of a solitary cold boiled potato that had miraculously escaped his earlier attention; and finally left, after filling his pockets with nuts and raisins, to be taken internally when he had shaken himself well and made a little room—which he accomplished in about half an hour by vigorously striding up and down the forward deck. After one or two attempts and failures to force another nut down, I felt sorry for that man, and commisserated the great oversight of nature not to have provided him with that sort of a pouch under his jaws that the pelican and a certain species of the monkey tribe are blessed with. It would be very handy to mankind when setting out on a long journey to Benicia or elsewhere. Of course, boardinghouse-keepers would object to supplying a day's rations ahead of the bill.

At the supper-table, opposite me, sat a woman. No unusual circumstance; that woman was a mother—another common occurrence. She had two children—a third fact not novel. They had appetites—a generally understood thing also. This mother—ignoring the theory that they were at liberty to eat their money's worth, and probably from force of habit, which was to cater to large appetites by supplying the bulkiest substance at the least cost—in a spirit of liberality truly commendable, laid on each of their plates—as a foundation—a quarter section of underdone watermelon. She sat near the clerk, who, being a very good-looking young man, (by the way, it was the Yosemite not the Capital,) engrossed a considerable part of the lady's attention, and the children none at all. They continued to munch on the watermelon, of which nothing remained but the outside skin. The boy was hard at work on that, but the little girl, having more enterprise and confidence, ceased operations at this juncture and put forth a proposition for fresh supplies: and after by persevering efforts attracting the attention of her mother—who continued very devoted to the clerk—another quarter section was administered to each. The mother finally—having dined principally upon the compliments she received—rose, and seizing the children dragged them away—but with childlike tenacity they adhered to the diminishing water-melon, and took the balance of the fruit course on deck.

After a comfortable smoke, which, next to woman, is Heaven's best gift, I set out in quest of my stateroom. I found it, and at the same time encountered on one side of me the lady passenger in the act of towing two very sleepy children to bed, and on the other my Benicia friend with the delicate appetite. I was sandwiched between the two. The theory of cause and effect flashed through my mind, and I had my misgivings that my location was not desirable; however, I went to bed and went to sleep. I dreamed that I owned seven-eighths of the stock of the California Steam Navigation Company and didn't owe the Bank of California a red cent, and not a share stood in the name of W. C. Ralston. I did not like the old Board of Directors and concluded to turn them all out; turn everybody out except Ben Hartshorne and Horace Morrison; let them remain on account of previous good characters. I had about made up my mind to buy the Whipple and put her on the route to the newly-discovered and popular district of San Rafael, and see if the trip could not be made in less than two hours; and was proceeding to see how much stock could be corralled before declaring a dividend, when I was startled from my golden reveries by a bump, a crash, and a groan. Starting up, I listened. Another bump against the partition and another groan, fairly roused me. I listened. Somebody in the adjoining room was apparently in trouble. There was a sound between a groan and a snort, accompanied by a gurgling sound, as if the party was in the last stages of suffocation. Great Heavens! thinks I, there is murder most foul going on in that room. I sprang up; bolted out into the cabin. All was still; nobody visible. I tried the door of the room: it yielded, and I entered by the light of the full moon which shone in the window. I discovered my Benicia friend and neighbor at the dinner-table, lying on his back on the floor, mouth open; and as I gazed at him to see if he was dead, he gave a snort, and, as the sailors say, "fetched" a sudden roll to leeward against the partition. This was the noise I had heard. My friend was having a good old style of nightmare. I tried to rouse him; it was useless. I shook him, punched him. No use; every time I did so he would groan and mutter. I listened to hear what he had to say, and found he was still going it, in imagination, on the dinner question. I gave him a punch, and he drawled out, "Corn beef? Yes. No gravy, no gravy." I retired and left him kicking about.

I had hardly got to bed again before a wail arose from the other stateroom. "Ah!" said I to myself, "that's green watermelon." I imagine there were two good sound cases of incipient cholera; and, between the howls of those two children, the groans and snortings of my other neighbor, I was defrauded of my natural rest the balance of the night. I was somewhat compensated, however, by the confidential conversation of two young ladies who had risen several hours too soon, and were entertaining each other, pending their arrival at Sacramento, with little personal experiences in the courting line. With one of them the course of true love had run very rough. She recounted the rise, progress and failure of four distinct affairs, which had shattered her tender heart considerably; but she had a "fourth feller" in hand then, and had strong hopes that this would be a sure thing. He had given her a valuable ring, which she was bound to hang on to at all hazards. The other young lady acknowledged to being engaged to three at that time, but had not fully made up her mind which to take, and she was waiting to see which one would pan out the best. At this juncture we arrived at Sacramento.

PODGERS.

THE BAGNE AT TOULON.

No. 9999.

"YOU are going to Toulon!" exclaimed my neighbor, the avocat, with some surprise.

"I am going there, because I cannot help passing it, unless I take steamer from Genoa to Marseilles; which would not be the way to see much of the country."

"You will perhaps, then, pay a visit to the Bagne, the only one now existing in France?"

"I shall try; although it must be a painful sight. But I find no phase of humanity uninteresting."

"I will give you a letter to a forcat (convict) there."

"A letter to a galley-slave?"

"Yes. He is a person in whom I take great interest. It may be as well not to give you any written communication to the man himself, as it would put you to the trouble of getting it read and passed by the prison authorities, and others perhaps, previous to presentation: but I will put you in the way of getting at him, and speaking to him. You shall be introduced to one of his patrons, an adjoint of the mayor."

"But I am already promised an introduction to the Préfet Maritime."

"Capital! With that backing the one I shall give you, you will be able to perform an act of charity. It will be a good deed on your part. Only put yourself in his place—"

"Much obliged."

"And think how gratified you would feel at receiving a friendly visit from without."

"Is he one of your clients, this worthy forcat? One of the innocents whom your potent eloquence has failed to whitewash?"

"No. I did not defend him, although the prisoner was well defended."

"And the resulting verdict?"

"Guilty, with extenuating circumstances. The sentence, Hard labor for life."

"And the crime?"

"In the first place, it is doubtful to me whether a crime was committed; secondly, if a crime there was, I believe the prisoner innocent of it. There might have been a crime; but he was not the guilty party. The imputed offence was fratricide."

"He has, therefore, at least escaped the guillotine."

"Yes; and, through the mitigation of our law's severity, he was also spared the branding on the shoulder with the letters T. F. P., 'Travaux Forcés a Perpetuité.' But in this very place where we are now walking up and down, and which you have called our town's unroofed saloon, he was subjected to an infliction, now also abolished, namely, an hour's public exposure on a scaffold, as infamous, fratricide, and civilly dead."

"And probably hooted and insulted accordingly?"

"Exactly the contrary. The propriety of his attitude and behavior, coinciding with the general belief of his innocence and pity for his consequently cruel position, gained him universal sympathy. Instead of harsh words, or worse, a collection of money was made on the spot, to procure him comforts during his journey to the place of punishment."

"But what was the cause of this discrepancy between the popular feeling and the jury's verdict?"

"Well; the case is difficult as well as curious, and still remains in some measure mysterious. You are aware of the innumerable and bitter disputes occasioned in France by the minute division of property. For a square foot of ground, for half a tree, for a crumbling mud wall, for a creaking bit of furniture, sometimes even for a few pots and pans, or half-worn clothes, families will fall into variance. This was another instance of quarrel caused by a trumpery inheritance unfairly appropriated. Alexandre Fourrier and his elder brother, Pierre Francois, each believed that the other had got more than his share, and consequently indulged in very unbrotherly expressions of feeling. Francois was even heard to use words threatening his brother's life. 'Mind what you are about,' he said. 'Je te tue; I'll kill you'"

"That was very bad."

"Yes, and no. Hard words break no bones. Hot-tempered people, under provocation, often say more than they have the slightest intention of meaning. Listen to the compliments often interchanged between husband and wife amongst our lower classes, and then see how they make it up afterwards. Parents, even with you, sometimes tell their children they will break their necks; and yet they do not break them the more for that. I hold that Francois's 'Je te tue' was not a bit more serious in its real purport."

"It would, nevertheless, have an ugly look when proved in evidence."

"True; and could Francois have foreseen the consequences, he would have curbed his temper and held his tongue. Had he really intended to commit the murder, he would have refrained from announcing that intention."

"At least, it was a great imprudence."

"Doubtless, as was proved by the event. The other fearing, or pretending to fear, that his life was in danger, procured a pistol, which he constantly carried, loaded, in his pocket. One evening he was found lying in a field, close to a half-open gate, bleeding to death from a wound in the hip. The pistol in his pocket was discharged. Carried into the house, the only articulate and intelligible words which he uttered before expiring were 'Cochon de frere!'—'Pig of a brother!' Those words were the cause of Francois's condemnation."

"And well they might be."

"They might merely be the delirious expression of his habitual train of thought. There were marks of footprints brought as evidence against Francois. His counsel insisted that the shoes in question should be tried on the father, who refused. They were tried on by force, and found to fit him perfectly. After Francois's condemnation there came out very grave charges against the father, a man of fierce passions and moody temper. The whole family were thrown into prison—father, mother, sisters, and all. I hold that, for his mother's sake, Francois had said nothing against his father. I believe him to have been a martyr, sacrificing himself and letting matters take their course on her account. The father hung himself in prison."

"Very strange that, if he had done no wrong."

"The family were immediately set at liberty. The father's suicide was construed into a confession of guilt. From that moment everybody believed in the innocence of the convicted prisoner. It is certain that, if the suicide had preceded instead of following the condemnation, it would have been productive of the same benefit to the convict as it was to the rest of the family. But it happened too late. Judgment had been pronounced, and could not be reversed. He was first sent to Brest, where he figured under the singular number of 333,550. He is now, as I have told you, at Toulon. By great exertions his sentence has been remitted from hard labor for life to a limited period—an immense alleviation. But he has still four years to remain in confinement. We are trying further to diminish that. As to the hard labor, he has been relieved of it by being classed with the 'incurables.' See him at Toulon. Your visit may possibly do good."

Before starting, Fourrier's mother and sister, apprised of my intention, came to meet me at the avocat's house. The first, a hale, apple-checked old woman, could hardly speak for emotion; but, without asking leave, kissed me affectionately, as if I were her child himself. The sister, a tidy, middle-aged, hard-working woman, burst into tears as soon as she entered the room, seized my hand, and stammered out as well as she could, "You will try and see my brother, then?"

"Yes; I will endeavor to speak to him."

"O, then, give him this from me," again squeezing my hand. "Tell him to try and live for four years longer. Tell him that we only live in the hope of seeing him back again."

A flight by rail to the foot of Mont Cenis; a tramp on foot over Mont Cenis; another railway flight from Susa to Turin and Genoa; a scramble-scramble along the Corniche from Genoa to Nice, sometimes on foot, sometimes on wheels, with the blue Mediterranean on the left, and olive-clad mountains to the right, all the way along; and again by rail from Nice to Toulon—the whole of this distance had to be traversed, and, to confess the truth, enjoyed; but they are foreign to my present narrative, except as taking me to Toulon.

Often, however, my enjoyment was dashed with the recollection of the task that lay before me. Often, without even shutting my eyes, I could see the mother's attitude of helpless grief, and the care-worn face of the more impulsive sister. Often I wished I had had nothing to do with the business. What a fool I, a foreigner, had been to undertake to confront official formalities and impediments, sure to be tiresome, perhaps unpleasant.

At the fourth station from Toulon, reckoning eastward, a village, Sollies-Pont, is pointed out, severely ravaged by cholera, brought, my informant assures me, by that river—that quick-running stream of water there.

"Surely not," I observed in surprise. "The stream would rather tend to keep disease away. The stream, no doubt, was running and the cholera raging at the same place and the same time; but one was hardly the cause of the other."

"O, yes, it was; else it wouldn't have been so bad. The living were insufficient to bury the dead. They were obliged to get volunteer forcats from the Bagne to come and dig the graves and put the corpses in. They behaved very well, indeed, those forcats did. Not a bit afraid. And they touched nothing—did not take the value of a pin—would not even go through a vineyard without somebody to bear witness that they refrained from gathering the grapes. The préfet complimented them in a handsome speech, praising them highly, and holding out hopes of mitigation of their sentences."

"Good! I am glad of that," I said. And then the thought occurred that poor Fourrier could be none the better for the circumstance. The favor intended by making him "incurable" would, at the same time, cut him off from all opportunity of proving his desire to be useful to society. It would be a too glaring inconsistency to allow a prisoner, privileged with indulgences on the ground of bodily infirmity, to go and merit further advantages by performing the terrible duty of interring corpses infected with cholera.

That walking over Mont Cenis and along the Italian coast has somewhat shabbified my travelling attire. I had not bargained—no tourist does—for dust, drenching rain, and scorching sunshine. I had had, however, a taste of each. At Toulon, with the letters I have to deliver and receive, there is no choice but to go to the best, that is, the most expensive, hotel. And, while performing the part of rolling-stone, I have gathered no moss by the way as yet. My cash-bag is growing beautifully less. I know no banker in Toulon, and no banker knows me; and I have to get back again as well as I had to get here. A new suit of clothes, therefore, is out of the question. I shall do very well as I am. My hat, too, is quite passable, only the edge of the top of the chimney-pot shows a slight wound on its epidermis. Nobody in the streets will see it; if they do, no matter. While making a call, I can hold it in such a way as to hide the blemish. Fresh gloves and my Sunday shoes will make a perfectly presentable morning costume. Bien ganté et bien chaussé, on va partout. An evening invitation must perforce be declined.

Toulon is generally a busy place, full of all sorts of strangers, illustrious and otherwise. I am put into a first-floor front of the hotel, a chamber for generals and plenipotentiaries. The master, just returned from the country (the sou came in next day, and the wife, I think, the day after,) hands me a letter with a very official-looking outside aspect. It raises me in his opinion. I open it. It encloses another addressed to the Contre-Admiral, then acting Prefet Maritime. I am in for it now. With this, and the one I have in my pocket, there is no decent loophole for retreat.

"At what o'clock is the table d'hote dinner?"

"At six, monsieur."

At six I enter the dining-room. Nobody. Enter a waiter. "Where is the table d'hote?" "Here, monsieur."

"And the people who dine at it?" "You, monsieur."

"Give me some dinner, then? Serve, at once, what you have readiest at hand."

As soon as he is gone, a passing traveller inquires in an undertone for news of "the malady." Nobody mentions cholera to ears polite. I could give no news. He tied his comforter round his neck, buttoned his paletot, and went to take the next train.

Next morning to business in right good earnest, but with a lingering wish to avoid the great people, if possible. Doing antechamber, running the gantlet, and forcing one's way through porters, sentinels, gendarmes, door-openers, clerks, and the various safeguards with which authority is obliged to fence itself in, is distasteful to many besides myself. The feeling will be understood, and needs no explanation. I will first deliver my letter addressed to M. Margolle, an adjoint to the mayor, to be opened, in his absence, by his brother-in-law, M. Zurcher, both men of letters, who write excellent books in collaboration.

I find the house with difficulty. My driver does not seem to know the town, and this is outside it. Is he one of the strangers arrived to replace the runaway population? M. Margolle is absent, M. Zurcher not. A tall, handsome man, but evidently suffering from illness, receives me with kind and charming courtesy. He knows Fourrier and his story well, and has been instrumental in procuring the partial remission of his sentence. He himself has been tormented lately with neuralgic pains, but is better to-day. He will take me to the admiral and accompany me to the Bagne, calling for me at the hotel at two in the afternoon.

Charming! Capital! It rolls on castors. The thing is done. The influential and well-known Frenchman taking the Englishman under his wing, the latter will have only to walk over the course and fulfil his promise as easily as it were a call on an ordinary acquaintance. Meanwhile, shall I not take mine ease in mine inn? I do take it.

Nevertheless, as two o'clock draws near, I begin to grow a little fidgety, and occupy a seat outside the hotel, awaiting my benevolent visitor. Soon after two, instead of M. Zurcher, an employe from the Mairie, in natty uniform, draws near; and, ascertaining who I am, delivers a letter. It was not exactly that which I wanted, although it is infinitely better than nothing. M. Zurcher writes that his pains have returned, and compel him to keep house; he encloses a letter to the commissaire of the Bagne. With that, and what I have besides, I shall make my way easily, he says.

Shall I? There is no help for it, if I shall not. To the admiral at once. I shall find him, they tell me, at the Majorité, or Etat-Major de la Marine. I do not find him. He is not there, but at the Préfecture. There, I am introduced into an antechamber occupied by an aide-de-camp, and some naval officers pacing to and fro, as if they were on a quarter-deck. Great politeness. My letter is sent in, and before many minutes I am admitted to the presence.

"You are recommended by one of my oldest comrades," said the admiral, with unaffected good nature; "what can I do for you?"

I explain that I wish to see the interior of the Bagne, and especially to speak to the forcat Fourrier.

"Certainly." Addressing the aide-de-camp, "Write a request to the commissaire that Monsieur may see the Bagne and Fourrier. Only, you know, if he is under lock and key, he will not be visible to anybody."

The dungeons at the Bagne for refractory subjects (indociles) are said to be something terrible. It is stated, that, if they were shown, their continuance would not be tolerated by public opinion. And yet there must be some means of preventing criminals from having their own way in further criminality. In any case, neither those cells nor their occupants are open to public inspection.

"I do not think that probable," I interposed. "He has never incurred a single day's punishment."

"So much the better; you will be able to see him, then. I remember hearing him mentioned before. He seems to have friends who take an interest in him."

At that moment, I noticed the direction of the admiral's eye. It glanced at the wound on my hat, which I had clean forgotten. Not being a diplomatist, I fear my face betrayed some slight symptom of mortification.

Smiling, he added that I was to take to the Etat-Major an order to visit the arsenal, which contains the Bagne within its walls. There, they would give me a "planton," or sailor attendant, to conduct me to the commissaire of the Bagne.

The audience is at an end. Thanks to the admiral's frank and simple manners, it has passed off much more agreeably than I anticipated. I retire with the aide-de-camp, who writes the necessary orders, and dismisses me with perfect courtesy. I go to the Majorité. They give me my planton, and we enter the gates of the arsenal together.

Within the arsenal is a busy scene, resembling other dockyards and arsenals, except for the presence of the forcats performing various slavish work. It is, after all, a cheerful spot to labor in. There are trees and water, air and sunshine, glimpses of the town through the arsenal gates, with the mountains beyond all towering in the distance. It is a labyrinth of long ranges of buildings and naval stores, through which a stranger trying to thread his way would find himself incessantly cut off by water. For necessary daily communication, there are slight wooden bridges and ferry-boats worked by forcats. But for the shame and the public exposure, I should say that a convict would greatly prefer this place to penitentiaries, or any other form of isolated confinement.

Nor do the forcats all look wretched. They crowd their carts over bridges with a run and a laugh. The ordinary set of culprits are riveted two and two, never separating, day or night. "Eprouvés," tried, well-conducted prisoners, carry their irons singly, with no human clog attached to them. The costume is hideous: red cap, red vest, and trousers of a frightfully ugly yellow. Of the three primitive colors, yellow is the least pleasing to many eyes. Yellow flowers (except in species, as the rose, where that hue is a rarity) are less sought for, I think, than blue and red. But then also there are good yellows and bad yellows. The forcat's yellow has a bright, staring, glaring, vulgar tinge, which catches the eye like a sign-post or a personal deformity, and is suggestive of pestilence, poisonous plants, moral jaundice, and everything else that is corrupt and offensive. A prisoner who, like a bad shilling, comes back to the Bagne after being discharged, is distinguished by one yellow sleeve dishonorably contrasting with his red vest; after a second relapse, by two. It is rarely that a third arm is required to display a triple badge of disgrace. A green cap marks prisoners sentenced for life.

My planton is an active, obliging little fellow, sharp as a needle, and probably not deaf to the remarks of visitors. Anxious to do the honors of the place, he would show me the Taureau, submarine steam-ram, which is to rip open ships' bellies under water, as the rhinoceros disembowels his antagonists when he catches them on his nasal horn. A gang of forcats passes us, showing their naked heads in profile. What a lot to frighten a phrenologist! I had already noticed some not at all bad faces, but these heads present everything that is exaggerated and unbalanced in cranial form.

"Have you many educated persons here?" I ask.

"Plenty; bankers, advocates, huissiers, notaries, priests. At the bazaar, where things made by the forcats are sold for their benefit, you will find exceedingly well-mannered individuals."

"We must reserve that and other things for to-morrow."

I am naturally anxious to get at Fourrier, and give my companion a sketch of his story. He listens attentively. No harm will be done if he reports it.

There is no appearance of being so near a prison. Nothing announces the home of criminals, most of whom have lost all hope on earth. A high-arched wooden bridge is the isthmus which conducts from the arsenal to the peninsula and the floating islands o. punishment. The site of the locality, amidst blue waters and clear skies, would of itself give you any other idea than that of breathing an atmosphere of wickedness. So little has the Bagne the aspect of a prison, that you are inside it before you are aware. You simply behold buildings covering a large space of ground, widespread and rambling rather than lofty, with little to indicate their purpose.

The first step to be taken now, is to present myself to the commissaire and obtain his countenance. I am ushered to an upper room, where I find a gentleman in quiet but handsome uniform, behind a most business-looking library table. He receives me politely, but in the way in which you receive people when you have not the slightest idea what they are come about. He takes my letters, retires to the recess of a window to read them, and returns with an altered countenance and manner.

"You are quite en regle, monsieur," he cordially observes.

I bow, as in duty bound.

"Perfectly en regle. We will do what we can to comply with your wishes. Monsieur Asterisk, if you please!"

Monsieur Asterisk answers his superior's summons. He is a tall, stout man, with a broad, pale, colorless face, and a subdued expression of great intelligence.

"Monsieur is an Englishman," continues the commissaire, "well recommended, who desires to see the interior of the Bagne, and also to speak with No. —— let me see," referring to the letter, "with No. 9999. You will please give him a competent guide."

"Ah, No. 9999!" said M. Asterisk, raising his eyes to the ceiling to consult his memory. "No. 9999 is Fournier."

"Extraordinary!" observed the chief. "I have only to name a number, and you at once name the party belonging to it."

"After so many years of service, I have naturally acquired the faculty," M. Asterisk modestly replies. "The gentleman can easily see the Bagne and also speak with Fournier."

"His name is Fourrier," I interposed, "Pierre Francois; in the Salle des Incurables."

"The same. But, I beg pardon, he is Fournier; has always been Fournier at the Bagne."

With so important and well-memoried an official it was not worth disputing about a letter; so I acquiesced in his orthography, and prepared to take my leave.

"Tell Fournier to be in readiness. You can now visit all you require," said the commissaire, with a courteous smile. "Pray give my compliments to M. Zurcher. I shall be glad to hear of his better health."

Here let me, once for all, testify to the polite and obliging treatment which I met with from every one with whom I had to do at Toulon.

With an adjutant, therefore, added to my planton—quite a suite—I commence my round of inspection, which must be briefly described. A long room, lodging some two hundred convicts, but for its extreme cleanliness and one or two minor accessories, might be taken for a wild beasts' den. It is all bars, and bolts, and boards. Amongst those accessories are, at the further end, a crucifix, to remind the guilty in this world of the Savior who died to redeem them in the next, and a letter-box; for the prisoners have free permission to write to their friends, subject, of course, to perusal before posting. Nor is reading forbidden, in some wards at least; Victor Hugo's Misérables having been listened to with great interest. The entrance door of this room is formed of iron bars, resembling an extra-strong park gate; so that even when shut everything that passes inside is visible to the guards without. The bed is a long wooden bench slightly raised at the head, whose surface is softened by a slight mattress for the éprouvés only. One blanket is the covering; but Toulon, be it remembered, is in the south. At the bed's head are placed the rations of black-brown bread allowed to each individual. All along the foot runs an iron bar, to which the chains are fastened when their wearers retire to rest.

There is a Salle des Blessés, a ward for the wounded—and how they get wounded is often known only to the forcats themselves. There is a bathroom, a kitchen, and besides that a much larger kitchen for the hospital, where the cooking is superintended by worthy, self-denying Sisters of Charity.

That door opposite leads out of the Salle des Incurables. Fourrier is coming out to meet us. Would I like to see the hospital first? It is only up this flight of steps. Certainly. Very well; he can wait a few minutes at the bottom. The pans I notice on the steps contain disinfectant substances; for "the malady" has not spared the Bagne. The hospital, roomy, airy, light, is the acme of neatness and cleanliness. Not a trace of offensive smell perceptible. True, the patients are not numerous. One, an Arab, sitting up in bed to eat some soup, has the eyes of a wildcat staring out of his fleshless face. The sheets are as white as you would wish for yourself; but there is still the chain fastening the sick man to his bed. It quits him only when he ceases to breathe.

Down stairs again to find my man. That must be he, pale, thin, standing with his back to the wall, surrounded by a throng. There is quite a concourse of people of all sorts; other forcats, douaniers, employés, and I know not what, besides ourselves. Confidential talk is impossible, and I must shape the interview ascordingly.

Some people have real faces, others have only facial masks; but it is not hard to distinguish which is a face and which is only a mask put on. The individual before me has a face; and on it is written unmistakably, "Misfortune, when it cannot be got over, must be borne. I will go through with this bearing it patiently, though sorrowfully." He trembles with emotion.

(Another pair of eyes and ears afterwards informed mo that, while I was in the hospital, the other forcats were at him with "Come, Fourrier, pack up your things! You are going away at last. Here is a great man come to let you out. Make up your bundle as fast as you can!" and such like teasing speeches.)

"You are Fourrier?" I said.

"Yes, monsieur, I am."

"I should have known you from your likeness to your sister. When I left, she and your mother were well. They beg you to be patient for their sakes."

The poor man bowed his head.

"The mayor of your village instructs me to say that when you return you will be well received and find plenty of employment."

He looked up, touched by the assurance, but also, I fear, a little disappointed, having, probably, hoped for still better news. The curious group showed no signs of retiring, so I determined to make what use I could of their presence.

"And Maitre Le Beau," I continued, raising my voice and looking round, "a distinguished advocate, who has carefully followed your case from the outset, is convinced of your innocence—that you did not commit the crime for which you are detained here."

Sensation amongst the bystanders.

"I never did any harm to any one," was all he answered, in a low, clear voice.

"Have you anything to say to me before I leave?"

"Nothing, monsieur."

"I shall see your mother and your sister on my return. Have you anything you wish me to say to them?"

"Nothing, monsieur."

"Good by, then, till we meet again."

I subsequently learned, through a letter to my friend, that he had a deal to say, but refrained from saying it for fear of the surveillance of spies and informers. Possibly, at the Bagne, the slightest whisper is re-echoed to a distance with the loudness of a speaking-trumpet.

When about to retire, I remember the sister's request to pass on to the brother her shake of the hand. Impossible. I could not, for the life of me, do it. His innocence had not yet been officially acknowledged. And if I had, it might have done more harm than good. Suspicion there is easily excited. I had permission to speak to, but not to convey anything to him. There had been an attempt to escape that very morning. Had I not seen a guardian examine the straw at the bottom of a forcat's wooden shoe, as he returned from work? So I cast a last look at the pale-faced man, and leave the lookers-on to make their comments and guesses.

"Is there anything more you wish to see?" the adjutant obligingly inquires.

"I thank you, no; no more to-day." So I slowly make my way out of the Bagne, and relieve my chest with a long, long breath.

P. S. A petition has since been sent to the minister that Fourrier should be medically examined and his condition reported on. He has been examined, and, according to the report, he is a walking complication of disease, a phenomenon of morbid affections. One would say the only wonder is how a creature so afflicted can continue to live. His vital spark must be unusually hard to extinguish. He would be worth engagement by a medical lecturer as an encyclopædic illustration of human complaints!

But is such an invalid worth keeping in prison? No. All he is good for is to consume wholesome food, puzzle the doctors, and give worthy jailers the trouble of locking him up. He is just as well outside as indoors. You may as well let him go for a poor broken-down, good-for-nothing encumbrance. Such is the train of reasoning which would seem to be implied by the petition and the consequent report.

Second P. S. Returned some weeks from my travels, I hear a rattling knock at my door; not at all like a French knock (though it is one,) but a triumphant imitation of an English rat-tat-too. I peep out of my window, like Shakspeare's apothecary, to put the question, "Who knocks so loud?" Behold! It is No. 9999, loose, free, at large, come to return my visit, and conducted hither by my friend the avocat. We last met on the shore of the Mediterranean, and here he is within sight of the English Channel. He has been "gracie," pardoned by the Emperor. But that the sacredness of a sentence once pronounced may suffer no diminution of prestige, he is at liberty under the surveillance of the police. A residence is assigned to him—the very place where he wishes to dwell. I wonder how he contrives to walk without irons after having worn them for two and twenty years; and I must ask him how he liked his first night in a bed between a pair of sheets.

Third P. S. This is a true story, and not a subtle fiction of the brain. Strange as it may seem, 9999 is the actual number the convict bore, and not another form of * * * * He is living happily, in the solid flesh, and not in your imagination merely, with a real mother and a real sister, whose real children, whom he had never seen, are now the objects of his affection.—All the Year Round.

AT THE NATIONAL PORTRAIT EXHIBITION.

MR. PUNCH considers the Exhibition as an admirable mode of popularizing instruction in English History. While there, Little Tom Eaves, his contributor, noted down the following conversations :

Educated Person (who wouldn't buy a guide because it was eighteenpence, stands before the picture of Inigo Jones, and says to his Friend)—That's good, isn't it? (Pronounces the name as if he hadn't seen it written under the portrait.) Inigo Jones.

His Friend (who wanted Educated Person to buy a catalogue, but wouldn't spend the eighteenpence himself)—Ah, yes. (Then, as if he did know, but had momentarily forgotten)—Who was Inigo Jones?

Educated Person (well up in history)—Inigo Jones? Oh, he was—a—a—(Looks round to see if anybody's near him with a catalogue.) He was an architect.

His Friend—Oh, of course. (Still not quite clear on the point.) Didn't he try to get into Buckingham Palace once?

Educated Person (contemptuously)—No! my dear fellow. He lived in James the Second's, no, (hesitates) Charles the Second's, or James the First's. Let me see—(recovers himself—at all events, one of that lot.

[He says this as if they all lived in the same year.

His Friend (distrustfully)—I wish you'd bought a catalogue.

Lazy Person (in a chair, with a catalogue in his hand, to a Friend without a catalogue, who is staring at the pictures)—It's very tiring seeing pictures : wonder who that is?

[Alluding to a painting in front of him.

His Friend (with sound common sense)—Look at your catalogue.

Lazy Person (languidly)—Eh? what's the number? Ah, No. 915. (Opens the guide carelessly by several other names.) Nell Gwynn. (Meditatively.) I haven't seen Nell Gwynn. I should like to see that. [Pauses vacantly.

His Friend (keeping to the point)—But what's 915?

Lazy Person (as if very much bored)—Oh, it's Lady Lucy (slowly) Theresa (slower) Herbert.

His Friend—Is it? (Suddenly awaking to the fact that the picture is that of a man in court robes.) You haven't got No. 915. (Looks over him.) You're reading 953.

Lazy Person (helplessly)—Am I? Ah, all these people were so very much alike. (Loses all interest.) Here, find the thing yourself.

[Nearly falls asleep in the chair, and is left by his Friend.

HENRY THE EIGHTH'S GALLERY.

Elderly Female from the Country (evidently out for a holiday.) Lor', Mrs. Probbit, look here! there's a Blue Beard.

[They are looking at a picture of Henry VIII.

Mrs. Probbit—Well, ain't he now?

Elderly Female—Don't he look it, too?

Mrs. Probbit—Ah, don't he!

Elderly Female (looking at Anne Boleyn)—Anne Bowline. (Jocosely.) That's a rum dress.

[Addressing probably her husband.

Respectable, hot-looking, and silent Man (accompanying the Country Party, carrying a mysterious basket)—Um!

[The party moves on.

Vague Person (arriving in the Gallery with Vague Friend.) Where shall we begin, eh?

[V. F. becomes utterly unsettled.

Vague Person (summoning up all his energy to decide)—We will begin with Charles the Second. (They walk towards that division ; he stops.) Oh, I wanted to see Thingummy's portrait. (Vague Friend is perfectly ready to see it)—I mean Shakspeare's—the one, you know.

Vague Friend (without any curiosity)—Oh, yes.

[They turn back towards the Elizabethan Gallery.

Vague Person (undecidedly)—And yet I don't know—p'raps it would be better to see Charles the Second first, eh?

[Vague Friend thinks "yes, p'raps, that would be better," and they retrace their steps.

Intelligent Gentleman (with catalogue, overheard by Vague Couple)—The galleries one ought to begin with are up-stairs.

Vague Person (to his Friend, pausing)—There are galleries up-stairs.

[This information quite unsettles them as to Charles the Second.

Vague Friend (suggestively)—Well, let's go up stairs.

Vague Person—Very well. (They go toward the stairs ; they stop.) And yet I think I'd rather see Charles the Second's time, it's more interesting.

[Vague Friend says "yes, he thinks it's more interesting," and they go to Charles the Second's Gallery.

Vague Person (suddenly, and as if they'd been looking for him everywhere)—Oh, here's the Earl of Ossory.

Vague Friend—Ah, yes (tries to recollect.) It was Ossory who wrote those poems, wasn't it?

Vague Person—Ah! (carelessly) I forget, exactly. (Recollects a name, and inquires doubtfully.) Wasn't that Ossian?

Vague Friend (not liking to give in to his Friend on a point of history.)—No, I think not, he wrote—(vaguely) what's the name of the thing—and Rochester—and all those, you know, of that time—(turning the conversation) By the way, who was Ossian?

Vague Person (beginning to distrust himself)—Ossian? Oh, I always thought he was an Irishman. (They meet a third Vague Person who is esteemed a well read man.) You can tell us.

Other Vague Person (smiling at portraits)—Eh, what?

[He feels safe with a catalogue.

Vague Person—Why he (alluding to Vague Friend) wants to know (as if he himself didn't) who Ossian was?

Other Vague Person (thinks he's in the catalogue)—Eh? why—the number—(a thought suddenly strikes him) Oh, no, he was a mythological whatshisname (vaguely,) wasn't he? He played a harp on a dolphin's back, or something or other.

[Determines to look out Ossian in Lempriere when he gets home.

Vague Friend (half satisfied)—Ah! I thought he wasn't a whatyoumaycallem in this time.

[He means a Cavalier in the reign of Charles the Second.

Vague Person (after looking at five or six pictures, suddenly)—Who was Killigrew?

[Vague Friend looks at Other Vague Person for information.

Other Vague Person (who thinks he really ought to know who Killigrew was without looking at his catalogue)—Killigrew? he was a wit—(pauses, and thinks what the dickens else Killigrew was)—yes, he was a wit—(pauses again, but can't think of anything else)—yes, that's all. (Adding, as if he was going to correct any mistake there might be about Killigrew in the catalogue.) I'll see what the Catalogue says.

—

OUTSIDE THE GALLERY (Any day afterwards.)

Sleepy Person (who was awoke by their closing the exhibition)—Oh! (to a lady) you should go to see the Portraits, it's so interesting.

Vague Person's Opinion—Oh, you should go! There are all the pictures of Thingummy, and Whatshisname, and Charles, and the whole lot of 'em.—Punch.

A HOME TRAIT AND A HOME WANT.

THE peculiar vice of Californians is extravagance ; and yet it is so nearly allied to their chief virtue as to be seldom acknowledged in its true character. They love, especially when abroad, to boast of their generous traits—their liberal opinions, their frank and cordial manners, their generous way of spending money ; and they sustain the boast by words and acts which establish for them a distinct individuality. Strangers are apt to think them as liberal in self-praise as in everything else, and it was perhaps a shrewd appreciation of their ruling trait, in its weakest no less than its noblest phase, that enabled "Father Bellows"—as the President of the Sanitary Commission was popularly called—to stimulate their habit of lavish giving under the pleasing manipulation of his laudatory telegrams. The trait of extravagance attaches to most of their habits. It is betrayed in their over-demonstrative deportment, in their use of strong language and abuse of adjectives, in their fervent partizanship, in their excessive loves and hates, in their fondness for the wildest speculations and boldest adventures, in their almost contemptuous waste of wealth, in their fast riding and fast living. These characteristics result from the peculiar circumstances attending the rapid settlement of a new and remote land, by a class of the most adventurous and independent spirits from all parts of the world, incited by desire for the sudden accumulation of wealth, and separated for many years from the restraints and mollifying influences of society. The paucity of the female element for some years, the absence of home attractions, and the lack of those higher aims that employ active tendencies in older communities, have also contributed to the cultivation of extravagant and eccentric traits. With all that is most objectionable in these, an impartial critic must admit that there mingles a truly cosmopolitan spirit—the outgrowth of intimacy with all sorts of people, of familiarity with all sorts of fortune, and of that intellectual and moral attrition which smooths down insular peculiarities and local prejudices. We may hope, also, that as our population increases, through a new immigration that will bring more rational ideas of life and business, and as society fixes itself upon the substantial basis of common interests, that the extravagances of Californians will be toned down till they shall appear as virtues. The extravagance they practice in living especially needs to be curbed if they would realize genuine prosperity.

If we could dissociate ourselves for a moment from our surroundings, we should be surprised at the reckless disregard for economy displayed by every class of our people. The ease with which money can be made here, has encouraged a habit of the most lavish expenditure. Incomes that are sufficient to enable a prudent man to live in taste and comfort, and lay up a competence besides, are consumed to the last dollar annually without any increase of happiness. The very servants, who come here delighted to receive four times what they obtained at the East, exclusive of more generous gifts than they ever received there, are apt to waste their wages in a vain attempt to dress as well as their mistresses. Men who speedily make a fortune at mining or trading often spend the better part of it in the erection of a splendid mansion, which involves a style of living and expense for repairs, taxes, insurance, etc., which consumes the remainder of their means and often leads to bankruptcy. There is a general disposition to indulge in costly display ; to pay largely for gratifications that are only temporary ; to give lavishly and without discrimination, for the empty reward of being called "a good fellow." The vanities of gorgeous upholstery, fine parties and fast horses, are indulged in by many whose resources are altogether disproportioned to the expense. Montgomery street, on a clear sunny day, reveals more laces, diamonds, watered silks, and sables, than are displayed on Broadway or the Fifth Avenue.

A Californian, accustomed to these things, is astonished, on going East, to find how much more plainly and cheaply people of equal or greater means live there than here. There is in the Atlantic States, of course, a class of newly-rich—the petroleum and shoddy speculators for instance—who exceed even Californians in extravagance, and disport themselves in a style of vulgar costliness which presages an ultimate crash. But this class is exceptional and confined to the cities. The rule in the oldest communities on that side of the continent, and especially out of the four or five great cities, is prudent economy—not an economy which cuts off substantial comforts and rational enjoyments, but that which eschews superfluities, gewgaws, and vanities. One sees there, to be sure, much parsimony and meanness, but these are not to be confounded with that economy which is a virtue—that economy which Franklin preached—that economy which developes from the slight privations of a few months the wholesome enjoyments of years—that economy which means a piece of land in one's own right, a house in one's own name, a well filled larder, books, music, and pictures in the parlor, a good education for one's children, permanent esteem in community, a mind free from the burden and depression of debt. Surely all these are worth more than the factitious enjoyments of extravagance ; and Californians must learn to be economical, if they would possess them.

There are very few of them who cannot possess a competence in a few years if they will cultivate that saving virtue on which we insist. Sermons on economy are never popular, and even Dr. Franklin has been denounced as penurious when he was only wise ; but who can see a noble people flinging away golden opportunities at the shrine of false notions and a foolish habit without raising a warning voice? There is no doubt that lack of a reasonable economy with Californians is the root of much of the disappointment and unhappiness, of the blighted hopes and thwarted aspirations, that sadden our society and give to the annals of our State an almost tragic coloring. We see in that careless and jovial tossing away of money which characterizes our people, heart-breaking absences, permanent estrangements, lonely lives, melancholy souls, perverted instincts, premature death. It will not do to turn all this off with a witty speech, or with some fine words of poetical contempt for sordidness. For the majority of mankind everywhere, comfort and independence can come only through saving and careful habits. These alone will insure for the most of us what "Elia" pleasantly describes as "goodly legs and shoulders of mutton, exhiliarating cordials, books, pictures, the opportunities of seeing foreign countries, independence, heart's ease, a man's own time to himself." These would make home music of the clatter of our quartz mills, add smiling plenty to our farms, and crown with success many a business that now invites the red flag.—Evening Bulletin.

—

WAITING FOR OPPORTUNITIES.—Hic Rhodus ; hic salta. Do not wait for a change of outward circumstances ; but take your circumstances as they are, and make the best of them. Luther moved the world, not by waiting for a favorable opportunity, but by doing his daily work, by doing God's will day by day, without thinking of looking beyond. We ought not to linger in inaction until Blucher comes up, but, the moment we catch sight of him in the distance, to rise and charge. Hercules must go to Atlas, and take his load off his shoulders perforce.—Guesses at Truth.

—

AN EMPEROR WITHOUT A HANDKERCHIEF.—A young secretary of the Turkish Embassy is accredited with the following pieuvre. He was asked, while in the company of the representatives of Parisian beauty, to whom he thought the Viceroy of Egypt on his visit to the Great Exhibition would fling his handkerchief. "I am sure I cannot say," replied the embryo Ambassador, "for the Viceroy never uses a handkerchief"—an enlightenment as to the manners of the East which is a little surprising.—Court Journal.

—

THE most unpopular feud (food) in Europe just now : The German Diet.

—

WHO has all he wants of Atlantic Cable? Cyrus W. Field, to his "Heart's Content."

"MARK TWAIN" AT HONOLULU.

MARK TWAIN, in his last letter to the Sacramento Union, occasionally lays aside his motley and appears in his real character of a thoughtful and discriminating observer—a quality which underlies his love of fun and humor, and gives it a peculiar force. His criticisms upon the religious condition of the Islanders are evidently written in all sincerity, and his rhetoric often rises to a dignity above that of a mere gossipping correspondent. He says:

"It is reported that the King has said: 'The foreigners like their religion—let them enjoy it, and freely. But the religion of my fathers is good enough for me.' Now that is all right. At least I think so. And I have no fault to find with the natives for the lingering love they feel for their ancient customs. But I do find fault with Bishop Staley for reviving those customs of a barbarous age at a time when they had long been abandoned and were being forgotten—when one more generation of faithful adherence to the teachings of the American missionaries would have buried them forever and made them memories of the past—things to be talked of and wondered at, like the old laws that made it death for a plebeian to stand erect in the presence of his king, or for a man to speak to his wife on a tabu day—but never imitated.

For forty years before the Bishop brought his Royal Hawaiian Established Reformed Catholic Church here, the kings and chiefs of this land had been buried with the quiet, simple, Christian rites that are observed in England and America, and no man thought of anything more being necessary. But one of the first things Bishop Staley did when he arrived here a few years ago was to write home that the missionaries had deprived the natives of their innocent sports and pastimes (such as the lascivious hulahula, and the promiscuous bathing in the surf of nude natives of opposite sexes,) and one of the next things he did was to attend a hulahula at Waikiki with his holy head tricked out in the flower and evergreen trumpery worn by the hula-girls. When the late king died the Bishop revived the half-forgotten howling and hula dancing and other barbarisms in the palace yard, and officiated there as a sort of master of ceremonies. For many a year before he came that wretchedest of all wretched musical abortions, the tom-tom, had not been heard near the heart of Honolulu; but he has reinstated it and brought it into its ancient esteem and popularity. The old superstitions of this people were passing away far faster than is the case with the inhabitants of the unfrequented and sparsely populated country districts of America, France, and Wales, but Bishop Staley is putting a stop to progress in this direction.

We owe the strange and unpleasant scenes of last night to him—there are not ten white men in the kingdom who have ever seen their like before in public—and I am told that he is appalled at the work of his own hands—that he is ashamed—that he dreads to think of the comments it will provoke in Christian lands—in a word, that he finds, too late, that he has made a most melancholy blunder.

If I may speak freely, I think this all comes of elevating a weak, trivial-minded man to a position of rank and power—of making a Bishop out of very inferior material—of trying to construct greatness out of constitutional insignificance. My estimate of Bishop Staley is not carelessly formed; there is evidence to back it. He gossips habitually; he lacks the common wisdom to keep still that deadly enemy of a man, his own tongue; he says ill-advised things in public speeches, and then in other public speeches denies that he ever said them; he shows spite, a trait which is not allied to greatness; he is fond of rushing into print, like mediocrity the world over, and is vainer of being my Lord Bishop over a diocese of fifteen thousand men and women (albeit they belong to other people's churches) than some other men would be of wielding the world-wide power of the Pope; and finally, every single important act of his administration has evinced a lack of sagacity and an unripeness of judgment which might be forgiven a youth, but not a full-grown man—or, if that seems too severe, which might be forgiven a restless, visionary nobody, but not a Bishop. My estimate of Bishop Staley may be a wrong one, but it is at least an honest one.

Persons who are intimate with Bishop Staley say he is a good man, and a well-educated and cultivated one, and that in social life he is companionable, pleasant and liberal-spirited when church matters are not the topic of conversation. This is no doubt true; but it is my province to speak of him in his official, not in his private capacity. He has shown the temerity of an incautious, inexperienced and immature judgment in rushing in here fresh from the heart and home of a high English civilization and throwing down the gauntlet of defiance before a band of stern, tenacious, unyielding, tireless, industrious, devoted old Puritan Knights who have seen forty years of missionary service; whose time was never fooled away in theorizing, but whose lightest acts always meant business; who landed here two score years ago, full of that fervent zeal and resistless determination inherited from their Pilgrim forefathers, and marched forth and seized upon this people with a grip of iron, and infused into their being, wrought into their very natures, the spirit of democracy and the religious enthusiasm that animated themselves; whose grip is still upon the race and can never be loosened till they, of their own free will and accord, shall relax it. He showed a marvelous temerity—one weak, inexperienced man against a host of drilled and hardy veterans; and among them great men—men who would be great in wider and broader spheres than that they have chosen here. He miscalculated the force, the confidence, the determination of the Puritan spirit which subdued America and underlies her whole religious fabric to-day—which has subdued these islanders, and whose influence over them can never be unseated.

THE REFORMED CATHOLIC CHURCH—THE "COURT RELIGION."

His church was another miscalculation. It was a mistake to appeal by imposing ceremonies and showy display to a people imbibed with a thorough Puritan distaste for such things, and who had never been much accustomed to anything of the kind at any period of their history. There is little in common between the simple evergreen decorations and the tom-toms and hulahulas of the natives, and the cheap magnificence of the Bishop's cathedral altar, his gaudily-painted organ-pipes and the monotonous and unattractive ceremonials of his church service.

He is fighting with good nerve, but his side is weak. The moneyed strength of these island—their agriculture, their commerce, their mercantile affairs—is in the hands of Americans—republicans; the religious power of the country is wielded by Americans—republicans; the whole people are saturated with the spirit of democratic Puritanism, and they are—republicans. This is a republic, to the very marrow, and over it sit a King, a dozen Nobles, and half a dozen Ministers. The field of the Royal Hawaiian Established Church is thus so circumscribed that the little cathedral in Nuuana street, with its thirty pews of ten-individual capacity each, is large enough to accommodate in its entirety, and have room to spare.

And this is the bugbear that has kept the American missionaries in hot water for three or four years! The Bishop of Honolulu ought to feel flattered that a chance so slim as his, and a power so feeble as his, has been able to accomplish it. But, at the same time, he ought to feel grateful, because, if let alone, he and his Church must infallibly have been and remained insignificant. I do not say this ill-naturedly, for I bear the Bishop no malice, and I respect his sacred office; I simply state a palpable fact.

I will say a word or two about the Reformed Catholic Church, to the end that strangers may understand its character. Briefly, then, it is a miraculous invention. One might worship this strange production itself without breaking the first commandment, for there is nothing like it in the heavens above or in the earth beneath, or in the water under the earth. The Catholics refuse to accept it as Catholic, the Episcopalians deny that it is the church they are accustomed to, and of course the Puritans claim no kindred with it. It is called a child of the Established Church of England, but it resembles its parent in few particulars. It has got an altar which is gay with fiery velvet, showy white trimmings, vases of flowers and other mantle ornaments. (It was once flanked by imposing, seven-branched candlesticks, but these were obnoxious and have been removed.) Over it is a thing like a gilt sign-board, on which is rudely painted two processions—four personages in each—marching solemnly and in single file toward the crucified Saviour in the centre, and bringing their baggage with them. The design of it is a secret known only to the artist and his Maker. Near the pulpit is a red canopied shower-bath—I mean it looks like one—upon which is inscribed, "Separated unto the Gospel of God." The Bishop sits under it at a small desk, when he has got nothing particular to do. The organ pipes are colored with a groundwork of blue, which is covered all over with a flower work wrought in other colors. Judging by its striking homeliness, I should say that the artist of the altar piece had labored here also. Near the door of the church, but inside, of course, stands a small pillar, surmounted by a large shell. It may be for holy water or it may be a contribution box. If the latter be the case, I must protest that this ghastly pun—this mute suggestion to shell out—is ill suited to the sacred character of the place, and it is only with the profoundest pain that I force myself to even think for a moment upon so distressing a circumstance. Against the wall is a picture of the future Cathedral of Honolulu—a more imposing structure than the present one; that many a year may elapse before it is built is no wish of mine. A dozen acolytes—Chinese, Kanaka and half white boys, arrayed in white robes, hold positions near the altar, and during the early part of the service they sing and go through some performances suggestive of the regular Catholic services; after that, the majority of the boys go off on furlough. The Bishop reads a chapter from the Bible; then the organist leaves his instrument and sings a litany peculiar to this Church, and not to be heard elsewhere; there is nothing stirring or incendiary about his mild, nasal music; the congregation join the chorus; after this a third clergyman preaches the sermon; these three ecclesiastics all wear white surplices. I have described the evening services. When the Bishop first came here he indulged in a good deal of showy display and cermony in his Church, but these proved so distasteful, even to Episcopalians, that he shortly modified them very much."

WHAT WOMAN CAN DO.—AN EXAMPLE FOR THE MALE SEX.—The Philadelphia Gazette relates the followieg: Among the strangers in Philadelphia at this moment, are two ladies from Martinsburg, West Virginia. Yesterday they were purchasing a seed drill, a mowing machine, and other agricultural implements, whose cost in the aggregate was about $800. Their home was very close to the theatre of the late war. Between the two contending armies their houses and barns were burned, their horses and cattle driven off, their only brother conscripted into the Confederate army, and themselves left utterly destitute and homeless. Any one who, seeing a young lady such as we saw yesterday, had been told that she had personally ploughed and planted many acres of land, would have laughed to scorn the parties so informing him. Such, however, is literally the case. We learned the fact from a gentleman residing in the vicinity. The smoking ruins of the farm upon which these young people resided had scarcely cooled, when the neighbors clubbed together, built them a log house, and extemporized a sort of barn. Horses were loaned to them, and the girls with their own hands ploughed the ground, and seeded it with corn. The crop grew apace, and with their own hands they harvested it. They sold it to good advantage. They had owned forty-seven negro slaves. Some of these went into the Union army, others deserted the locality. The girls were left alone to battle with the vicissitudes of the war.

Our informant, whose respectability is beyond all question, says that these girls produced by their work in the field more decided and productive results than were accomplished by the entire gang of slaves. They toiled for three years and now have a comfortable house and most substantial barns upon their property; while improvements have been made to an extent that makes it of considerable more value than before the torch of conflicting armies reduced the buildings to ashes. One of the young ladies has since married; but the others still do duty as their own "overseers," and they themselves purchased yesterday, and directed the shipment of the agricultural implements to which we have above referred. The wonder to the dealer was that a lady delicately gloved and attired as though she had never overstepped the boudoir, should descant experimentally and intelligently upon the respective merits of the different reaping machines, and upon the comparative values of the different patents for threshing out the cereals.

These young ladies were educated in Philadelphia, and are well known to many of our best people.

ANOTHER "LITTLE STORY."—Miss Margaret Howitt, in her last work, Twelve Months with Frederika Bremer, tells several curious anecdotes illustrating the simplicity of the lower orders in Sweden. Thus, two servants were given tickets to go to the theatre, to which they went, and from which they soon returned. "You have surely not been?" asked their mistress. "Oh yes," they answered, "we went to the theatre, and sat there till suddenly a curtain drew up and some ladies and gentlemen began talking together, but as it was on family matters we felt we were intruding, and so came home."—Daily Advertiser.

A correspondent of the Boston Transcript gives the origin of the above in an old joke book printed in London, 114 years before:

"Two Countrymen, who had never seen a Play in their Lives, nor had any notion of it, went to the Theatre in Drury Lane, when they placed themselves snug in the corner of the Middle Gallery; the first Musick play'd, which they liked well enough; then the Second and Third, to their great Satisfaction; at length the Curtain drew up, and three or four Actors entered to begin the Play; upon which, one of the Countrymen cry'd to the other, Come, Hodge, let's be going, mayhap the Gentlemen are talking about Business."

HOW TO GATHER MOSSES.—Go to the shore at low tide, after a blow from the sea. The best time is after the moon falls, for the tides are lowest then. Examine narrowly everything on the sand and rocks, and take up with your stick (which you had better have stout enough to steady your steps in passing over slimy rocks) everything you see that looks nearest like nothing. Then fish all you can of the same sort from the waves. Pick for bright colors; but do not always reject dull ones. They often change to bright, or at least deep hues after pressing. Put them, with salt water, in your pail, and when you get home take a fine stick, or a large needle, and having poured your treasures into a bowl slip a piece of paper under them one at a time, and float and pick them out; then lift them carefully, gently, tenderly from the water, and hang them up to dry. When perfectly dry place them between pasteboards and press them for several hours. The heavier the pressure the better. By the time they are done you will appreciate them, if no one else does. It is no easy task properly to do them. For amusement, to secure gifts for dear friends far away, etc., it is very well; but if one was obliged to chase and watch the seas, to be out in storms (for a stormy time is often the best for his business) and to "put on" mosses for a living, wouldn't it be arduous?

UP IN THE FLIES, WATCHING THE "STARS."

BY NELSON J. LEE, THE YOUNGER.

HAVE I seen a many in my time? Well, sir, I should rather think I had, both good and bad, and some middling.

I was at the Surrey when T. P. Cooke was there; I was at the Lane when Anderson had it; I was an extra hand when Kean brought out Pizarro at the Princess's; I was at the Lyceum when Peep o' Day was played, and now I'm—well, never mind, I've said enough, sir, to show you that I've seen a many in my time.

Actors are altered, mind you, and not for the better, leastways, that's my opinion; and I used to be obliged to look more after what they were talking about on the stage than the audience cared about doing sometimes.

Now my business comes to me as reg'lar as can be, and if I drop off to sleep I wake up (by instinct, I suppose,) just in time to lower the act-drop or the green baize.

My place is Up in the Flies, and so it has been ever since I was fourteen years old, which is now, sir, about six-and-thirty years ago; but the work then was nothing to what it is now. What with cloths working up to show the sunset and moonlight effects, and gauzes and perforated borders in the Transformation Scenes, we want about six times the number of men now Up in the Flies than we used to have before these sensation dramas and heavy pantomimes came up.

I've saved three theatres from being burnt down, and had the governor's thanks each time.

The last was a near squeak for me, though. We were playing a piece on the Russian war, and there was the taking of a fort—the Redan, I think they called it—and a blow up, which was the end of the piece, of course. Well, Benson, the firework maker, lighted the quickmatch behind the fort, and the batteries went off, then the showers of sparks, a pan of red fire was lighted at each wing, and down I dropped the curtain.

I didn't notice anything wrong for a time, but as I was sitting on a beam, putting on a new line for the fairy-drop, I saw a thicker smoke, high up among the gauzes, and there was one of 'em smouldering, and the sparks getting thicker, so that in about ten minutes we should have been in a blaze.

I climbed up on the bridge, sent one of my men down to keep clear below, and then I cut the lines of the gauze; but as it fell it went over on to the gas border and caught fire. I leaned over and jumped on to the grooves, unhooked the chain of the border, and let the blazing canvas on top of the gauze fall on the stage, where it was soon put out. But I had overbalanced myself, and should have fallen after the gauze if I hadn't have caught hold of the border, and there I hung swinging about till they brought the long ladder and took me down.

Those firework pieces ain't pleasant for us Up in the Flies, because all the smoke and sulphur rises, and that reminds me of a night I shall never forget. We were playing a Wreck Piece, where the ship went down in sight of the audience, and we were pulling the cloths up and down to show the rise and fall of the waves. Well, old Benson had got some pink fire, a new invention he called it, and he perched himself on the grooves (that's where the scenes fit in, sir, at top, and are pushed through from each side,) and he tied his handkerchief round his nose and mouth, and kept on sprinkling little pinches of fire in the pan, to make the flashes of lightning, just before the wreck.

I daresay it looked very well from the front, the pink light just flickered a bit and lit up the back "horizon cloth," which was painted dark, but there was a lot of sulphur in this pink fire, and we found it getting down our throats to that extent that we all dropped the ropes, and couldn't work the waves at all, so that the ship was rocking about and the sea standing still. The master carpenter came up swearing, to see what was the matter, and I'm blest if the smoke didn't nearly choke him, for he fell flat on his back.

We told the governor we couldn't stand it; the author of the piece said the lightning was capital, and it would ruin the piece if it was cut out, but we carried our point, for the next night the property man got the rosin-box, and gave the flashes in the old reg'lar way.

No one sees me from the front, and nobody behind the scenes except the prompter ever thinks of me, and sometimes, during a long act, as I'm looking over the beam, among the cloths and borders, I can hear the star blowing up the call-boy, and a many things they don't think of below.

I don't believe I ever spoke to an actor in my life, sir, unless when I've been lowering a drop, I've called out, "stand clear." There was one spoke to me, though, one night, and pretty sharp, too—it was our heavy man, sir, who plays all the villains; you see, sir, I cut him out of his dying speech. I don't know how I came to do it hardly; the piece had been running a long while, and I was watching the fight between him and the star, and directly he was run through I dropped the curtain. As soon as it was down, he jumped up and raved about the stage, saying his "dying speech was the only bit" he'd got, and to be cut out of it by a "blessed Fly-man" was disgraceful, which are not exactly the words, the expressions he did say being more full-flavored.

Have I got a wife, sir? Yes—poor mother's still alive, though how she's weathered the storm is more than I can account for to myself, and, sometimes, when I've a long wait Up here in the Flies, I fancy I see her face bending down over her work, and never complaining—but patient always—and never a word against the troubles we've gone through together, though she's suffered most.

What do I mean? Well, I'll tell you; here's a stool, sir—you'd better sit down, wait till I wipe it, sir; that's it—well, you see it's a sad bit of my life, and always brings the tears into my eyes.

Poor little Annie, my little girl, sir, who was taken from us six year ago, and who's Up in the Flies with the real angels I hope—she was the life of our room—our one miserable room, sir—and her mother never felt lonely while she was alive. We had a boy, who was very sickly from his birth, but Annie used to cheer him up wonderful. You'll excuse me, sir, I can't help blubbering a little.

Well, she was about fourteen, and one of the prettiest little creatures that ever saw daylight. We—I mean me and my wife—were staying at lodgings in the country, for I was engaged by a party who had two or three small theatres.

One morning the governor came in, and he said he didn't know what to do for Ariel in The Tempest—that's the girl who has to fly about and hang suspended in the last scene, as the ship sails off. I heard him talking to the Stage-Manager, and saying he'd give any girl ten shillings for the week. Says he—"Miss Hetherington won't do it; she declares that her head swims, and she gets giddy, and all the rest of the old excuses."

So I sang out: "Do you think my girl would do, sir?" "Who are you, and where are you?" cried the governor. "Here I am, sir, Up in the Flies." "Can your girl sing?" "Yes, sir, anything after she's heard it once or twice." "Well bring her round to-night, and let us have a look at her; if she's the proper size, and can manage 'Where the bee sucks,' I dare say she'll do."

So I went home, sir, and took the little one on my knee. I said, "I've got a surprise." "Oh, mamma, father's bought another song book. I know he has, thank you, father."

"No, Annie, not a song book, no present, but the governor wants to see you to ask you if you'd like to go on the stage."

"On the stage, Richard!" cries my dear wife, "what to do?" "Why, to sing and fly like an angel in the last scene," I says. "Oh! no, Richard, I'm sure you'll not let her do that." "Why not?" says I; "there are the children most in rags, and ten shillings ain't to be thrown away."

"Shall I have ten shillings, father?"

"Yes, Annie, ten whole shillings," and I do declare, sir, that the dear child says to me, "That'll buy a cloak for mother, won't it?"

"Well, I took her to the theatre, and after a day or two the governor said she'd do, and the leading lady kissed her, and gave her a biscuit.

At last the night came, and my wife got so nervous that she says, "Richard, I wish you'd take me with you." "What, to the theatre," I says, opening my eyes wide, for she'd never been inside the place. "Yes," says she, "I couldn't bare to stay at home. I'll come and sit with you, and bring Charlie with me, he'll keep quiet, and I know my mind 'll be easy."

Well, seeing she was so bent on it, sir, I couldn't say no, so I made the best of it, and I smuggled her Up in the Flies, and there she sat with Charlie in her lap, and the piece began. Lord, sir, how we listened to our Annie singing down below, and the people applauding her. I could hear my good wife sobbing away fit to break her heart to see how natural the girl seemed to take it, and how clever we both thought her.

The last scene came on, and I says to the Master Carpenter, "I'll take the Traveller with the wires, you fix my girl down below and I'll pull her across when you give the signal, I wouldn't have anybody else do it for fifty pounds."

The ship started off, and the Master Carpenter clapped his hands. I worked the Traveller, and she rose beautiful, smiling at me to show she wasn't frightened a bit. The people applauded, and my mate lowered the curtain.

I worked the Traveller back, and the Master Carpenter calls "Lower out," and I saw Annie all safe standing on the stage.

I went down from the Flies to kiss her, and as I stepped off the ladder one of the Wingmen says, "Don't you come here." "What for?" and then he staggered me, for he said "Your child's fell through the 'grave trap'"—that's the centre trap used in Hamlet, sir.

My wife was asleep with Charlie in her arms, and she never knew it till next day, for when she woke up and asked after Annie, I told her she was at home and asleep, and so she was—but not to wake again in this world.

My wife's never been the same woman since, poor little Charlie took ill and died soon after, and now she's alone working in her room, and I'm here night after night thinking Up in the Flies.

Oh! I didn't ask for that, thank you, sir. Are you going? Good night.

BALZAC.

[THE Dublin University Magazine gives an amusing account of "Balzac in Undress," from which we take the following.]

BALZAC'S FAMOUS DEBTS.

BALZAC'S embarrassments were sufficiently annoying, but of the mighty load of his debts of which his friends as well as he were never tired of talking, his friend and confidant, Gozlan, entertains considerable doubt.

Our hero entertained the simple vanity of impressing on the world's belief the large amount received by him for his works year after year. This without a corresponding mass of debt would merely bestow on him the proportions of an ordinary man in the eyes of the world; but Balzac, earner of a quarter of a million of francs in the year, and the spender of twice the amount, was a personage who would be pointed out by the finger of fame to an admiring public.

His income was in all probability about £600 a year, but his inconvenient and unlucky palace of the Jardies swallowed much money, and he was perpetually dunned for sums trifling in amount. He seems to have been betimes an adherent to Pistol's confession of faith—

"Base is the slave that pays"— and to have remained faithful to it during his life. Still he was not a bronze-faced repudiator; he could not look in the countenance of a creditor with an impudent or defiant expression on his features. If he sinned, he paid the penalty. Listen, O ye youthful friends and imitators of Richard Swiveller, Esq., and ponder on the ills that dog the steps of the heedless contractor of debts:

"Balzac, through an innocence of intention, which establishes all absence of high proficiency in the art of getting into debt, had the imprudence, the perilous candor, of borrowing money in his neighborhood. It was, indeed, sowing debts at his feet, which would one day spring up and stifle him. He had thus enclosed himself in a circle out of which he could not escape. His awkward and untoward obligations had so abridged his promenades and paralyzed his movements, that he dared not make an excursion during the day without risk of encountering some rural creditor, grocer, or milkman, or butcher, or baker, of Ville d'Avray. We insist on considering this procedure a profound mistake in personal economy. To owe to any one is a misfortune, no doubt, but to be indebted to your neighbor is an intolerable fault; it is cutting off your path, stopping, shutting out your views, putting gyves on your ankles, depriving yourself of air."

BALZAC AND THE GARDE CHAMPETRE.

Gozlan found his friend one morning walking round and round his pavilion. Exhorting him to quit that confined mode of taking exercise, and join him in an excursion through the wood, he could only get out of him the disjointed expressions, "Too late, the woodranger; too late, the woodranger!" After some trouble he discovered that he owed this guardian of the woods belonging to the commune the trifling sum of thirty francs, and that he had not risen so early on that morning as to be able to enjoy his walk before the usual issuing forth of the dreaded officer. He thus unburdened himself of his heavy grief:

"'Ah, he's a terrible man—not that he persecutes me, or dogs me like others. Ah, no; but his expressive silence, his piercing regards, his attitudes, his words, sudden and short as the crack of a rifle, trouble me, freeze me, turn me to stone. It is a spectre I meet, not a human being.'"

Gozlan, however, persuaded him to join him, and they entered the dreaded wood. They were deeply engaged on the subject of the Revue Parisienne, then about to start, when Balzac, stopping in the middle of a sentence, stammered out:

"'There he is?' 'Who then?' 'He!' 'What he?' 'The woodranger.' And indeed at the corner of the opening which we were traversing appeared the outline of the garde champetre, with his wild-looking three-cocked hat, his gun resting on his left arm, his loose cartouche belt, his rustic gaiters, his gray hair, and his pipe soldered to the corner of his mouth, the living and most harsh embodiment of the transcendental idea—garde champetre.

"Balzac turned pale. 'I told you,' said he, 'we could not fail to meet him.' 'Silence!' said I, 'firmness, and resignation!'

"Still the terrible spectre approached at a slow pace. He never quitted his calm, military, rigid attitude. You would have styled him the gamekeeper of the statue in Don Giovanni. Balzac ceased to speak; he did not even breathe. His eyes never diverged from the baldric of the apparition.

"When he was nearly elbow to elbow with Balzac, who still held my arm, he spoke in a tone of concentrated gravity:

"'Monsieur de Balzac, this is beginning to become musical,' and he stalked on.

"Balzac looked at me, and I looked at Balzac.

"'Have you heard him? have you heard him?' said he,

after the woodranger had vanished in the gray morning vapor which filled the avenues. 'Have you heard him?' On my word of honor the phrase is sufficiently sublime to make the head giddy, it should be preserved in spirits. 'Monsieur de Balzac, this is beginning to become musical.' It is a thousand times the value of the thirty francs I owe him. I intended to pay him to-day, but the expression is too good to be lost. Let us repeat it to the echoes all day; he shall not get his money till to-morrow. 'Monsicur de Balzac, this is beginning to become musical.'"

BALZAC TAKES A COLLABORATEUR.

From what has been already said it may be easily deduced that Balzac was no more fitted to produce a dramatic chef d'œuvre than to secure the approbation of the admirers of the "Woman with the Green Eyes." He possessed dramatic power but to a limited extent; his darling studies and tastes tended not towards tragedy; he had a great respect, but little love for verse, and was not a successful workman when encumbered with the bonds of rhyme or rhythm. However, on occasions of some great dramatic success achieved by this or that man of letters, he would rouse his energies, suffer the fumes of dramatic glory to get possession of his brain, and set to work at a piece for Harel or Lireux. In these, as in all his other operations, hardly had he grasped the outline of his plan when he began to calculate the monetary results. He would thus hold forth to one of the few that enjoyed his intimacy:

"O, the idea is grand! It is brilliant and solid at the same time; genuine rose-colored granite! We shall cut from massive Egyptian blocks a piece with tableaux for the Porte-Saint-Martin, with Frederic Lemaitre for chief figure. There will be a hundred and fifty representations at five thousand francs, one with another. This makes seven hundred and fifty thousand francs. Now let us calculate. The author's claim of twelve per cent. on this sum is more than eighty thousand francs, the tickets five or six thousand francs in fine gold, the printed work, ten thousand copies at three francs each. Why that will be a trinket of thirty thousand francs. Then the—" etc., etc.

Thus he declaimed one day to Henry Monnier, and just as he came to the point where both had got a fabulous sum in perspective, Monnier heartlessly held out his hand, and asked his friend, now a millionaire, to lend him a hundred sous on the strength of the speculation.

In one of these periodical fits he brought a young man to the Jardies to live with him, and be his collaborateur, terms running thus: Young Lassailly was to be at all hours at M. Balzac's disposal, to furnish him ideas if needed, projects, plans, dramatic combinations, etc. In return he was to be conveniently lodged, washed for, lighted, warmed, and supported at the expense of the master of the Jardies. Balzac fulfilled his engagement to the letter, but Lassailly soon grew so fat and lazy that he was only fit to enjoy the amenities of the Capua into which he had entered, and to keep tormenting dramatic associations miles away from his brains, now dulled by his good condition of body.

All went well for a time, but Balzac, who we know was a great night laborer, would require the presence of his ill-fated collaborateur on cold winter nights, when the thermometer would be preparing to sink below zero.

The poor assistant, tearing his limbs from repose, half-dressed himself in haste—one foot shod, the other naked, his nightcap poised over one ear, and a taper in his hand. He thus traversed the passage that led to the retired room of his patron—a different man from the Balzac of the streets and the hero of the cane preserved in the amber of Mme. de Girardin's genius. The Balzac of the study was jaded and pale from want of sleep, and the light of the wax candles flung yellowish splashes on his forehead and cheeks.

The ordinary salute was: "Well, what have you discovered, Lassailly?"

"And Lassailly, taking off his cotton nightcap, and striving to open his eyes, still enveloped in vapory dreams, muttered, 'O yes, we must discover, we must invent something.' 'Well, well, have you invented this something? We must make haste; Porte-Saint-Martin is waiting for us; hasten! Harel wrote to me yesterday evening. Hasten, man! I saw Frederick Lemaitre yesterday.' 'O, you've seen Lemaitre?' 'Yes, yes. He is our own; he is hungry and thirsty for a drama that will bring all Paris together. Where is this drama that's to collect all Paris? Have you it?' 'Not entirely, but—' 'I am listening.' 'I would prefer to hear what you have conceived, and then we could blend our ideas, and I am sure—' 'Lassailly, you are dreaming on your feet; your heavy eyelids are closing.' 'Ah! it's the intense cold, it is—' 'Go to bed, Lassailly. In an hour's time we shall see if the muse has visited you.'

And resuming his pale bougie, and dragging along his slippers, Lassailly, resembling a desolate ghost, regained his chamber and the stretcher-bed, on which he was supposed to be discovering the famous drama that would bring all Paris together. Short respite! An hour later new alarms of Balzac's bell tore poor Lassailly's dream from top to bottom, and sent him barefooted, and protected merely by a knitted vest, to the study of his august collaborateur. Then was resumed a repetition of the former scene, Balzac as wakeful as a lion, Lassailly as sleepy as a dormouse; and the result still the same; one demanding his drama at any price, the other not being able to find it even at a higher one. Six times in one night was the excellent but unfruitful collaborateur summoned by his literary chief. The situation was of the most perplexing character, both in its moral and physical aspect.

"Finally, Lassailly, though living better, better warmed, better washed, better lighted, better fed, grew pale and meagre, became seriously ill. His nocturnal summonses, and his inability to perform what was expected from him, began to affect his poor brain. Meeting him one day on the Boulevards, and asking, 'Well, how go things at the Jardies?' 'O, the Jardies! I have abandoned them forever,' said he, and his poor clouded eyes filled with tears. 'But you were very well off there?' "O, wonderfully well. What a residence, what views, what a life! Roast meat every day, legumes twice a day, dessert in profusion, and O, such coffee!' 'Then why have you abandoned these delightful Jardies?' 'Why! Ah, who could remain? To rise six or eight times in the night was not enough, but I must invent the subject of a drama which was to set all Paris a running! That lay beyond my powers. During life I shall never set foot inside the Jardies.'

"And he kept his word. Not only did he never revisit the Jardies, but he never pronounced the name of Balzac without exhibiting signs of terror in his features."—Dublin University Magazine.

LICENSED THIEVES.

AMONG the professional London thieves there is said to be a remarkable class having the singular name of licensed thieves. These licensed rogues are said to be in the employment of the police, the detectives especially. Strange tales are told about them. It is said that a detective, anxious for fame, and nothing scrupulous as to the means of its accomplishment, will perhaps see a wire busily employed at his nefarious trade of picking pockets in the streets. By chance the wretch does his work cleverly, and so far the policeman embraces the opportunity of making his acquaintance. He frightens the thief by telling him what he has seen, and hints that he can bring so and so against him; but if he will render him some private assistance, he will be let alone for the present. If the thief agrees, he thus gets his license; and dearly he has to pay for it. When the policeman wants a case for the sessions or the assizes, the thief must work. By discovering and furnishing secret information, he puts the policeman upon the right track of obtaining information sufficient to get up a case. The more of this work the spy does, the more he has to perform, and the further he becomes involved. At length the licensed thief quarrels with his employer, or refuses to do his bidding. Then comes his own doom. His license is taken from him, something is brought against him, and he is probably condemned to penal servitude for many years. We tell the following story as it was told to us. A robbery of plate had been committed; the suspicions of the police guided them to the delinquent, but they could obtain no clue by which to prove the charge they had against him. He was, however, apprehended, and thrust into the cell. Another thief, known to the police, was thrust into the same cell, with secret instructions to act the spy.

The spy had not been long in the cell before he began to speak very bitterly of the police, because of what he alleged to be their bad usage of himself. Presently he took a half crown out of his boot, and thrust it into the fire, saying, "There; that evidence is gone." "What evidence?" said the supected man. "That I am a maker of money," answered the spy, who proceeded to describe in glowing colors his lucrative method of manufacturing base coin. The two became very confidential, and the spy began to bewail his want of silver with which to continue his business when he obtained his liberty. The bait took. The suspected man confessed that he had some silver which he had stolen. They at once agreed to partnership, and the next morning they were both set at liberty. The spy was furnished, it is said, by the police, with moulds, etc., and he fixed the time with his new friend to commence the manufacture. They were soon at work. One evening while they were melting the plate, the police, as previously arranged, suddenly rushed in. The spy was allowed to escape, but the real thief was caught. The career of the spy did not last long. The police became tired of him, he was beginning to know too much, and it was necessary to get rid of him. For anything we know to the contrary, this licensed thief is now undergoing penal servitude.

THE executors of the will of the late Augustus Russell Street, of New Haven, are Henry White, Henry C. Kingsley and Mrs. Street, who, with Professors Noah Porter, Thomas A. Thacher and D. C. Gilman, are appointed a board of commissioners to superintend the completion of the fine arts building, now erecting at Yale College. Mr. Street has left to Yale in all the sum of $250,000.

Gale, the Alabama lawyer, who proposed to raise $1,000,000 to procure the assassination of Lincoln and Seward, has been bailed in $15,000.

A CELESTIAL OPIUM-DEBAUCH.—An Englishman writes to a London paper of scenes which he witnessed in China, as follows: One of the objects at this place that I had the curiosity to visit was the opium-smoker in his heaven; and certainly it is a most fearful sight, although, perhaps, not so degrading to the eye as the drunkard from spirits, lowered to the level of the brute, and wallowing in his filth. The idiot smile and deathlike stupor, however, of the opium debauchee has something far more awful to the gaze than the bestiality of the latter. The rooms where they sit and smoke are surrounded by wooden couches, with places for the head to rest upon, and generally a side-room is devoted to gambling. The pipe is a reed of about an inch in diameter, and the aperture in the bowl for the admission of opium is not larger than a pin's head. The drug is prepared with some kind of conserve, and a very small portion is sufficient to charge it, one or two whiffs being the utmost that can be inhaled from a single pipe, and the smoke is taken into the lungs as from the hookah in India. On a beginner, one or two pipes will have an effect, but an old stager will continue smoking for hours. At the head of each couch is placed a small lamp, as fire must be held in the drug during the process of inhaling; and, from the difficulty of filling and properly lighting the pipe, there is generally a person who waits upon the smoker to perform the office. A few days of this fearful luxury, when taken to excess, will give a pallid and haggard look to the face; and a few months, and even weeks, will change the strong and healthy man into little better than an idiot skeleton. The pain they suffer when deprived of the drug after long habit no language can explain; and it is only when under its influence that their faculties are alive. In the houses devoted to their ruin these infatuated people may be seen at nine o'clock in the evening in all different stages, some entering, half distracted, to feed the craving appetite they have been obliged to subdue during the day; others laughing and talking wildly under the effects of a first pipe; while the couches around are filled with their different occupants, who, languid, with an idiotic smile upon their countenances, are too much under the influence of the drug to care for passing events, and fast merging to the wished-for consummation.

The last scene in the tragic play is generally a room in the rear of the building, a species of dead-house, where lie stretched those who have passed into the state of bliss the opium-smoker madly seeks—an emblem of the long sleep to which he is blindly hurrying.

UNHEALTHY FICTION.—It may be thought, perhaps, that in this age of novels a caution against over-indulgence in any other kind of literature is not greatly needed. We are by no means sure, however, that the present passion for unhealthy fiction is not a natural reaction against the very useless facts with which many well-intentioned readers insist on loading themselves. In itself, of course, a sense that the human intellect was intended for some higher purpose than to absorb periodically the contents of the circulating library is much to be encouraged; but unfortunately many people who do really make an effort to read something besides "light literature" think their object sufficiently attained when they have swallowed a certain number of facts to the value or authenticity of which they are serenely indifferent. The accident of a book's appearance in Mr. Mudie's last list is the cause which determines whether their studies for the month shall take a biographical or an historical direction. Whichever it happens to be, the actual process is much the same. The life of a great author, or the correspondence of a great statesman, is read without any reference to the writings which have made the one famous, or to the events in which the other was a conspicuous actor. The history of a period—ancient, mediæval, or modern—is taken up with no knowledge of the events which preceded its commencement, and laid down again with no desire to know the events which followed upon its close. Read in this manner, the most philosophical narrative necessarily loses half its significance, and by consequence an inferior article is found to answer the purpose just as well. To this indiscriminate fashion of reading we owe, therefore, the appearance of a host of indifferent books which are simply created by the demand.—Saturday Review.

LITERAL PEOPLE.—Sir Walter Scott, walking once with Lady Scott, saw some lambs, and remarked on their beauty. "Yes," said the wife, "lambs are beautiful—boiled!" We read that Mrs. Wordsworth was once walking in a grove, and heard a farmer's wife soliloquizing, "Oh, my, I do love stock-doves." The heart of the poet's wife yearned towards that Amaryllis. "But," continued the old woman, 'there be's some what likes 'em in a pie; but for my part there's nothing like 'em stewed in onions." Horace Smith tells of a city miss who accosted a keeper of sheep in the fields, as she glowed with a desire for an Arcadian concert, "Oh, gentle shepherd, prithee tell me where's your pipe?" to which the man replied, "I left it hum, miss, 'cause I hain't got no baccy."

THE authorship of Ecce Homo has been attributed to various persons, and among the rest to W. E. Gladstone, Goldwin Smith, and Louis Napoleon.

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 4. 1866.

Full volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

ENGLISH WRITERS ON AMERICA.*

It is doubtful if the spectacles through which most Englishmen view the American people are not very much blurred by the cobwebs of prejudice, superciliousness, or ignorance. Besides the idea, which seems to be generic, and is so like that which formerly obtained among the ancient peoples of Europe—that everything that is foreign is barbarian, and necessarily inferior—there has grown up with most of them the natural contempt for a colonial offspring that speaks the same language, though, of course, in a much inferior way, and has set itself up, apparently through sheer force of impudence, as one of the first nations of the globe. That it is so recognized by the rest of mankind is a matter of little importance; there must be some mistake about it. It is plain enough that one of the first elements requisite to the dignity and worth of a nationality and people is wanting, for inasmuch as it is the old wood that is best to burn, and old wine the best to drink, the utter absence of the aroma of age must cause the experimental republic and people, like green wood and new wine, not to be considered in the catalogue as articles either fit for use or adornment. Then, the utter absence in American society of anything like an aristocracy puts a plebeian resemblance upon the picture, and places such a people beyond the reach of the sympathy or even of the curiosity of the enlightened representation of noble blood. In so far as the feelings of that class of the British people were enlisted during the recent contest in the United States, favor and hope were extended to the Southern people, and is it not written in the records of the probable that this was because it was among that people that the greatest pretensions to nobility of blood and aristocracy of manners existed?

At intervals one of that people has ventured across the sea to this continent, but it has usually been with eyes curiously intent, as one would visit a menagerie, with the expectation of meeting with an opportunity to observe something very curious and interesting among the animals. If the visitor has assumed the appearance of a gentleman, he has generally proved himself to be a snob. He has written a book upon his return that has demonstrated either how unfit he was for the society of gentlemen, or how unfortunate he was not to have shown himself worthy to be received, when here, into society better than that in which he was accustomed to move when at home. His innate snobbishness or his vindictiveness at not being estimated higher than he was "in his own country and among his own kin," has almost universally leaked out in a duodecimo of abuse of America and her people, and in such a gratuitous display of ignorance regarding his subject, as would be quite worthy the man who has bought his ticket for the ocean passage as he would pay his entrance fee into a monkey show.

It is not pleasant to any American to have to acknowledge that the prevailing sentiment among the highest class of Englishmen toward the people of this country is that of hatred, contempt, or distrust; that the spirit of fairness seems seldom present in their estimate of us; that our motives are impugned, our government disparaged, our progress underestimated, our literature estimated as the primitive efforts of the backwoodsman, and the nation spoken of as a nation of yarvenues, not to be encouraged but to be pooh-poohed out of the contemplation of the best men. While to them, as individuals, we may rightfully entertain sentiments as little flattering as those they hold towards us, yet consideriog the dignity and importance of the English as a nation, we are not indifferent to their general estimate. Even if we look at them simply as a people on whom the light of knowledge and Christian charity has not sufficiently dawned, we must then recognize our obligations to them as one of the benighted nations of the world, and be grateful to any who, with earnest missionary zeal, undertakes to open the eyes of their understanding and clear away therefrom these impertinent cobwebs of prejudice and ignorance.

We have been led into this course of reflection by perusal of the two volumes mentioned at the close of these remarks. They are written by Englishmen who have visited America, have come without prejudice and have gone away without superciliousness. It is a source of refreshment to be able to record that two individuals of the English nation have been able to go about this country, and still be able to think kindly of us and say a friendly word, without a single stricture upon all Americans' well-known habit of turning their parlors into mammoth spittoons and using at the table their unwashed fingers where the commonest of Englishmen perceive the appropriateness of forks.

Sir S. Morton Peto has visited the country with the honest purpose of informing himself respecting its actual resources and prospects; has neglected no opportunity of making himself acquainted with them; was assisted in his investigations and inquiries by some of the most able and experienced persons in this country, and was endowed with intelligence sufficient to comprehend and appreciate whatever was presented to his view. The result has been this volume upon the resources of America, written with great honesty of purpose, and great frankness and impartiality. He has carefully studied the condition of the agriculture, the manufactures, the mineral resources and the commerce of the United States. He has frankly pointed out and admired whatever he has found admirable, and where he has perceived errors he has frankly and courteously criticised. It is doubtless one of the ablest volumes written upon the resources of America, and will have a greater tendency than any other ever published to correct the views of both English and Americans in regard to our country. It is in many respects of advantage that it has been written by an Englishman rather than by an American. The writer was not oppressed in the beginning with the idea that, being a true-born American, he must keep the bird of freedom always in view with outstretched wings, and that the country was so immense that words would fail to measure its superlativeness; there is an entire freedom from the possibly somewhat natural exaggeration of the mildest American; there is no partiality and preference for this country over any other; being written by one of their own people, Englishmen will give a patient audience, and hold themselves more readily susceptible to a consideration of the subject.

We believe we need not make extracts from its pages to demonstrate the value of the work. There is much intelligent observation running through the volume for the information of Englishmen, and there is much intelligent criticism for the thoughtful consideration of Americans. The author has not spared statistics where they would serve an enlightened purpose, and frankly says to those who do not fully appreciate their force and value and think he has made an unnecessary use of them, that he has "written principally for those who do find in figures a source of valuable information." In taking leave of the book we must express the hope that it will not prove altogether unacceptable to the people of California in spite of his criticisms of some of their pet products, for he frankly confesses that American wines are, in his judgment, of an inferior quality at present, and of the malt liquors he thinks they are simply execrable, though he uses a milder expression. If there is no other recourse to avoid the imaginary effects of such judgment, it is quite easy to have recourse to the usual American tartness of remark, which is quite as often prevalent here as among those who have written books that we don't like, and say, with an accented pooh, that the book is merely written by an Englishman. Such a remark might have great effect among well-informed men.

If it is remarkable that there should be one intelligent Englishman who can say a friendly word of America, it is perhaps only the more so that there should be two at the same time. Professor Goldwin Smith, the author of the Lectures on the Study of History, has been for a considerable time past recognized as a warm and earnest friend of America and her institutions—not a blind admirer, who swallows the republican prescription in unintelligent faith, but a cultivated student of history, politics and government, who has acuteness enough to perceive a general organic health, though to an unprejudiced eye there may be visible a remediable functional derangement. He has said in England, before he visited this country in the year 1864, many things that betokened his earnest sympathy with the better civilization of the country; and his more intimate acquaintance with the people has not made him any the less a trusty friend and earnest admirer of what is worthy of every man's respect and commendation. He has not taken the present opportunity to write a work upon America, but his appearance among the publications of the day, in any shape, reminds us of our obligations to him, and claims a word of regard. The present work is one especially recommended to the scholar and student of history, who is already well informed that this is not the first introduction to the republic of letters of this ripe and cultivated scholar and man of letters. It is not perhaps generally known on this coast that we, as a people, are peculiarly indebted to this gentleman for his efforts to make our country, its people and institutions better known to the people of England. His visit to this country was partly for his own better information, but, after an experience of the almost unpardonable ignorance of his countrymen regarding us, he also resolved to dispel as far as he might that heavy mist. He found a cordial welcome among the scholars and literary men of America, and when he went back again across the sea he took with him handsome contributions from many sources, of volumes directly appertaining to the history, politics, and government of the United States. These volumes he has now under his direction and superintendence at the University of Oxford, England, free for consultation to all intelligent people of his country. The act is one which displays besides his favorable estimate of the American nation, to a great degree the active magnanimity and candor that exists in the Republic of Letters.

We cheerfully commend both of the volumes alluded to to the fair consideration of intelligent observers of their own country, and as well as to the scholar and student of history.

* Resources and Prospects of America—Ascertained during a visit to the States in the autumn of 1865. By Sir S. Morton Peto, Bart., M. P. for Bristol. New York: Alexander Stratman & Co. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

Lectures on the Study of History—Delivered in Oxford 1859-61. By Goldwin Smith, M. A., Regius Professor of Modern History in the University of Oxford, etc. New York: Harper & Brothers. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

[For the Californian.]

TO AND FRO.

No. 3.

Just behind the first news from London—even jostling it on the wire—came a private dispatch to me, announcing that Aunt Curtis had died. There was no allusion made to any bequest, and I am yet in ignorance whether my wife Betty is a beneficiary under her will, provided Aunt died testate, as a friend of mine, formerly a Justice of the Peace, calls it. I am glad that that telegraphic message was so unselfish in its phraseology—for indeed, in the grief I feel at her death, there is no inquisitiveness as to the disposition of her property—no mingling of personal interest with tears.

Aunt Curtis has been a noted character in my wife's family: a spinster who has for many years lived apart from almost all; not exactly the isolated and unhappy life of a miser, but secluded, as a matter of choice. It is said that she had once a very strong attachment for a young man of her native village, who went to sea and never was heard of more. However, this may be, it is certain some disappointment had worked a sinister influence over her—estranging her from the world, warping the gentle qualities of kindness and philanthropy which, to a greater or less degree, stir in every female heart. Soon after Betty and I married, we paid her a visit at her request, and I remember well how surprised all the family was at this proof of condescension from one who, with her relatives generally, was regarded as destitute of all feeling of relationship. Had she not been possessed of means, which the hopes and exaggeration of the family multiplied far beyond their real value, she would have been, long ago, dropped from the family tongue and remembrance. Money has a strong centripetal force—keeping its possessor within the family orbit, and it shines ever as a star of the first magnitude—an Aldebaran in the very eye of Taurus. From the moment we put our feet on the threshold of her little house, Betty was regarded the heiress of our aforesaid aunt, and she and I increased in magnitude as if we were already stuffed with any amount of money bags. Even I, who had been, until then, a poor clerk, without expectations, and generally snubbed for my temerity in attempting the acquisition of one of the Brown family—I had a consideration I never experienced before from it. For that same Brown family had pretensions; it had dignity; it was recognized as among the best in the little town of Lattmere; its head was the postmaster; the head of that head had been Sheriff; for generations they had led the choir in the singing at the Episcopal Church; furnished librarians of the town library for near a century; and, before Fulton had set steam at work, had been the agents of a line of sloops trading from Lattmere to New Haven. This was in the olden time, ere a faster civilization had strangely altered the standard of respectability and family dignity. Then we had May dances and jigs—Mazourkas, Schottishes, and other panting and passionate modern movements were unknown. Education was by the accidence, and English examples of composition, arithmetic as far as fellowship, Blair's Rhetoric, neat copy-books, filled with rare apothegms—these were cultivated instead of what is classed as "accomplishments."

But when I had made that visit—even while I was still using salt under Aunt Curtis' roof out of the oddest sort of salt cellar, and sleeping in a bed with a cornice of most fantastic pattern, and a gingham tester—even then I enjoyed my little excursions about the town, complacent under the queer, inquisitive sort of stare I received from chance people, and the half jealous, half obsequious bow and greeting I always got from the Brown family. Grace, the elder of the two sisters, a tall, plump and disdainful sort of person, who had been cultivating her taste for aunt's gold eagles for some years, who used to make gingerbread of the horse and-rabbit pattern to send to Aunt Curtis, and who cultured hollyhocks and poppies because aunt had a fancy for them, who had scarce spoken to me from the day I married Betty, seemed suddenly to have found walking a healthy sort of hygiene—for I encountered her every day in my perambulations. Grace, I say, met me in the blandest sort of manner, smiled gold pieces all over her ruddy cheeks, and, although she passed me a half dozen times a day, she extended her fingers to me whenever we met.

I wasn't a bit more respectable then than when I first went a-sparking Betty: I was still a clerk—wore yet acute angled collars and ample cravats of parti-colored gingham; trousers with great broad flaps, tight at the knees, and loose over the feet; a tall, bell-crowned hat, for those were days anterior to Derbys and Conformes—and yet, because I was the guest of an eccentric aunt, who was reputed rich, I, who had been the butt of all the Brown family, Miss Grace in particular, was now snickered at, manipulated, and to a certain degree caressed—all because, as that Justice of the Peace aforesaid told me when I related these experiences to him, I was heir presumptive to a snug little fortune. In this present day, as centuries ago, when the Israelites journeyed to the Promised Land, we set up golden calves, and fall down and worship them. A man may be noble, morally superior, human in thought and deed, governed by strict principles of integrity, the head of a family, educating his children up to the highest standard of Christian goodness—a man may be all these, and yet, if he goes afoot, he will not have one-half the consideration that attaches to a fast sort of fellow sitting behind a spanking pair, setting astir clouds of dust as he whirls along the smooth road to the Cliff House.

And so Aunt Curtis is dead—gone from among her odd and quaintly carved furniture—away from puss and spaniel, to a far country, where the oddities of this world cannot reach to ruffle the calm of the eternal. I am old enough to find lessons in mortality, advanced enough towards "the wild of which no man knows," to see the shadows of the setting sun falling at my feet. It seems to me strange that decay, and the total destruction of these our bodies, built up so ingeniously, are necessary constituents in the Divine scheme. All of us, saint as well as sinner, would, if we could, allow Azrael to pass us by without laying upon us his icy, withering fingers. For there is in death something so repulsive, so stunning to all our ideas of beauty and refinement—a belittling and very finiteness that takes the starch from our pride—suggesting the reflection whether we are indeed divinely sprung—sprung from that immutable and eternal Being, who heaved up rocks from the great sea and covered them with verdure, who hung the constellations in mid-air, and who has through myriads of years borne them up in their invisible flight through limitless realms of space. From this reality we call death—this overthrow of the strong man, whose eyes, when he lived, penetrated the celestial laws, and which followed God in his hidden and most intricate workings—humanity constructs a destiny outlasting rock and star. It finds in itself sufficient of that same God to ensure his own perpetuity. Thus much I think we can rely upon; certainly nothing beyond. All our revelation is in instinct and analogy, without Edmonds and Hume have seen and experienced all they claim to have seen and experienced. Ever since man was created, Death has mantled the whole earth in shadow; pulling down sceptre and the shepherd's crook alike; hushing the cry of the weakling in the cradle and the strong man; overtoppling human plans; unheeding cries of human anguish; and yet, whether in his conquest of great or little, he never tells why he so scourges us—why he moves at the same pace under sunshine and cloud. He strikes his victim lifeless and cold with an invisible hand and form—never, never uttering word of pity or triumph—never, never turning aside from imploring look and prayer. The harshness of his blow is in its silence—its cold and unpierceable mystery. Look on the victim he has taken the life from, and instead of beauty and expression, you find the startling negativeness of unvitalization—if I may so express it; a repose that is terrible in its profoundness. You can see nothing beyond the dumb and passionless corpse, and hear nothing save the cold prayers of the church, and the terrible symbol and shock of dropping clods of earth on the coffin-lid. Yes, above this dreadful Sadduceeism I see something of hope. There is a something left upon our past selves—the Aurora—the first streaks of a dawning of a new world—you see these in the smile which invariably settles upon the face of the dead. I do not believe it a lingering of the old man; or that it originates with the spirit which animated once the now lifeless form. But rather do I accept it as the gleam which God mercifully and kindly lets in from the other world to the inner life of the moribund; perhaps the joy which comes to the spirit in its first recognition of the glories of the new being. To me who believes a little of a certain faith told long ago, the evidence of which one can find scattered from the Iliad to Froissart, and so on to the present day; of which Swedenberg wrote and Hare experimented; legends of which the Catholic church writings are so opulent; to me who believes in that refined spiritualization which recognizes the faith of guardian spirits, I accept the smile on the face of the dead as the testimony of the presence of some loved angel which comes to the dying to bear the disembodied spirit to the bright lands beyond. So hoping and so believing, I trust that, at the death-bed of Aunt Curtis—under the cornice of her old-fashioned bed—flitted golden wings of angels, who came to bear her soul to a happier home than she had here.

—Until after the San Bruno Range is passed, the same bleak and sterile aspects are seen as the governing qualities of the landscape. At that point you emerge from the mists, and reach fairer skies, and breathe a purer and more benignant air. On the east, where the point of mountain reaches the marsh land, uncouth, muddy wastes lie before you, especially if the tide is low. But here the waters of the Bay come in with a redeeming charm—stretching away to the base of the hills on the opposite shore, glistening under the rays of the morning sun as I saw them, mirroring the golden clouds which floated in "a sea of glory." We shivered through a dense mist all the way from San Miguel until we reached San Bruno. As we came to the open country, I saw a series of sweet pictures—the more lovable after the rude landscapic features we left behind. It was a scene of charming contrasts, as the mist, with its fringed edges, lifted above the mountain ridge, disclosing golden patches of sunshine laughing through the ravines and adown slopes, covered with the ripening oats. As we hurried on, the country widened, the sky receded, growing more shadowy and infinite; fields of grain, having a most delicious summer look, were spread out before us; little hills, crowned with trees, and lying in a most pleasing irregularity, were seen on every side; with valleys lying between, wooded and fraught with deep shadows—those delicious heighteners of landscape effect; and behind all these was the Coast Range, variegated with yellow grain and brown woods. Fleecy mists reposed in the laps of the outlying spurs, and, above all, the clear ridge stood out boldly in the transparent sky, running off to the south-east as far as the eye could reach, until it was lost in the shadowy distance. There was ample compensation here for the untoward and cold expression the country wore at the commencement of our journey.

We came to San Matéo an hour after leaving the city: a little village just outside the region of summer mists, and yet, I am told, it is frequently reached by the cold fingers of the fog god. The San Matéans say that south, beyond their horizon, is a land of uncertain temperature; of thermometrical changes too great for personal comfort and climatic respectability. "The avenue," they say, "ends with us. Beyond is tangled wood and prickly furze, where we go only to hunt foxes and coyotes. They have grain farther on, and firewood, granaries and cattle pastures; but if you would find bracing air and clear skies, come here." They never tell you of the long sweep of tule lands which lie before their very doors; the dense clouds swooping to their chimney-tops; the triturated earth, borne aloft by summer gusts which too frequently stray from the San Francisco meridian; the People's Park, and Fenian gatherings, and little Frenchmen dodging among the bushes after little birds. These are infelicities which are never told except to confidential friends. I know them because I am "Pythias" to a San Matéo "Damon." And yet the village looks charming as you approach it from the North—nestled among the trees, with grand old mountains behind. As we reached there, I saw a pretty Gothic church of stone, the only building of any beauty, dedicated to the worship of the Most High, I have seen in the State. It has an English look, as if it had been born of a minster somewhere among the merry fields of old England. To my uneducated eye, it is the only church in the State where art has had an opportunity to express itself. In the city of San Francisco we have lots of churches built at great cost—a Catholic cathedral, at the altar of which an Archbishop bends; an Episcopal ditto, where a rhetorical diocesan calls,

"Sinners, turn! why will you die?"

These we have, together with minor chapels without number, and yet not one of them is up to even the elementary in the art of architecture. Vestries, I have noticed, are not usually educated in principles of beauty as applied to church building, and if some of the members happen to have perceptions sufficiently clear to distinguish between the merits of a boss carpenter and an educated architect, be sure they have no chance with the pig-headed rich who constitute the majority of such bodies, or with those, at least, who, unable to appreciate the true and beautiful in art, threaten to withdraw their $10,000 subscriptions if some plan is not adopted which violates all rules of beauty and proportion.

I think the San Matéo architect had almost all his own way with the church, although I do not like the placing and form of the memorial tower, and the belfry over-riding all. But as this building is such an advance in taste and style, all desire to find fault is lost in the admiration a spectator feels as he gazes on its winning beauty. KUZZILBASH.

OUR BOOK TABLE.—Among the new books placed on our table by A. Roman & Co. are Sir Morton Peto's "Resources of America," and Goldwin Smith's "Lectures on the Study of History," both of which are more extensively reviewed in another column. "The Growth of the Wild Olive" is the suggestive title of three characteristic lectures by Ruskin, on Work, Traffic, and War. Among the volumes awaiting notice are "Footlight Flashes," an entertaining and instructive, though somewhat affectedly written, sketch of the stage and an actor's experiences, by W. Dandge, comedian; and "The Mute Singer," "Chandos," "Hidden Depths," "Love's Conflict," "Kate Marstone," and "Armadale," to which we have not yet had time to more particularly refer.

AMUSEMENTS.

AT Maguire's Opera House, Mr. Richard Younge, who opened the week here as a tragic star, not coming up to the requirements of a San Franciscan audience in that respect—now, perhaps, more than usually fastidious after having supped on Forrest—quietly withdrew after the third night, and disappeared from the dramatic firmanent of the Opera House. All the honors of the first night's performance were borne off by the regular members of the company; Mrs. Edwin, Mrs. Harry Jackson, and Messrs. McCullough, Barry, Anderson, and White coming out quite brilliantly in that old-time legitimate play of A New Way to Pay Old Debts. The ladies acted as if by intuition. The parts played by the last three gentlemen and stage veterans, had something of the thoroughness of characterization that belonged to the old legitimate Park Theatre school of more than a quarter of a century ago, when the elder Booth trod the stage as "Sir Giles Overreach"—the very embodiment of passion, power, and genius—positively electrifying his audience by his wonderful personation of this passionate character. Doubtless the early dramatic lessons, like our school-boy speeches, are the most thoroughly learned and remain longest in the memory, and it is owing to this fact that Messrs. Barry and Anderson render so effectively some of the characters of the Shakspearian and standard plays. One of the gentlemen, at least, is a graduate of the "Old Park," and is never so well at home as in the description of plays referred to.

Miss Kate Denin—to get back to the programme again—headed the bill, and reappeared on Thursday evening, playing the leading piece that was produced for the Dashaways' benefit on Saturday evening last—(Asmodeus)—when there was not a dry mouth in the house—to well-filled benches. Last evening Mr. McCullough played "Richard" very creditably for his benefit, and had deservedly a good house.

Asmodeus and the farce of An Object of Interest will be presented for to-day's matinée; and Oliver Twist and Jenny Lind for this evening's entertainment.

Lady Don, a lively and sparkling extravaganza and burlesque actress, and an excellent singer, will make her début on Monday evening as "Josephine," in the Daughter of the Regiment, and in the new burlesque of Kenilworth. Lady Don has achieved elsewhere a high professional reputation, and unquestionably has talents and ability enough as an actress to win success and public favor.

—

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.—The interruption of the Italian Opera season by fire and water in an adjoining building, and consequent dampness in the dressing-rooms of the theatre, leaves us but two performances to notice since our last issue. On Saturday evening Lucia di Lammermoor was produced in a style hitherto unequaled on this coast, with Signorina Brambilla in her great character of "Lucia," Signor Morley—his first appearance this season—as "Edgardo," Signor Mancusi as "Enrico," and Signor Milleri as "Raimondo," constituting altogether a remarkably strong cast. The audience, though not so large as on the regular subscription nights, was thoroughly appreciative, and recalled the singers again and again by most tumultuous applause. Signorina Brambilla sang and acted with great delicacy, especially in the mad scene, where her "Spargi d'amaro pianto," and the exquisite cadenza with flute obligato accompaniment, were given with a perfection rarely equalled. We must credit Mr. Koppitz, by the way, with his admirable execution of the elaborate flute solo in the first act, just preceding the appearance of "Lucia;" it was heartily enjoyed, and we have always wished that Signorina Brambilla would delay her entrance a moment, in order that the flutist might receive his well merited applause, uninterrupted by the greeting always given to the prima donna; it would be a graceful act of courtesy on her part, and would redound to her credit with an intelligent audience. Signor Morley seems to have profited by his long vacation, his pure tenor voice being in fine order, and only failing him for an instant in the last act, while his artistic rendering of the music deserves the highest praise; he was frequently and heartily applauded. Signor Mancusi sang and acted with great spirit, and Signor Milleri was powerful and effective in the part of "Raimondo," never before so well filled here.

Verdi's Attila was produced on Monday evening with gorgeous costumes and appropriate scenery and stage effects. The music, with the exception of a trio made familiar to us by the Bianchis at concerts, was new to Californian audiences, and requires at least two or three repetitions to be thoroughly appreciated; the first impression was favorable, however, and the performance wonderfully successful considering that three of the artists had never appeared in the opera before. After a second hearing we may have something to say of the details of the music; meantime it would be a good plan for the management to publish a cheap libretto, as nothing of the sort is to be had here, and even the score is not accessible. On Monday Faust will be produced, with Milleri as "Mephistopheles," Mancusi as "Valentine," Brambilla as "Margarita," Morley as "Faust," Miss Landesmann as "Siebel," and Mlle. Tourney as "Maria." (We inadvertently neglected, last Saturday, to credit M'lle. Tourney with her performance in the character of "Adalgisa;" it was excellent in many respects, and was favorably received.) The well known Second Artillery Band has been secured for the stage in Faust, and the March alone, thus rendered, would be fully worth the price of admission. The management, with untiring (but we think mistaken) energy, will produce Nabuco on Wednesday, and Un Ballo on Friday evening.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Marc Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

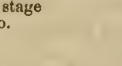
Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6-3m Proprietor.

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,



PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. je15 3m

COME AND SEE ME!

DR. JOHN HEALD, DENTIST,

HAS REMOVED TO THE
CORNER KEARNY AND CALIFORNIA STS,
Where he will be pleased to see all old friends, and plenty of new ones. Every variety of Dental Operations performed in the best manner, and at prices that shall suit all persns. ☞ENTRANCE ON CALIFORNIA SREET.
ap28-3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
my28 Lied street, San Francisco.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that, in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco made on the 2d day of April, 1866, in the matter of the Estates of Herman R. Haste and Julia Haste, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder, for cash, payable in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Saturday, the 18th day of August, 1866, at twelve o'clock, noon, of that day, at the office of D. P. Barstow, Esq., No 6 Montgomery Block, in the City and County of San Francisco, all the right, title and interest of said minors, Herman R. Haste and Julia Haste, of, in and to all the one undivided one-half part of all that certain lot of land situated in the City and County of San Francisco, and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Merchant street, 23 feet easterly from the north east corner of Merchant street and Dunbar's Alley; thence running easterly along said line of Merchant street 20 feet 2 1-2 inches; thence at a right angle northerly 68 feet and 9 inches; thence at a right angle westerly 20 feet 2 1 2 inches, and thence at a right angle southerly 68 feet and 9 inches to the point of beginning.

Offers or bids for said property will be received at the office of D. P Barstow, Esq., No. 6 Montgomery Block, from this date till Saturday, the 18th day of August, at twelve o'clock, noon, by the undersigned,

CHRISTIAN KIRK,
Guardian of Herman R. Haste and Julia Haste, minors.
(jy28 td)

GUARDIAN'S SALE
OF
REAL ESTATE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California, made on the 19th day of July, A. D. 1866, in the matter of the estates and guardianship of Violet Blair, Jesnp Blair and Lucy J. Blair, minors, the undersigned, the guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder, for cash, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Monday, the thirteenth day of August, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock M., at the office of the undersigned, in Rooms Nos. 4 and 5, Burron's Building, northwest corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets, in the city and county of San Francisco, where offers or bids will be received, all the right, title, interest and estate of the said Violet Blair, Jesnp Blair, and Lucy J. Blair, minors, in and to all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying and being in the said city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows, to wit:

1. The lot on the northerly side of Bryant street, commencing 100 varas westerly from Fonrth street, running thence westerly or southwesterly along Bryant street, 100 varas front by a uniform depth, northerly or northwesterly, of 100 varas, being the lot known on the official map of the city of San Francisco as 100-vara Lot No. 179. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-quarter of said lot.

2. The lot on the southwesterly corner of Main and Folsom streets, fifty varas square. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-half of said lot—subject to lease.

3. The lot on the southerly side of Filbert street, fifty varas square, commencing 50 varas westerly from Powell street, running thence westerly, 50 varas front by a uniform depth southerly of 50 varas, being the lot known on the official map of the city of San Francisco as 50-vara Lot No. 431. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-half of said lot—subject to lease.

4. The lot on the southeast corner of Dupont and Broadway streets, being sixty feet front on Dupont street by a uniform depth easterly on Broadway of fifty feet. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-half of said lot—subject to lease.

5. Lot on southeast corner of Powell and Greenwich streets, being 137½ feet front on Greenwich street by a uniform depth southerly on Powell street of 206 feet and 3 inches. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-half of said lot—subject to lease.

6. The lot on the northerly side of Silver street, commencing 75 feet easterly from Third street, thence northerly parallel to Third street 70 feet, thence easterly parallel to Silver street 150 feet, thence southerly parallel to Third street 70 feet, thence westerly along Silver street 150 feet to the point of beginning, being part of the 100-vara Lot No. 85. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-fourth—subject to contract for lease and improvements.

7. The lot next adjoining the above on the east, fifty feet front on Silver street by a uniform depth northerly of 70 feet, being part of 100-vara Lot No 85. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-fourth.

8. The lot on the southerly side of Silver street, commencing 100 feet easterly from Third street, thence easterly along Silver street 175 feet, thence southerly parallel to Third street 155 feet to Bryant street, thence westerly along the northerly side of Bryant street 175 feet, thence northerly 155 feet to place of beginning, being part of 100-vara Lot No. 85. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-fourth. The same can be sold in subdivisions.

9. Lot on the southeast corner of Sansome and Broadway streets, being fifty feet square. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-eighth—subject to lease.

TERMS OF SALE.—Cash, in gold coin of the United States: ten per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of the sale; balance on confirmation of sale by the Probate Court. Deeds to be made (including United States revenue stamps) at purchaser's expense. R. C. ROGERS,
Guardian, etc.

San Francisco, July 28, 1866.

NOTICE.—The remaining undivided interests in said lots, except Parcel No. 9, will be sold at same time.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.
MARY SMITH, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, be awarded to Plaintiff, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled. WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHES, Deputy Clerk.

A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney, 535 Clay street. je30 3m

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. INGHAM, C. H. WEBB

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN

TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam-engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,
SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.
Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.
COMMISSION CHARGE, . . . FIVE PER CENT
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Cluy,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always reuder satisfuction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults... fants.....	25 25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrafula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

See that the name, GEO. W. LAIRD, is stamped ON THE BOTTLE. No other is Genuine.

BLOOM OF YOUTH, OR LIQUID PEARL! The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.
Sold by Druggists everywhere.
HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay
ap27-3m San Francisco

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in tho same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. Wheu over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepavment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optioual.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MAchine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York,

1865.

my10-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigorate the System and enliven the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Overcome the effects of Drunkenness and Late Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always be called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
my11-6m San Francisco

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

TRY LE COUNT'S INK.

CORNER OF

Sacramento and Montgomery streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Post Office Address: Lock Box No 1477. je30 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S

Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Compluint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Sculds,
Skin Diseases

NOTICE.—None gennine without the engraved trade-murk around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United Stutes—at 25 cents per box or pot. R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine,
ap14-1y Agents for Pacific Coast.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)

SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1 FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
je16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
je30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

je17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & CO.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

SCHOOL FURNITURE.

RANKIN'S PATENT SCHOOL DESK;
Liquid Slating for Blackboard;
ARITHMETICAL FRAME;
Bahhitouian System of Writing—the Best System know

W. HOLT,
de9 305 Montgomery street, Room No 2.

QUINCY HALL,

545, 547, 549 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE LARGEST CLOTHING EMPORIUM in California. The daily sales from the establishment is a sufficient guarantee that the prices are less than those of any other house on the Pacific coast. Here you also find clothing of the best of California Cloth, both for Wholesale and Retail trade. Also, particular attention paid to making up fine clothing to order. jy21

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE

FOR

TAX COLLECTOR,

HENRY A. COBB,

OF THE FIRM OF COBB & SINTON,

jy21 NO. 407 CALIFORNIA STREET.

RING'S

VEGETABLE AMBROSIA

IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

sale, wholesale and retail, by

JOHN F. SNOW,
Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,
je23 San Francisco.

THE RACES RACILY REPORTED.

BY THE FAT CONTRIBUTOR.

THE two leading races are, the race of man, called the human race, and the horse race, which some consider *in*human. The Indian race is nearly run. A mill race or a race to a "mill" occurs when a prize fight is announced. Of all the races that have been upon the tapis recently, the black race attracts the most public attention. Congressmen make speeches upon it, clergymen preach upon it, and Wendell Phillips is ready to bet his money on it.

I flatter myself that I know something of the horse race. I had a passion for horse racing when a lad, and used to run horses with a neighbor's boy in Tompkins' lane. How vividly do I recall my last race. I rode the governor's grass fed mare, a sorrel, if I remember correctly, with two white spots in the forehead. She was a little foundered in one eye, but, with the exception of something like a watermelon on each knee, her intellect was unimpaired. Neighbor's boy rode a cream-colored chestnut, with a spring halt to harness. On the home-stretch I was a neck and half a shoulder-blade behind, gently encouraging the old mare to do her level best by the application of a corn-cutter to her aged ribs. The limp which she had in her eye prevented her taking a clear view of a heap of cobble-stones in the lane, and when she struck them there was a tumble, a clatter of stones, horse-shoes and old bones, and the old mare was wrecked, and no insurance. I was picked up bleeding and insensible, and I made the remainder of the home-stretch on a stretcher, coming in under one blanket. The race was decided in my favor. The judges allowed, although I was a neck behind when the old mare stumbled, yet, as I escaped without my neck being broken, I came out a neck ahead.

Although exceedingly fond of the races, I don't attend them very often now-a-days. My corpulency is too annoying. They charge me double for my ticket, and I can only get in through the horse gate. Then the boys yell, "Here comes the prize ox!" and insist on my being trotted over the course to show my points.

The first thing that struck me at a race course—no, not the first thing, for that was the shaft of a sulky, but the next thing—was the open disregard of the rules of the course. Although "public stand" was painted upon a shed in letters so large that the horse that runs may read, there was the public sitting down. But the public have to stand a great deal at the race course. I saw another shed labelled "reporter's stand." I asked a reporter what it meant, and he whispered "stand treat." I stood it.

"Bidding off pools for the horses," was the reply I received when I inquired the meaning of an auction scene on the course.

I innocently inquired if these pools were horse-ponds, but he only gave me a look of silent contempt. I finally dropped a fifty dollar note in one of those pools. No more "pool" for me.

Foot races are not as popular as they once were. People are too lazy to run now, unless they run for office. I ran for a prize once in a foot race. I was not quite as fat as I now am. I only weighed four hundred and forty-seven pounds. It happened thus: I was attending the County Fair. They got up a prize for the fastest runner. In those days (this was before the onerous tax on whiskey,) I used to indulge occasionally in that cup which makes us cheer and be inebriate, as Cowper hath it. In a playful moment I asked the boys to get me tight and have fun with me, and they took me at my word. The barkeeper assisted them by putting liquor in my gin-cocktail, while my back was turned, adding acoholic stimulant to my whiskey, and pouring decoctions of malt into my beer. I have since suspected that tobacco was mingled with my cigars, but on that point I am not quite clear.

Although it exhausted the contents of nearly every bar on the ground to do it, yet I got "full," and the fumes of the liquor rose from my stomach to my brain, as from an immense cauldron, causing me to behave in the most ridiculous and insane manner. I felt as etherial as a sylph, and actually went half through with a flip-flap, landing on my back. I attempted to throw a back somersault through a balloon, resulting in the total annihilation of a confectionery stand, into which I dove head first. I ruthlessly seized the "Fat Woman" in her tent and spun her around in a waltz until she shrieked. I offered to permit the "Living Skeleton" to hold me out at arm's length sitting on his palm. My absurdities drew a crowd of delighted spectators, and when it was suggested that I should compete for the prize at the foot race, fool that I was, I eagerly jumped at the offer.

No Athenian athlete ever entered the arena amid such tumultuous applause as greeted my appearance upon the course, peeled for the race. Talk about the Grecian games—they afforded no such "game" as I did that day. There I stood, among the other contestants, pants secured around the waist with several pairs of borrowed suspenders (my own were insufficient to go round,) shirt-collar unbuttoned, and bald head shining in the sun like a polished snuff bladder, or a ten-cent watermelon.

The crowd jeered and yelled. One advised me to lie down and roll around the course. Another said if I couldn't run around, I had better black my face and try a "walk around." I think he was a minstrel.

"You run a foot-race?" said a butcher, derisively, taking in my size and fatness with a professional eye, "there is only one thing you are fit to run."

"What is that?" said I.

"Run Candles!"

Frenzied by the insult and the yell of laughter which went up from the crowd, I rushed at my tormentor, who turned and fled. As I pursued him, devastation followed on my track. I overturned threshing-machines, got entanged among cultivators, upset bee-hives, crumbled patent fences like glass, in getting over them; dashed through the floral department, amid the shrieks of the women, as flower-roots went toppling to the ground; and, finally, in my blind frenzy, stumbled headlong into a vat of crude petroleum. A huge dredging-machine, for use in our harbors, being on the grounds, was brought into requisition, and I was scooped up and left high in the air to dream. If I had had any itching to be "in oil" before, that experience satisfied me. Thus ended my first and last foot-race.

A BEAR IN A BEDROOM.—The Milwaukie Sentinel states, a few nights since a tame bear, which is kept by the proprietor of Cambria House, in that city, got loose from his kennel and started on an exploring expedition through the premises. Finding a door open, Bruin entered, and made his way through the house. In passing through the hall he came in contact with one of the servant girls, en dishabille, who, supposing that the bear was bent on mischief, fled, screaming, into a bedroom close at hand. Bruin, seeming to appreciate a joke, pursued her closely, and took his stand in the door. The girl, seeing retreat cut off, crept under the bed to hide from the monster. The inmate of the couch, a lady, being awakened by the screams of the girl, and seeing Bruin making his way toward the bed, started up in a hurry, completing her toilet in a more expeditious manner, we venture to say, than she had ever done in her life before, and added her screams to those of the girl. The bear commenced a charge upon the fair ones, being evidently in a sportive mood. By a dexterous flank movement he cornered them both, and raising himself upon his hind legs, he looked intently into their faces, as if to say, "What do you think now, my dears?" By this time nearly the whole house was aroused, and came to the rescue of the besieged. Bruin was seized by some of the masculine gender and taken to his kennel, while the frightened women were taken care of by the female portion of the house. They blushed at having been seen in so scant an apparel, and afterward laughed at the groundlessness of their fright.

THE publication of newspapers is not as safe a business in Prussia as might be desired. What not to say is the chief look-out of their conductors. The Princess Frederick Charles, Queen Victoria's daughter, recently gave birth to a daughter, and shortly after the infant was taken to church to be baptized. The Kreuz Zeitung published a report of the ceremony, enumerating the distinguished personages present, not forgetting the very young juvenile who was the party most interested. Another journal, the Bourse Gazette, criticised the account, and humorously asked if the conduct of the baby was up to the demands of the occasion. This was an imputation which the sovereign house of the Hohenzollern could not endure. The Gazette was seized, and charges preferred against it of insulting one of the royal family. When the trial came on, the defendant asked that the leading physicians be called upon to testify whether a child five weeks old could be properly described as a personage and as having pursued any conduct. The case was here becoming too ludicrous to permit its absurdity being unperceived by even the stupid dignity of royalty, and the court acquitted the offending editor, censuring him, however, for his disregard of propriety. A more laughable circumstance has hardly occurred since the days when the poor Spanish woman, who wished to present her Queen with a pair of stockings, was rebuffed with the question, "Do you know that the Queens of Spain have no legs?"

The people of Martha's Vineyard have been congratulating themselves upon the high state of morals in that community—there being not a single case before the Supreme Court; but it has since leaked out that the presiding Judge had his new hat stolen during the session.

A colored preacher out South baptized forty of his congregation one Sabbath, and charged them a dollar a-piece. Receiving pay from but two of the crowd, he remarked that he "wan't gwine to muss himself up for two dollars."

J. R. MEAD & Co. announce elsewhere that they will sell their fine stock of Custom-Made Clothing for the next thirty days at a great reduction, to make room for their coming Fall Importations. Their stores are located on the corner of Montgomery and Bush streets, and on the corner of Washington and Sansome streets.

USE Davidson's Circassian Bloom—the best toilet article extant. For sale by all druggists.

FRANCE was to have had its eleventh census completed in the latter half of last month. It will only confirm the well known tardy increase of the French population, which, in 1861, including Savoy and the Maritime Alps, amounted to some thirty-seven and a half million souls. The past five years, it has been observed, have been unusually exempt from the three scourges of war, pestilence, and famine, and afford the most favorable opportunity of ascertaining the normal growth and progress of the nation. Roughly estimated, the number of births in France yearly may be set down at 1,000,000 against not less than 800,000 deaths, which is about one-fourth the rate of increase across the Channel. The depletion of the rural departments to the advantage of those which contain great cities, has reached an alarming extent. In the decade 1851–1861, the department of the Seine gained upwards of half a million inhabitants though the total increase throughout France was less than a million. The humors of the census are not wanting in the present instance. It is made soberly to appear that women preponderate in the pulpit, in civil office, at the bar, and in the practice of medicine. This arose from enumerating in the same columns, as belonging to the personnel of a profession, all those who are supported by it; that is to say, not only the barrister, but the barrister's wife and daughters and maids; not only the priest, but his sisters, nieces, and female servants.—Nation.

THE MAN WHO NEVER HAS ANYTHING OF HIS OWN.—Of course you have encountered this pest. He borrows your penknife, your razor, your writing utensils, your umbrella; and what you lend him goes, as a rule, to that bourne from which no traveller returns. Not that he is dishonest, but he considers himself a sort of pensioner at large upon the world for minor conveniences, and has no idea that their restoration is expected. As he is usually a good-natured fellow, who would give you anything he had if he had anything to give, you don't like to snub him, and so he passes through life in his shiftless, careless way, unconscious of his demerits—a tolerated nuisance. Willingly would you raise a subscription, heading the list of donors yourself, to furnish him with all he borrows. But it would be useless. There is no tenacity in his slipshod nature. Whatever you give him would slip through his fingers. Beside, your professional borrower of small chattels prefers a loan to a gift. So far as your personal comfort is concerned, it is best to meet his application for loans with an emphatic "No!" He is not pertinacious. A few rebuffs will suffice. He knows well enough that if you won't supply the article he wants, somebody else will. If you are "mean," there are others who are "generous."

THE French papers speak of a new system of embalming, the invention of M. Audigier. It differs from the systems hitherto in use in the manner of introducing the preservative liquid. Heretofore it has been necessary to make incisions in the body for this purpose, but M. Audigier introduces it by the mouth, and also rubs the skin with a vegetable powder impregnated with the same liquid. The latter part of the process is not absolutly necessary, and the embalming may be performed after the body has been placed in the coffin. The official report states that after the lapse of twelve months, bodies which had been submitted to the process were in a perfect state of preservation, the flesh having become as hard as wood.

AN Anglo-Saxon cemetery, of the pagan period, and of considerable extent, near Market Harborough, in Leicestershire, England, has been lately the scene of extensive excavations, which have produced a considerable number of the usual objects, such as spear-heads, knives, umbos of shields, beads, etc., found in Anglo-Saxon graves. Among them was found a fine example of the double-edged Teutonic sword, thirty-four inches and a half in length, and rather more than two inches broad. The graves were laid in rows, disposed east and west, with the feet towards the east.

THE Detroit (Mich.) Advertiser is sponsor for the following: About one year ago, one of our business men visited New York city, and while there ordered a half dozen cartes de visite of himself, which he distributed among his friends in that place. A few days ago he was surprised to find one of the counterfeit resemblances in possession of the family cook. An investigation into the matter disclosed the fact that she had received it from a fortune-teller in New York city, who advertised to forward a correct likeness of any young lady's future husband, all for the sum of fifty cents, which amount the cook had remitted, according to the advertisement, and received her employer's likeness in return.

SICKNESS is an affliction that waits on us all. None are exempt and there are none but need relief from its attacks. Whoever can furnish this becomes our benefactor. A conviction prevails that Dr. Ayer does it. Disorders of the blood have been healed by his Sarsaparilla, and affections of the lungs by his Cherry Pectoral, too frequently and too distinctly to be disputed. His Ague Cure is said, by those who use it, to never fail. Reader, if you must have medical aid, take the best of medicine. Poor remedies are dear as good are cheap, at any price you have to pay for them.—Charleston Courier.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the ekin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for and take none but LYON'S, bearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervation, listlessness, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaints they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedeutary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spavin, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Strains, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westbrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky. and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off nd turning gray, and promotes its growth upon pre maturely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.

E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no other e7m

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

E GOLDSMITH & Co., at No. 646 Sacramento street, three doors below Kearny, have just received some beautiful new style Garibaldis and Zouave Jackets, that for taste and style are particularly worthy of the attention of our lady readers. They have also a fine assortment of Ladies' Furnishing Goods of the choicest description. French corsets for one dollar. A great variety of French toilet and fancy articles, the newest styles of buttons and dress trimmings, may always be found at Goldsmith's 646 Sacramento street.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend. JOSEPH SPARROW.

DAINTY WORK.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of MRS. C. COOK, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifico known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
je2 4m NEW YORK.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AUCTIONEERS.
Olney & Co., removed to 418 Montgomery street.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.
S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Fineh & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
I. M. Wontworth & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine st.

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulvermsn, 614 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Crsnna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.
S. W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mill.)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyce & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Instituto, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J J. Millor, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal'
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, agent, S E cor Mont'y & Pine

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N.E. cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. C. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohlor, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.
T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morsheat, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MAPS.
Pacific Msp Depot, A. Gonsoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.

PIANO SCHOOL.
Mr. Gustave A. Scott, at Miel Institute, 55 South Park.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. . . . Petaluma.
mar24-6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

FURNITURE
AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!
LATEST STYLES!
The Best Workmanship,
AND LOWEST PRICES!
AT
Goodwin & Co.'s
FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,
Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS
IN FINE CLOTHING,
AND
Gent's Furnishing Goods,
TRUNKS, VALISES, CARPET BAGS, ETC.,
Nos. 200 and 202 Montgomery street,
Corner of Bush, - - San Francisco.

JOS. WINTERBURN & CO.

J. WINTERBURN, V. A. TORRAS, W. HOFFSCHNEIDER.
(Successors to W. P. Harrison,)
Printers and Electrotypers,
413 TO 417 CLAY ST., (Below Sansome,)
SAN FRANCISCO.
ALL KINDS OF JOB PRINTING
Neatly and Promptly Executed.
ELECTROTYPING
Done at the shortest notice.
Samps of all kinds made to order.
Printing in Spanish, French, German and Italian Languages, executed with correctness.
A "Mammoth" and two No. 3 Hand Presses FOR SALE very cheap. my3-3m

SMOKE
THE PATEST
RUSSIAN CIGARETTES,

MANUFACTURED BY
GIBB & STAHL,
S.W. COR. KEARNY AND SACRAMENTO STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.
☞ For sale at all Cigar Stores. ap28-3m

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship Work o all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.
All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.
Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.
JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
je10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!
MONEY TO LOAN
On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,
53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, President

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO
OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.
ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,
Cor. Sansome and California streets, San Francisco
Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.
Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.
Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.
WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,
WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15, 1866.
GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!
THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship
MOSES TAYLOR,
ON WEDNESDAY, - - AUGUST 15,
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship
SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.
☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to
I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

DO
YOU WANT ANY Printing?
IF YOU DO, GO TO
411 CLAY STREET,
BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.
PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by
M. D. CARR & CO.
je30-3m

A CARD.
M. Howard's Hair Restorative,
NO. 315 MONTGOMERY STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
THE ABOVE PREPARATION, which has been recently discovered and patented, is purely a Vegetable Extract.
The undersigned are fully aware of the many unsatisfactory and useless preparations for restoring hair that have been introduced to the puplic, and how little confidence is to be placed in any pretensions to restoring the hair to bald heads, but,
HAVING TRIED MR. HOWARD'S PREPARATION, we are able to state that it not only prevents the Hair from falling out, but absolutely reproduces it, and that we now have good suits of Hair growing where we were entirely bald. Therefore, as a matter of justice to Mr. Howard, and of consolation to bald heads, we tender him this testimonial Mr H. keeps the article for sale in bottles, with directions for its use, or applies it himself, as may be desired.
San Francisco, April 6, 1866.

Frank M. Thayer,	R. A. Redman,
W. S Duvis,	J. O. Rountree,
T. A. Hall,	G. W. Gamble,
A. C. Knox,	J. W. Miller,
Bradbury Sanborn,	E. C. McComb,
George Wells,	D. C. Ross,
Joseph Wells,

jy7

HEUSTON,
HASTINGS
& CO.
The Fashionable Clothiers
OF
SAN FRANCISCO,
Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE
STOCK OF
CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,
GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,
TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,
ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT REDUCED PRICES.
jc17-3m

MEAGHER, TAAFE & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS OF
DRY GOODS, LINENS,
FURNISHING GOODS,
YANKEE NOTIONS,
FANCY GOODS, ETC.
AGENTS FOR THE
MOUNT VERON DUCK COMPANY
NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.
RETAIL HOUSE, - - - NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
jy21-3m Lick House.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,
Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,
On Bush-st., adjoiuin Russ House.
SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. my5-3m

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS
INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.
CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.
THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.
CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

GREAT TRIUMPH!!
STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.
The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."
A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,
M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.
PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.
THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.
THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY
And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:
1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.
2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.
3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.
4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.
5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.
DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.
In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained.
The peculiar construction of this superior machine admits of its being worked with a much smaller charge of quick silver, to any given amount of pulp than the flat-bottomed Pans. The spiral springs greatly assist in the work of reduction, by allowing the free admission of the pulp between the mullers and dies, so that the pulp is made to actually work upon itself—as the dust of the diamond is made to reduce the gem itself.
Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.
A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.
W. D. FARRAND

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street, - - - Petaluma.
mar24-6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the daty berehy imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall he deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any hill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper	$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right	05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand	02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100	05
Every additional $100, or fractional part	05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may he expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S.	02
Every additional $100, or fractional part	02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to he exported to a foreign port or place	10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the considerationdoes not exceed $500	50
For every additional $500, or fractioual part thereof	50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels	05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less	50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof	50
Boud for the due performance of the duties of any office	1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may he required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule	25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons	10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50	10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000	25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part	25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such	25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100	05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y,	25
Certificates, other than specified	05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandam of sale	10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500	1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse	50
Gauger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr.	25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.	1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction.	50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons	5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels	25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500	50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less	01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1	02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof	05
Photogrnphs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof	05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof	1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon	25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries	10
To receive or collect rents	25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate	1 00
For any other purpose	50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof	50
Protest of note, hill, acceptance check or draft,	25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property	02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000	10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for	25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs	25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State	50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid	50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record	50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100	50

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

The London Quarterly Review (Conservative.)
The Edinburgh Review (Whig.)
The Westminster Review (Radical.)
The North British Review (Free Church.)
Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejadice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum	$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum	7
For any three of the Reviews, per annam	10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum	12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum	4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum	7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an.	10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annam.	13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum	15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $48, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews.

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
38 Walker street, New York.

TYLER BROTHERS,

NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,

SAN FRANCISCO,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

SCHOOL BOOKS,

STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

BLANK BOOKS,

PORTFOLIOS,

JUVENILE BOOKS,

FANCY ARTICLES,

CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we stamp with

INITIALS,

In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.

je23

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
mar24-6m Main street, Petaluma.

OCCIDENTAL
HOMESTEAD
Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Capital Stock, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

This Association was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 409, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
624 Clay street, San Francisco.
ja1

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,
SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

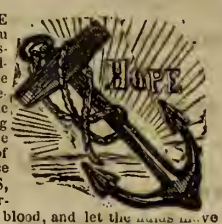
To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD



CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M.

F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent
mh25

AYER'S
PILLS.

ARE YOU SICK, FEEBLE and complaining? Are you out of order, with your system deranged and your feelings uncomfortable? These symptoms are often the prelude to serious illness. Some fit of sickness is creeping upon you, and should be averted by a timely use of the right remedy. At once TAKE AYER'S PILLS, and cleanse out the disordered humors, purify the blood, and let the mass move on unobstructed in health again. They stimulate the functions of the body into vigorous activity, purify the system from the obstructions which make disease. A cold settles somewhere in the body; and deranges its natural functions. These, if not relieved, react upon themselves and the surrounding organs, producing general aggravation, suffering and derangement. While in this condition, and see how directly they restore the natural action of the system, and with it the buoyant feeling of health again. What is true and so apparent in this trivial and common complaint is also true in many of the deep-seated and dangerous distempers. The same purgative effect expels them. Caused by similar obstructions and derangements of the natural functions of the body they are rapidly and many of them surely cured by the same means. None who know the virtue of these Pills will neglect to employ them when suffering from the disorders they cure, such as Headache, Foul Stomach, Dysentery, Bilious Complaints, Indigestion, Derangement of the Liver, Costiveness, Constipation, Heartburn, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Worms and Suppression, when taken in large doses.

TAKE AYER'S PILLS,

They are Sugar-Coated, so that the most sensitive can take them easily, and they are surely the best purgative medicine yet discovered.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco, and all Dealers.
jy26-2m

THE PACIFIC
INSURANCE COMPANY,

HAVING ADDED

MARINE INSURANCE

TO THEIR BUSINESS, ARE NOW PREPARED TO ISSUE POLICIES ON

Marine, Inland Navigation, and Fire Risks,

ON THE MOST FAVORABLE TERMS.

Office, 436 California street.

J. HUNT, President
A. J. RALSTON, Secretary. my5-3m

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS.CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

COMMERCIAL EDUCATION.

Pacific Business College,
751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

An Institution designed to prepare Young and Middle-aged men for an active and successful BUSINESS LIFE.

This is the largest, most complete, and thorough Institution of the kind on the coast, and

THE ONLY

Commercial College which is conducted on Actual Business Principles. Its great system of Business Training is endorsed by the Most Eminent Financiers and Business Men of the Nation.

REGULAR BANKS AND BUSINESS OFFICES have been introduced, by which we are enabled to fit our Students in the best possible manner, and shortest possible time, for active Business Life.

Those in pursuit of a

PRACTICAL BUSINESS EDUCATION

should examine the merits of this College. Send for the COLLEGE REVIEW, giving full particulars of the College, besides containing other Important and Interesting matter. Sent free to all desiring it.

Further particulars can be had by calling at the College, or addressing M. K. LAUDENSLAGER, President fe17 Business College, San Francisco.

YANKEE NOTIONS
AND
FANCY GOODS!

MERCHANTS wanting Goods in this line should not fail to examine our stock, which is new and attractive, before buying elsewhere.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
jy21-3m Battery street, near Pine.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

THIS AFTERNOON.....AUGUST 4,

Miss Kate Denin,

SUPPORTED BY THE OPERA HOUSE COMPANY, will appear in the comedy of

ASMODEUS!

And the Farce of

An Object of Interest.

THIS EVENING.....AUGUST 4,

Oliver Twist,

AND Jenny Lind.

MONDAY EVENING—FIRST APPEARANCE OF

LADY DON,

As "JOSEPHINE," in the CHILD OF THE REGIMENT, and also in an entirely new burlesque entitled

KENILWORTH.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - $1 00
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - - 25

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,

jy19 1m SAN FRANCISCO.

THE Accidental Insurance Co.,

OF NEW YORK,

ISSUES POLICIES INSURING AGAINST INJURIES OF all kinds, and death resulting from accident

In case death does not result from the injury, the insured receives a weekly compensation as long as he is disabled (not to exceed twenty-six weeks.)

Policy.	Premium.	Weekly Compensation.
$1,000	$ 5 00	$ 5 00
$2,000	$10 00	$10 00
$5,000	$25 00	$25 00
$10,000	$50 00	$50 00

SEA VOYAGE POLICIES,

Covering risk to New York, cost $2 per $1,000.

☞ No Medical Exnmination required.

Life Insurance.

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
HARTFORD, CONN.

For Policies, or further information, apply to

A. D. SMITH & CO., Agents,

Northwest corner Montgomery and Secramento streets.
au4 3m

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

ja27-tf between California and Pine.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

ja27-tf batwsen California and Pine.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

Bianchi's Grand Italian

Opera Troupe.

General Director.....J. P. Crowly
Treasurer.....A. Birrell

Reopening Night,

MONDAY EVENING.....AUGUST 6,

Will be presented Gounod's Opera of

FAUST!

Margarita.....Signorina Elvira Brambilla
Faust.....Signor Morley
Valentine.....Signor Mancusi
Mephistopheles.....Sr. S. Milleri
Siebel.....M'lle Jennie Landesmann
Maria Schwerlein.....Louisa Tourney
Wagner.....Mons Ronconvieri

The Chorus will be enlarged, and the splendid Band of the Second U. S. Artillery, under the direction of Joseph Schmidt, Esq., will lend its valuable assistance in giving effect to the production of this Magnificent Opera.

CONDUCTOR.....MR. RUDOLPH HEROLD
Scenery by Mr. Rogers. Costumes by Mr Taylor.

Regular Subscription Nights, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Dress Circle, Orchestra and Parquette.....$1 00
Reserved seats, 50 cents extra.
Gallery.....50

☞ The Box Office is open from 9 A. M. for the securing of reserved seats for season tickets.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal.

THE FOURTH ANNUAL SESSION of the above Institution commenced July 20th, 1866.

The age for admission is from seven to fifteen years. For those more than fifteen years of age, it will be necessary to have testimonials of good character from respectable parties.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance; also, such sum to be deposited as will be sufficient to pay the traveling expenses of the student to his place of residence, and other contingent expenses, such as books, clothes, etc.

No Student will be received without such deposit.

The terms are so reduced (less than one-half the usual charges in this State) that the Institution can be conducted only on a rigid cash principle: hence any failure in remitting the Pension will oblige the authorities of the College to charge ten per cent. additional, or forward the student to his parents or guardian.

Though it be a Catholic Institution, yet pupils of all denominations will be admitted, and their religious convictions respected; but, for the sake of uniformity all will be required to be present at the public religious exercises.

Bedding, towels, etc., will be furnished by the Institution, to defray the cost of which ten dollars will be paid, once only, by each pupil, as an entrance fee.

Each pupil is required to be provided with a neat black suit for Sundays, and two other plain suits, three pairs of boots, with sufficient linen, stockings, etc.

Five dollars will also be charged annually for medicines and medical attendance.

au4 1m REV P. J. GREY, President.

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of GEORGE D. HANSEN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of CHRISTIAN KIRK, the Executor of the estate of GEORGE D. HANSEN, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the heir and devisee of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

IT IS ORDERED, That all persons interested in the estate of the said George D. Hansen, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the court-room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on Wednesday, the fifth day of September, A. D. 1866, at eleven o'clock A M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate to the heir and devisee of the said George D. Hansen, deceased, according to law:

It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 5th day of September, A. D. 1866, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.

Dated, San Francisco, August 3d, 1866. 4w

ELEVENTH WARD,

DISTRICT NO. 1.

BOUNDARIES.

On the east by Seventh street, to Mission Cereek, on the south by Mission Creek, and Sixteenth street to Dolores street, and on the west by Dolores street to Market street, and westerly and northerly by Market street to Seventh street.

Voters are reminded that the poll list will be revised and corrected on MONDAY, the 6th instant, the last day for enrollment In the meantime, the Clerk may be found in his office, southwest corner of Twelfth and Howard streets, in the morning until 10 o'clock, and from 2 to 9 o'clock, P. M.

On Monday next (6th instant,) the Board of Registration will be in session from 9 o'clock A. M. to 1 o'clock, P. M., and from 4 to 9 o'clock, P. M., to hear applications of persons claiming the right to be enrolled, agreeably to the provisions of the Registry Law.

ALBERT G. RANDALL,
Clerk of Elections

STOP THAT COUGHING.

SOME OF YOU CAN'T, AND WE PITY YOU. You have tried every remedy but the ONE destined, by its intrinsic merit, to supersede all similar preparations It is not surprising you should be reluctant to try something else after the many experiments you have made of trashy compounds foisted on the public as a certain cure, but

NEWELL'S

PULMONARY SYRUP

is really the VERY BEST remedy ever compounded for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Consumption. Thousands of people in California and Oregon have been already benefited by the surprising curative powers of

NEWELL'S PULMONARY SYRUP,

and with one accord give it their unqualified approbation. We now address ourselves to all who are unacquainted with this, the greatest Panacea of the age, for the healing of all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, assuring you that has cured thousands, and it will cure you if you try it This invaluable medicine is pleasant to the taste, soothing, healing and strengthening in its effects; entirely free from all poisonous or deleterious drugs, and perfectly harmless under all circumstances.

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

Certificates from many prominent citizens of San Francisco accompany every bottle of

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

REDINGTON'S

Flavoring Extracts

ARE MADE FROM FRESH FRUITS. Each bottle holds twice as much as any other brand in the market, consequently they are the cheapest and the best. USE NO OTHER.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Agents for the Pacific Coast.

MARTHA WASHINGTON

HAIR RESTORER.

THIS IS A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY, and stands above comparison with any other article for the Hair ever brought before the public.

A PERFECT

Hair Restorer AND Hair Dresser

BOTH COMBINED IN ONE.

First—It is not a Dye.
Second—Will not Color the Skin.
Third—Will restore Gray Hair to a beautiful Black, Brown, Auburn, or whatever might have been its original color, and cause it to assume its former beauty.
Fourth—Will cure all Humors and Diseases of the Scalp.
Fifth—Will remove Dandruff and Scurf from the head, and keep the hair moist and silk like in its appearance as in youthful days.
Sixth—Will promote a healthy growth.
Seventh—Will prevent it from falling off, and cause it to grow on bald heads where there is life and vitality at the roots, but where these are gone there is no hope of success.
Eighth—The best testimony that can be given will be found inside of each bottle.

Warranted to do all we claim for it, or the money refunded after using two bottles. Try it and be convinced.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Price.....One Dollar

SIMONDS & CO., Proprietors,
Fitzwilliam, N. H.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

REDINGTON & CO.'S

Essence of Jamaica Ginger.

THIS VALUABLE PREPARATION, containing in a highly concentrated form all the properties of the Jamaica Ginger, has become one of the most popular domestic remedies for all diseases of the stomach and digestive organs.

As a tonic it will be found invaluable to all persons recovering from debility, whether produced by fever or otherwise, for whilst it imparts to the system all the glow and vigor that can be produced by wine or brandy, it is entirely free from the reactionary effects that follow the use of spirits of any kind.

It is also an excellent remedy for females who suffer from difficult menstruation, giving almost immediate relief to the spasms that so frequently accompany that period.

It gives immediate relief to Nausea, ceased by riding in a railroad car, or by sea sickness, or other causes.

It is also valuable as an external application for Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, etc.

REDINGTON & CO.,
au4-6m Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

LIST OF

Late Publications.

Armadale—a Novel—by Wilkie Collins
The Dove in the Eagle's Nest, by the author of The Heir of Redclyffe.
Shakspeare's Delineations of Insanity, Imbecility and Suicide, by A. O. Kellogg, M. D.
595 Pulpit Pungencies with a Table of Contents.
Footlight Flashes, by William Davidge, Comedian.
Hidden Depths—12mo.
Lectures on the Study of History; delivered in Oxford, 1859-61—by Goldwin Smith, M. A.
Kate Marstone; or, Happy Hearts Make Happy Homes.
The Mule Singer—a Novel—by Anna Cora Ritchie (Mowatt.)
Poetical Works of Thomas Buchanan Read—New Edition—3 vols.
Devotions of the Ages; or, Collects, Texts, and Lyrics, illustrative of the Christian Year, by Rev. N. G. Allen.
The Adventures of Captain Castagnette (illustrated, by Gustave Dore.
The Mormon Prophet and His Harem, by Mrs. C. V. Waite.
History of the Gipsies, by Walter Simson.
Josh Billings—His Book.
Beyminstre—a Novel—by the author of The Silent Woman, King's Cope, Mr. Warenne, etc.
Garden Vegetables, and How to Cultivate Them, by Fearing Burr, Jr New Edition.
Brief Biographical Dictionary, compiled and arranged by Rev Chas Hole and W. A. Wheeler.
Poems of Thomas Hood—New Edition, 12mo.
The Maiden and Married Life of Mary Powell.
The Dean's English, by G. Washington Moon.
President Lincoln Self-portrayed, by John M. Ludlow.
Temperance Recollections—an Autobiography—by John Marsh, D. D.
The Masquerade and other Poems, by John G. Saxe.
Life of Benjamin Silliman, by Geo. P. Fisher, 2 vols
Betsy Jane Ward—Better 1 to Artemus.
The Person of Christ, by Philip Schaff, D. D.
Asiatic Cholera, by R. Nelson, M. D.
The Laws of Short Whist, by J. L. Baldwin.
Speeches of Lord Macaulay—a New Edition, 2 vols.
Treasury of Bible Knowledge, by John Ayre.
Martineau's Essays—Philosophical and Theological.
Memoirs of the Right Hon. Richard B. Sheridan, by Thomas Moore.
Gilbert Rugge—a Novel—by the author of A First Friendship.
Short Sermons to Newsboys, by Chas. Loring Brace.
Stanley's History of the Jewish Church, 2d series.
Garden Flowers: How to Cultivate Them, by E. S Rand, Jr.
Adrift in Dixie, by Edmund Kirke.
The Philosophy of Art, by H. Taine.
Life of Emanuel Swedenborg, by William White.
Baked Meats of the Funeral, by Private Miles O'Reilly.
Recommended to Mercy—a Novel—by the author of Taken Upon Trust, Zoe's Band, etc.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street.
jy14 San Francisco.

A CARD.

Great Sale of Fine Clothing.

OUR WHOLE STOCK OF FINE CLOTHING and Gents' Furnishing Goods, for the next

THIRTY DAYS,

At Prices that Challenge Competition.

IT MUST BE SOLD, TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner Bush and Montgomery streets, and corner Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.

au4

GOOD NEWS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Teeth Extracted Without Pain

BY THE

ANÆSTHETIC SPRAY PRODUCER,

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

Partial to a full Upper Set of Teeth, for from $10 to $25, as usual. Filling with best Cement, $1; with Gold, from $1 to $3. All work warranted.

Office, 139 Fourth street, near Howard.
au4 3m J. P. CROWELL, Dentist.

BEER AND WINE SALOON.

Faust Cellar.

Southeast corner of Cloy and Montgomery streets.

A. L. THIELE.....Proprietor

WESTPHALIA HAMS, RUSSIAN CAVIAR, SARDINES, Anchovies, Swiss and Limburg Cheese, etc; the finest Brands of Liquors, Wines, Cigars, and Seltzer Water, Wholesale and Retail.

☞ Fishing and Hunting Parties fitted out at the shortest notice.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 12.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 11, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE.

Podgerings by the Way.
A Ghost Story.—By Iro.
England, Now and Then.
The Popular Sentimental.
Amusements.
Our Book-Table.
The Undecided Gentleman's Story.
Bridal Customs in Sweden.
The Summer Fashions.
A Prison in Madrid.
Circumstantial Evidence.
A Freak of Rothschild.
The Streets of Venice.
Capri and Capriotes.
Family Discipline.

POETRY:

The Secret Well.—By Charles Warren Stoddard.
Cable-Talk.—By M.

[For the Californian.]

PODGERINGS BY THE WAY.

No. 3.

SACRAMENTO is a city of great antiquity, having been well and widely known before the flood, which, however, did not purify it to any great extent—on the contrary, it had to accommodate the debris of its neighbors above, whose sins were washed away and lodged at Sacramento.

If I was not afraid of incurring the indignation and ire of the newspapers there, I should throw out a faint hint that it is sometimes hot in Sacramento; at any rate, it was so suggested by several perspiring friends of mine, whose names I am bound to suppress, if demanded, as they were well-meaning parties, and I do not like to hand them over to the tender mercies of an indignant newspaper public. When I went ashore from the Yosemite, at the delightful hour of 5 A. M., I had not such perspiring proofs of the fact as I had a few hours later. There is not much sleep to be obtained on board the steamboat after she arrives at the levee; for some people go ashore and some come aboard. A large colored delegation assemble in the cabins awaiting the egress of their prey, and in the most accommodating manner tender their services to "tote" anything, from a steam engine to a carpet sack. But justice to the colored population of Sacramento compels me to say that they are the most reliable and trustworthy "toters" of baggage I have met with anywhere, and never fail to charge all they agreed to; but, in all candor, I must confess they do not exceed the original sum agreed upon. Three of them volunteered to take my baggage for fifty cents a piece, there being three pieces. The job finished, the charges came to four dollars and fifty cents by their Daboll. There were three pieces, and each one charged fifty cents a-piece, and being three colored pussons engaged in the transaction, at a dollar and a half each, made up the some total as aforesaid. One of them remarking, "Boss, dat's de way us figure up here." I remarked that if so the temperature had a serious effect on my friend Daboll's principles. One juvenile contraband who had not "toted" anything, but had favored us with his society on the way to the cars, generously offered a compromise, and would take four bits for his services; and the others not to be outdone in liberality, conformed to that basis of settlement, and the "entente cordiale" was fully restored. The elder gentleman informed me confidentially that "totin" was mighty dull, and he had serious thoughts of retiring from the business and resuming the profession of boot-blacking, pending an expected appointment from Governor Low as clerk to an ash cart, or some other lucrative political office.

Sacramento is blessed with a great many early birds, but worms seem to be scarce, and, competition running high many of them stay up all night to be on hand at the worming—the passengers that land from the boats personating the worms, and the birds are generally the class denominated black, the climate being favorable to that species of ornithology.

The pursuit of an early cup of coffee, in that city, is attended with some difficulty—and the quality of the article is not strictly first class. The mud in the water enters largely into the compound, and assists in carrying out the fiction, requiring a powerful imagination on the part of the consumer to make up the flavor, in the absence of the berry. A cup of the compound being placed before me, I was obliged to instiute an enquiry as to whether it was intended for tea or coffee—and I discovered that it was entirely a matter of choice on the part of the consumer, as orders for either were filled from the same reservoir. I determined on a verdict of coffee in my case, and my friend, who never drank coffee, gave it as tea. It made very little difference, the charge being the same. With the addition of a couple of very doubtful eggs, apparently on the eve of deciding in favor of chickens, we made our hasty breakfast, and departed for the cars, which we found well filled by a large delegation of gentlemen uniformed in dusters and big boots—and, with a view to make room, or to give the boots a little fresh air, they were generally stuck out of the windows—the owners lolling on the seats, which position used up the accommodations, to the exclusion of just one-half the number they were supposed to seat. The conductor, however, went through the cars, punching up these luxurious gentlemen, and bringing them into a horizontal position. We arrived at Alta, the terminus of the road—the town itself had only arrived the day before, having been moved from the site of what had been the terminus a few days previous. Observing a carpenter setting up a first class saloon, I inquired if he intended to keep pace with the progress of the road; said he did, had moved "that ar shanty" four times, and intended to follow up the thing until he he reached his native State, old Missouri. It was getting hot, and, as I booked for an outside seat on the stage, I set out in quest of an umbrella, but, the assortment of dry goods being limited, none were to be had. In answer to my enquiries they said, "No umbrellas, but we've got a first rate article of whiskey." Not seeing the connection, I did not indulge in that substitute, but, going to the end of the platform, I saw abundant proof of the proof and flooring qualities of the article: three men who probably wanted umbrellas, and had tried the suggestion in lieu, lay under the end of the planks, and one at the bottom of a well that had progressed about ten feet down. The gentleman may have been intended as an illustration of Truth, but, if so, he was far from being able to speak it, for, when I "hollered" down at him, and asked what he was doing there, he'd reply, punctuated with frequent hic-cups, he was "goin' to ter China;" he had got about ten feet on his way there, but his prospect for going to even a warmer place was favorable. The driver sung out "All aboard!" which was not true, for none of us were; but we soon relieved him from the charge of wilful misrepresentation, and climbed in and up to our perches, and the agent having made us all get down again, to see if we were the same persons he saw up there, concluded, after cheeking us off a couple times, to complete the loading, by chucking up on top half a dozen Celestials, who, although paying the same fare, are considered deck freight. The Johns were evidently familiar with the dangers of their position, and immediately commenced securing themselves by taking turns with their pig-tails through the trunk handles, the rail, etc.; but it proved, unfortunately, premature in one case, as it was discovered that a valise belonging to the other coach had been put on ours, whereupon the driver picked it up and threw it down to the agent, carrying with it a little, thin Chinaman who had secured himself to the handle. The property was soon assorted, however, the valise being thrown on to the other coach, and John pitched back on top of ours, where he belonged. The only visible effect on John apparently was to cause his eyes to stick out somewhat, and I doubt if he was able to shut them for twenty-four hours after. The agent having endorsed the driver's assertion of "All aboard," the horses, apparently having more faith than in the former case, made a determination to move—one of the leaders began to kick, whereupon the driver exclaimed, "Oh, will you!" touching him up with his whip. The horse thought he would, and did—kicked over the trace; but a second application of buckskin induced him to change his mind and make a better use of his heels, and away we went, running down a lean dog that had planted himself in the middle of the road and was taking a survey of the improvements rapidly springing up about him, and I judged from his expression of disgust that he did not approve of the location. His reveries were speedily cut short, as was his tail, by the wheel of the coach; and I presume, if that dog concludes to go into any business in that place, it will be in the re-tail line. The ride, although a hot one, was pleasant, and the scenery magnificent. We arrived at Excelsior, the place of debarcation for the Meadow City mines, about noon; a rapidly growing town, the principal business being the sale of the substitute for umbrellas, interspersed with a little something in the "cloding" way. A gentleman with a long beard, long duster, and long boots, climbed up on the stage and inquired if I was "Up thar to buy mines?" I said "No; I was up thar to go to Virginia City," and he got down again.

I was afraid to get off the coach for fear I might be assessed on some claim on suspicion. The principal productions of the city of Excelsior appear to be long hair, long dusters, long boots, Chinamen, mules, and granite boulders which come tumbling down much too frequently from the heights above, where hundreds of Chinamen were at work on the railroad grade. It was certainly uphill work, and the towering precipice of solid granite seems to be the orignal rock of ages that has never yet been cleft for anybody, but that job is being done by Governor Sanford and his associates.

The tumbling down of these big chunks of porpyry affords rather pleasant excitement for the people below, as they must keep one eye out for the descending boulders, and it sometimes interrupts their pursuits. A chap a little farther up the road, in the midst of a horse-trade was cut short in his enumeration of the qualities of the animal by being obliged to make a six-foot leap over a log to avoid a coming event in the shape of a ten-ton cobble-stone that was tearing and crashing its way to the foot of the mountain. The gentleman contemplating purchasing being apparently a new-comer and not to the manner born, left suddenly in the other direction, looking decidedly wild. Such is life at Excelsior.

We did not dine at Excelsior, and the people generally there looked as if they had not, either, and did not know to any degree of certainty when that happy event would come off. I presume the proprietors of the stage line, in mercy to us, concluded it would be no worse for us to go on with sharpening appetites to some place where the edge could be taken off more satisfactorily; and at four o'clock we reached the summit of the Sierra Nevadas. A magnificent view of the valley was obtained; Donner Lake, like a burnished mirror, was before us; the road lay through a sea of rocks and along precipices that made one shudder to look at. As the horses at a gallop make the windings and turnings down the grade, the driver, with wonderful skill, guiding them with apparent ease—one foot on the "break" and his eye on the leaders—such a ride is worth days of travel to experience. We went down at a lively gait, and drew up at the station just on the bank of the lake, nestled under the shade of immense pine trees. Having washed the dust from our faces, we were glad enough to hear the welcome announcement of "dinner." That cup of Sacramento river warm water and the hen-fruit taken at five o'clock had not proved reliable for an all-day journey, and I for one was hungry—the young woman who waited on the table evidently thought so, too, for she looked at me with open-mouthed wonder. She was good-looking, but such an appetite as mine was rather discouraging to sentiment, and the brief time allowed did not permit of efforts to make an impression, although I think I made one: which was, that no money was made out of me on that occasion.

An enthusiastic angler—one of our passengers—inquired if there were not plenty of fish in the lake. The landlord said there were; whereupon the gentlemen concluded to stop over and fish. I envied him; but after starting, the driver informed me in confidence that there were fish in the lake, but the deuced bite did any one ever get yet from any fish worth catching. This consoled me.

The air becoming chilly, I concluded to get inside; and thereby hangs a tale—which I will tell next week—a true tale somewhat mixed up with a pig-tail, which, ha! ha! but I have not time to unfold it now.

PODGERS.

THE UNDECIDED GENTLEMAN'S STORY.

I AM about to throw myself on the mercy of the public, by laying before them a short sketch of my past life. I did not mean to do so, and even now I am uncertain as to the wisdom of trying to create a sympathy among the mass. I have been some years making up my mind, or rather deciding or undeciding it; but now that I have decided, I think I shall on the whole be glad.

I am not a philanthropist; I do not expect my story to change the course of human nature, by altering especial peculiarities. I don't assume to be an example, but I lay humble claims to merit as a warning, and as such I reveal the rock on which I have split.

From the time I could first remember, and follow the lighted candle with admiring baby eyes, I have never been able to make up my mind definitely about any one single event, and the tortures I have suffered in consequence no pen could possibly describe. From whom I may have inherited this peculiarity I don't know; certainly not from my parents; for my father had a strong will, with an unbending firmness of purpose and decision of character, which displayed themselves even in the merest trifles; and my mother was not wanting in decision, for, soon after her marriage, she, like a true woman, lost all identity in her lord and master, showing by that act that she had at least made up her mind to something definite if inevitable, and she yielded honorably on all occasions.

I was one of a large family, and unfortunately the eldest. My brothers were all high-spirited, determined lads, who tried on all occasions to strengthen their own rights in any way that seemed most likely to succeed, so that the vacillations of my mind made me an easy prey to every description of tyranny. In large families, or indeed large communities of any kind, a certain strength of character will always make itself felt, and the individual possessing it be respected, whilst the reverse will be despised or ridiculed, as the case may be. I think during the early portion of my life I suffered most from the former. How my brothers chaffed me! Nearly everything they said was prefaced by, "If you have not changed your mind, Con," or "Had you not better consider before you speak, or toss, so as to be quite sure?" Yes, then it was I never did feel quite sure about anything, and I recollect well the tortures I suffered in consequence.

To go quite back to my earliest remembrance of the first dawn of my peculiar weakness, I find myself in the nursery of our large, old-fashioned country house in Warwickshire. We were all of us in a considerable state of excitement, consequent on the visit of an old uncle, a bachelor, who was reported to have more lacs of rupees than other people had shillings. Of course we expected to benefit by such a visitor; nor were we disappointed. On the afternoon in question a message came to the nursery that our presence was desired in the dining-room, and that we were to be dressed in our best for the occasion. How well I remember the little dark-blue cloth surtout, fastened in round the waist by a belt and silver buckle, which I and my next brothers, Robert and Edmund, wore, and the blue sashes of my twin sisters, down to the embroidered frock and red shoes of baby. Of course, as the eldest, I went first; and, of course, on reaching the dining-room door, I could not make up my mind to go in; so I lingered for a while; but lynch-law was administered from behind by Robert, and my entrance was more abrupt than graceful; but, as I was then only a little boy, it was overlooked.

My uncle kissed us all round; commented on our appearance, and likewise on our resemblance to various (to us unknown) members of our family, and finally brought out before our admiring eyes a large parcel, which he undid, cutting the string with a little gold-mounted penknife.

"Now, Coningsby," said he, as he displayed a number of tempting things; "you are the eldest, so you must take your choice; Robert the next; and so on."

The difficulties presented themselves to my mind at once. I hesitated—wavered, There were two articles that almost equally took my fancy. One was a sword, the other a gun. Whichever I did not take, Robert would. Of that I felt sure; and to make up my mind which I would decide upon perplexed me sorely. At one moment I fancied that Robert's eye would rest lovingly on the gun, which had imitation silver mountings, and would fire anything, short of powder and shot, and I felt quite decided to take it; the next moment, and he had unsheathed the sword, and I felt that it was impossible to relinquish such a treasure.

My uncle waited long and patiently, but at last he suggested that I should make up my mind. I laid my hand on the gun; I half drew it towards me; then I put it back, and did the same with the sword, and then I went back to the gun again.

"You have made your choice," said my uncle, quickly; "and now 'tis Robert's turn."

Robert seized the sword, and buckled it round his waist. I would have given worlds then had it been mine, and the gun his. I think amidst my thanks my uncle detected this, for he said, "You took which you liked best, did you not my boy?"

I hung my head; and Robert, who was as generous as he was vindictive, took off the sword, and, handing it to me, offered instantly to change. The moment he had done so, the gun rose in my estimation. I was obliged to seem contented; I had changed my mind again, but it was too late. I remember I could not sleep that night: and at last I decided on telling Robert, and see if I could not effect another barter, but Robert was inexorable, and called me names I don't wish to repeat, stating that he had given me a second chance, and that if he did give me back the gun, I should only cry for the sword back again next day. I left crestfallen, but not convinced; it has taken years to bring me to a sad knowledge of the sad truth that I am to be turned by every straw.

The remainder of my boyhood was marked by other incidents very similar to the one I have narrated. I was sent to school. I never knew whether I preferred marbles, or peg-top, hockey or cricket; and a pastrycook's shop bewildered me more than anything. With sixpence to spend, and a hundred dainty things before me, I became simply an object of pity. I would timidly lay my hand upon a tart, and then my eyes would wander to something else, and I would look at that, and then return and loook again at the tart, finally selecting a dainty, and eating it, yet repent of my choice all the while.

At college it was just the same—in fact it was worse, for I was more my own master. I could never decide whether I should take to the oar, or read for honors: whom I should select for friends, and which of them I should invite to my wine-parties; where I should spend my vacations, what tailor I should employ, and a thousand other trifles that make up the sum of life. However, no matter how much I weighed the matter, whatever I did, I always wished I had done the opposite: and in this state of mind I went home, and decided on a profession—I say decided, but I don't mean it. My father called me into his study one morning, and thus addressed me:

"If I had not been blessed with ten children, Con, I might have made an elder son of you; but I don't see now how I can. You must do as your brothers have done, and go into some profession. I have given you a college education, and now I give you a week to consider what you would prefer, and I shall make it my duty to help you carry out your wishes, whether for the Church, army, or the bar, as far as lies within my power."

I thanked him, and retired to reflect. I reflected for all that week, but I came to no decision. One day I had almost determined on the Church, the next day on the bar; then some chance remark would unsettle my mind again. I would have given the world to feel a strong, unbiassed inclination in some defined direction; but those inclinations seemed reserved for my brothers. Robert was a sailor, and enthusiastic about his profession; whilst Edmund would hear of nothing but becoming a merchant. Even baby, the moment he abandoned his red shoes, asserted his intention of keeping a public-house, and driving his own coach.

Luckily, when we are not strong enough to settle for ourselves, some one generally is to be found who will do it for us, and my future destiny was taken out of my hands vi et armis. One of my college friends had just entered the army, and during my deliberation we chanced to meet. I asked him to come into Warwickshire for a few days to talk over my prospects, and give me the benefit of his advice. I had no actual intention of taking it, but the result turned out otherwise.

Rupert Leigh was a young man of strong will and enthusiastic temperament, and was gifted with the greatest of all powers, persuasive eloquence. He laid before me, as we sat idly smoking in my particular den, the most glowing pictures of soldier life.

"Of course," said he, "you could not do anything else but go into the army, and, if possible, into my regiment. Every other profession is quite unfit for you, and you are unfit for any other profession."

I partly yielded, or rather I felt almost tempted; and, before he left, I had under his advice intimated my views to my father, and so I became a victim. I say a victim, for no sooner did I wake to find myself really gazetted into the 104th, which was Rupert Leigh's regiment, than I bitterly repented my choice. It had all been done in a hurry, and now it was too late. My uniform was ordered; I was besieged with circulars from outfitters, and the day when I was to join my regiment had been signified by an order from the Horse Guards.

My father gave me his blessing, a tolerably handsome order on Cox & Co., and some good advice. My mother cried over me, and my sisters packed my boxes: my youngest brother, Fred, gave me his retriever-pup, and little Constance knitted me a pair of muffettees, with her own fat fingers; and so, amid such family consolation, I left home and went into the world.

The regiment was quartered at Chester, and we were not for foreign service till the next year. Rupert Leigh received me very cordially, and introduced me to his friends. Things seemed to have taken a rather fortunate turn, but for one circumstance: I never felt quite sure that I had not made a mistake. Every young clergyman I met opened my mind to new doubts as to whether theology had not been my express vocation; every man of business as to the question of speculation on the Bourse or Stock Exchange. There certainly arose one good out of the profession I had embraced, as far as affected my natural character. There were certain things that were not left to my own judgment—things which I was compelled to do; and the machine-like evolutions of a soldier's body acted favorably on my mind; it was only things that were left that tormented me. I often wonder why I was not born a woman, with the inestimable privilege of being allowed to change my mind every hour of the day!

I don't think my peculiarity was discovered in the regiment for some time, but it came out by degrees. At races, if I backed a favorite horse, and had apparently every chance of winning, the least straw would turn me in another direction, and I would set about hedging, and so lose all my chances making and unmaking my book twenty times. If we got up a ball, and each officer had the privilege of inviting a certain number of guests, I would debate so long, and change my mind so often, that the day would arrive, and it was too late for me to ask any one.

I affected dandyism, but I never could decide on my model, consequently the changes in my costume were marvellous, and my tailor's bill was alarming. When it became my turn to cater for the mess, I believe I nearly drove the cook frantic by my orders and counter-orders. Even in such trifles as writing notes, I never could decide upon what to say, and I would often tear up a dozen in succession before settling upon the one which I would send. I had no sooner bought a horse and dog-cart, which I had immensely coveted, and for which I had outbid a number of applicants, than I would have given worlds to have been able to change it for a mail phaeton. I gave away my dog, and could scarcely refrain from asking to have it back the very next day. Indeed, in everything, except, as I have said, the inevitable duties attendant on my profession, my life was almost a burden.

At last an event happened which might have become the turning point of my existence—I fell in love. The only reason I can give for doing so is, that love is an involuntary act. Would that marriage had been so also! But that being left to my own decision, I naturally marred my destiny. Not far from Chester I had often noticed a fine old-fashioned country house, called "The Cedars," well situated in a wooded park, little thinking how great an influence its inmates would have upon myself. But so it was: my father wrote to tell me that the Walsinghams were old friends of his early days; that he had accidentally heard of their living near Chester, and desired me to call upon them.

I often wonder why I went; I took several weeks making up my mind to do so. Perhaps, if I had never gone, I should never have known Isabel Walsingham; and then—

Alas! Isabel Walsingham is one of the most unhappy memories of my past life. I saw her the first day I went to "The Cedars;" she came in at the open drawing-room window with some flowers in her hand, wearing a softly falling muslin dress and a straw hat, under which was a face of surpassing loveliness. No Isabel, I thought, however renowned in song or prose, could ever equal Isabel Walsingham, with her dark eyes, brown hair, smiling, rosy lips, and teeth that might have rivalled Nell Gwynne's. She was not tall, nor very slight, but all her movements were light and graceful, and there was a joyous ring in her laugh that seemed like flashes of sunshine.

I remained to luncheon; I was asked to dinner, and was treated, by reason of my father, like an old friend. Sir John Walsingham was a kind, hospitable country gentleman, and his wife a perfect model of old age, as she sat in an arm-chair dressed in a handsome gray silk dress and white lace cap.

Isabel was not the only member of the family. She had five brothers, but only one was at home, and he did not return till just before dinner, so that during the afternoon I was left entirely to the care of Isabel, who lionized me over the grounds, and finally allowed me to take her out for a row on a branch of the river which ran through the park.

Her brother Frank had returned by the time we were thinking of going back, and he came to meet us—a bright, curly-headed boy of about seventeen, who resembled Isabel, without being exactly like her. We all returned to the house together. Shortly after our return, dinner was announced, and the rest of the evening flew, rather than passed away, and I found myself once more in my barrack-room. I could not sleep; for when I went to bed I was haunted by Isabel Walsingham.

I went to "The Cedars" again and again, until my frequent absence from barracks began to draw remarks upon me, which I evaded as well as I could. But at last my idol was discovered; and I— However, I may as well relate how it all happened.

The Walsinghams talked of giving a ball; and as Isabel seemed enchanted at the idea, I warmly seconded it, and promised to secure the attendance of as many of my brother officers as they required. I felt that I loved Isabel; and I thought of proposing for her hand before finally deciding that Rupert Leigh should see her, and that I should have his opinion.

(It has been, I believe, the mistake of all ages to call in the cat to guard the cream, and it was mine.) The ball was a great success; I never saw Isabel look so radiantly lovely. I longed to pass the entire night by her side, but I refrained. I led up Rupert Leigh, introduced him, and watched at a distance the impression, and hoped he had produced a favorable one. He had asked her to dance, and as they whirled past me in a waltz, his eyes met mine, and I saw that he approved. I think that during the whole of that evening I avoided Isabel; first, because I did not want to make myself conspicuous; and secondly, because I was anxious for Rupert Leigh to have every opportunity of forming his opinion, and I saw that he hovered about her with that intention.

Once, late in the evening, she came up to me, and I fancied her dark eyes had something of reproach in them as she said softly: "Are you enjoying my ball, Mr. Leicester?"

"Very much, Miss Walsingham," I replied; "but I should enjoy it more if you could spare me another dance."

I fancied a color flushed into her cheeks as she bent over her card.

"Why did you not ask me before?" said Isabel.

"You are so much engaged, I did not like to do so," I replied.

"Strangers," said she, "would never be put before friends, unless my friends deserted me."

"You consider me, then, as a friend," I asked.

The color now rose unmistakably, but she looked up into my face, and said, "Are you not?"

I took her hand, and drew it through my arm. I bent over her, and whispered some low, soft words, and felt her hand tremble in mine. The music struck up, and without another word we entered the dreamy maze of the waltz. When we stopped, Rupert Leigh was standing before us.

"I think that was my dance, Miss Walsingham," said he.

"Never mind, old fellow," I said; "it was my fault." And I nodded to him gayly, once more putting my arm round her waist as the "Dreams of Childhood" came wafted from the orchestra down the brilliantly lighted room.

After the dance was over, I still lingered by her side, and, finally, we found ourselves standing on the broad terrace that skirted the drawing-room, with the moon above our heads. What a glorious night it was! everything in Nature so intensely still, and the perfume of the flowers, like incense, stealing up with every faint breath of air.

"You look tired, Miss Walsingham," said I, as we walked slowly on.

"Not very," she replied; "but I like the feeling of reaction on coming out into the quiet night air, after all the excitement of lights and dancing. Listen to the music," she said, pointing in the direction of the ball-room, "and then look out here."

I glanced at the scenery, and then my eyes rested on Isabel herself. Surely nothing in Nature or Art could have looked more bewitching than she did then in her floating white dress, that, in the uncertain light, seemed like summer clouds with heart's-ease and blush-roses in her brown hair. She held a bouquet of hot-house flowers in her hand, and as she bent over them a sudden impulse made me ask her to give it me, in remembrance, I said, of the evening. She smiled as she partly held them towards me.

We turned, and slowly retraced our steps. I was debating whether I should propose, but at last it was decided for me that I should not; for Isabel's hand was claimed for a dance the moment we came in view of the windows; not that I had positively decided even that Miss Walsingham was necessary to my happiness, but I was thinking it might be so. As she swept past me half an hour afterwards, making some gay repartee to a remark of Rupert Leigh's, her light laugh jarred disagreeably on my ear, and I determined to broach the subject to him on our way home. I did so. I felt very undecided as how to begin, but the difficulty was saved me.

We lighted our cigars, and in the fair dawn of a summer morning had hardly left the gay scene behind us, when Rupert Leigh offered me what he was pleased to term his hearty congratulations, which he accompanied by a slap upon my shoulders that nearly made me drop the reins out of my hands, and caused my horse, "Sultan," to rear on his hind legs. I was driving myself in the dog-cart, the purchase of which I had so regretted.

A few minutes ago, and I was anxious Rupert Leigh should feel that a something was understood between Miss Walsingham and myself; but now, that it appeared evident such was the case, my mind pursued the subject, and asked his opinion. He warmed upon it, and spoke in a way that certainly was gratifying. I told him that I had made an arrangement to lunch at "The Cedars" on the following day, and wished him to accompany me. He hesitated as to the propriety of his doing so unasked, but I pressed the point, assuring him that he ought to call, and that as my particular friend his doing it with me was only natural. So it ended that we went.

After luncheon, I left him to wander about the grounds with Isabel, in order that he might become better acquainted with her, while I talked to Sir John; and he certainly seemed to improve the occasion, for we did not get away until nearly five o'clock. Going home, he renewed the congratulations which he had offered on the morning of the ball; but the the possibility of his thinking I was decided on marrying made me uneasy.

Was I decided? Night after night I lay awake, and weighed the pros and cons. I tossed "Heads I do; tails, I don't." I tried if my marriage came out in "patience," sitting over the cards alone in my own room. I continued to visit at "The Cedars," but managing it as quietly as I could. I was no longer the same. In Isabel's society I was absent and constrained, fearing I might do or say anything that might commit me.

While in this state of mind the affair got wind in the regiment, and one night at mess I was overwhelmed with congratulations. The instinct of self-preservation made me deny that I had the slightest intentions in a matrimonial direction, and I reiterated my denial again and again.

When mess was over, and we were standing in the anteroom, Rupert Leigh came over to where I was standing, and, putting his arm within mine, asked me to come up and have a cigar with him in his own room; and, anxious to escape, I acceded. When we had settled ourselves comfortably—a thing it was quite possible to do in Rupert Leigh's room, where things were fitted up with the elegance of a lady's boudoir—selecting two arm-chairs of the most luxurious description, and lighting our cigars, he returned to the subject of my probable engagement to Isabel Walsingham. I don't know what possessed me, but the feeling that Isabel was being forced upon me made me deny to him having any intention of marrying, as I had done to the others.

His manner was so serious that I became quite alarmed. Had I gone too far? My mind was in a complete chaos. Why were not marriages arranged by the families, on the French system? What agonies of doubt I should have been saved! I don't know, or rather I did not then know, what possessed Rupert Leigh, but he got up quite abruptly, shook my hand, called me "a jolly old fellow," and proposed brandy and water. Alas! I know, now that it is too late, what it all meant. As it was then, I enjoyed the evening immensely. Two or three other men came in, and I forgot, in the fumes of alcohol, the troubles of my mind, which seemed just then to have acquired a stability quite unaccountable. I railed at matrimony generally, sang comic songs, and recited "Betty Hunt."

I don't remember going to bed, but I found myself there in the morning, and all my force of character seemed to have been left behind me. However, I determined to give up for a time going to "The Cedars," and to let it be felt in the regiment that no joking on the subject was to be allowed; and I succeeded with the assistance of Rupert Leigh, who promised to give a hint to that effect. I know now that his generosity extended further, and that he went constantly in my place to see Isabel Walsingham.

The first disagreeable impression, that I was about to lay myself open to the chance of being obliged to do something definite about Miss Walsingham, was wearing away, and in its place a restless desire to see her was just beginning to take possession of my mind, when, one evening, in the private room of an Irish lieutenant, a toast was proposed. Rupert Leigh was not present; he had gone out to dinner—where, I did not then know. However, glasses were filled, and three cheers given for Rupert Leigh and his—lady-love! A sick feeling stole over me. His lady-love! Who was she? I asked. Who? Isabel Wasingham! A thousand demons seemed to shriek her name, and a mist floated before my eyes. I retained only sufficient consciousness to rush from the room. Now that Isabel was lost I knew I wanted her—that I must have her. I was mad with rage. What a traitor I had cherished as a friend! I only waited for his return to pour down my vengeance upon him. Hours passed, during which I paced up and down my barrack room; at last I heard his horse's tread, then his footstep on the stair, and then his door shut.

I followed instantly. I did not even knock, and I found him standing with a photograph in his hand, which he was admiring by the uncertain light of a candle. At the very first glance I knew whose portrait it was, and it gave an impetus to my wrath, convinced, as I was, that Rupert Leigh was a man whom any woman might love. I had never considered him so much personally before as I did in the few moments during which I held his door-handle in my trembling hand. His deep gray eyes were bent on the picture, a soft smile played on his lips, whilst I—but I could contain myself no longer; he had looked up, and our eyes met.

"Is this true," I said, "that you are engaged to Isabel Walsingham?"

"Quite true," he replied, and as he spoke he drew himself up as if he were proud to say it. The action more than words maddened me.

"And you say this to me!" I exclaimed—"me, when you knew Isabel Walsingham was all but my affianced wife!"

"I knew that she was not," he replied. "I had it from your own lips."

I burst into a torrent of invective, and he waited till I had done. "I will not quarrel with you," he said; "we have been friends too long. First listen to me. Just consider. I would not take your word at mess, for I thought you might then have said what you did in the heat of the moment; but you repeated that you never meant to ask Isabel Walsingham to be your wife here in this very room to me, as your friend, and when we were alone. I liked Isabel Walsingham even then, and in my heart I thanked you for your decision. It was not till after that I thought to win her for myself; after that I did, and now—"

"She shall never be yours if I can prevent it!" I exclaimed; and again I launched into a volley of bitter reproaches. In my rage I rushed at him, but he was stronger than I, and held me back.

"This is folly," he said—"folly which it is too late now to repair. If you had known your own mind, I should never have tried to come between you and your wishes; as it is—"

"As it is," I repeated. "I only want the morning light to go to 'The Cedars' to explain it all—your villainy and my own love."

He smiled. I paused again at the door, the smile was too hateful to me; but I could not speak. I rushed back to my own room. I ordered my dog-cart, first for six o'clock, then for seven, then for nine, and finally for ten—and at ten I started for "The Cedars," as I was determined to see Isabel. She would come to me in the drawing-room, and stand before me in her soft white dress, and we should be alone. I would expose the perfidy of Rupert Leigh, and confess my own love, and she would confess in return that she had always loved me best; and then the tears would come, and I should wipe them away, feel her little trembling hand in mine, and the soft brown hair would rest on my shoulders, and the dark eyes look up to mine, and Rupert Leigh should be forever consigned to oblivion!

I was carried away by the fervor of my imagination for at least five miles of the journey, but as I neared "The Cedars" it abated, and my fixed determination of seeking an interview with Isabel Walsingham wavered. I drew in the horse's reins till what had at starting been almost a gallop became a walk; and finally, when I was just in sight of the house, I stopped altogether.

I believe I remained almost an hour trying to decide whether I would go into the lodge gates or not, but I saw a carriage advancing, and not having the courage to remain, I turned and retraced my steps to Chester.

Years have gone by since then, but the lessons I have been taught have failed in bringing in a harvest of results. Rupert Leigh sold out, and married Isabel Walsingham, and shortly after the regiment was ordered abroad. I meant to try for an exchange, but I kept putting it off for ten years, and then the return home of the regiment prevented my carrying out my intention. I have often thought of leaving the army altogether, but can never come to a definite conclusion. I am not high up in the regiment, for men have purchased over my head, not because I was wanting in the means requisite, but I never decided in time whether I preferred my money in the funds or not.

I am still unmarried, but am no longer a victim to the memory of Isabel Walsingham; for, on the contrary, I have been on the borders of the hymenal abyss on several subsequent occasions, but never quite over, still feeling haunted by the fear of making a mistake. But I by no means give up the idea; and should I ever make up my mind definitively on that or any other subject, I will let the public know.

Florence Nightingale on the Italian Cause.—Florence Nightingale has addressed a letter to the Cavaliere Sebastianio Fenzi, one of the committee for organizing a system of volunteer assistance to the hospital department of the army. It closes as follows: "Thus far I have given dry advice as drily as I could. But you must permit me to say that if there is anything I could do for you at any time, and you would command me, I should esteem it the greatest honor and pleasure. I am a hopeless invalid, entirely a prisoner to my room, and overwhelmed with business. Otherwise how gladly would I answer to your call, and come to do my little best for you in the dear city where I was born. If the giving my miserable life could hasten your success but by half an hour how gladly would I give it. But you will not want for success, or for martyrs, or for volunteers, or for soldiers. Our old General, Lord Clyde (he is dead now,) was standing at the port of Balaclava when, eleven years ago, the Italian Bersagliere were landing; and he turned round and said to his companion (a man high in office,) 'I wish to hide my face—I blush for ourselves when I see the perfect way in which those glorious troops are brought up to their work.' And what have not the Italians done since in these eleven years?—the work almost of eleven centuries. I, too, remember the Italian (Sardinian) hospitals on the heights of Balaclava, and their admirable government; and since then what has not the progress been? I wish you God speed with my whole heart, and beg that you will believe me, sir, your ever faithful servant."

CAPRI AND CAPRIOTES.

I

I HAVE no doubt "Calm Capri waits," where we left it in the Gulf of Salerno, for any traveller who may choose to pay it a visit; but at the time we were there we felt that it was on exhibition for that day only, and would, when we departed, disappear in its sapphire sea, and be no more; just as Niagara ceases to play as soon as your back is turned, and Venice goes out like a pyrotechnic display, and all marvellously grand and lovely things make haste to prove their impermaneuce.

We delayed some days in Naples in hopes of fine weather, and at last chose a morning that was warm and cloudy at nine o'clock, and burst into frequent passions of rain before we reached Sorrento at noon. The first half of the journey was made by rail, and brought us to Castellamare, whence we took carriage for Sorrento, and oranges, and rapture—winding along the steep shore of the sea, and under the brows of wooded hills that rose high above us into the misty weather, and caught here and there the sunshine on their tops. In that heavenly climate no day can long be out of humor, and at Sorrento we found ours very pleasant, and rode delightedly through the devious streets, looking up to the terraced orange-groves on one hand and down to the terraced orange groves on the other, until at a certain turning of the way we encountered Antonino Occhio d'Argento, whom fate had appointed to be our boatman to Capri. We had never heard of Antonino before, and indeed had intended to take a boat from one of the hotels; but when this corsair offered us his services, there was that guile in his handsome face, that cunning in his dark eyes, that heart could not resist, and we halted our carriage and took him at once. He kept his boat in one of those caverns which honeycomb the cliff under Sorrento, and afford a natural and admirable shelter for such small craft as may be dragged up out of reach of the waves, and here I bargained with him before finally agreeing to go with him to Capri. In Italy it is customary for a public carrier when engaged to give his employer as a pledge the sum agreed upon for the service, which is returned, with the amount due him, at the end, if the service has been satisfactory; and I demanded of Antonino this caparra, as it is called. "What caparra?" said he, lifting the lid of his wicked eye with his forefinger; "this is the best caparra," meaning a face as honest and trustworthy as the devil's. The stroke confirmed my subjection to Antonino, and I took his boat without further parley, declining even to feel the muscle of his boatmen's arms, which he kindly exposed to my touch in evidence that they were strong enough to row us swiftly to Capri. The men were but two in number, but they tossed the boat lightly into the surf, and then lifted me aboard, and rowed to the little pier from which the ladies and T. got in.

The sun shone, the water danced and sparkled, and presently we raised our sail, and took the gale that blew for Capri—an oblong height rising ten miles beyond out of the heart of the azure gulf. On the way thither there was little interest but that of natural beauty in the bold, picturesque coast we skirted for some distance; though on one mighty rock there were the ruins of a seaward looking Temple of Hercules, with arches of the unmistakable Roman masonry, below which the receding waves rushed and poured over a jetting ledge in a thunderous cataract.

Antonino did his best to entertain us, and lectured us unceasingly upon his virtue and his wisdom, dwelling greatly on the propriety and good policy of always speaking the truth. This spectacle of veracity became intolerable after awhile, and I was goaded to say: "Oh then, if you never tell lies, you expect to go to Paradise." "Not at all," answered Antonino compassionately, "for I have sinned much. But the lie doesn't go ahead (non va avanti,") added this Machiavelli of boatmen; but I think he was mistaken, for he deceived us with perfect ease and admirable success. All along, he had pretended that we could see Capri, visit the Blue Grotto, and return that day; but as we drew near the island, painful doubts began to trouble him, and he feared the sea would be too rough for the Grotto part of the affair. "But there will be an old man," he said, with a subtle air of prophecy, "waiting for us on the beach. This old man is one of the Government guides to the Grotto, and he will say whether it is to be seen to-day." And certainly there was the old man on the beach—a short patriarch, with his baldness covered by a kind of bloated woloen sack, a blear-eyed sage, and bare-legged. He waded through the surf toward the boat, and (at a secret signal from Antonino, as I shall always believe) when we asked him whether the Grotto was to be seen, he paused knee-deep in the water, put on a face of tender solemnity, threw back his head a little, brought his hand to his cheek, expanded it, and said, "No; to-day, no! To-morrow, yes!" Antonino leaped joyously ashore, and delivered us over to the old man, to be guided to the Hotel di Londra, while he drew his boat upon the land. He had reason to be contented, for this artifice of the patriarch of Capri relieved him from the necessity of verifying to me the existence of an officer of extraordinary powers in the nature of a consul, who, he said, would not permit boats to leave Capri for the mainland after five o'clock in the evening.

When it was decided that we should remain on the island till the morrow, we found so much time on our hands, after bargaining for our lodging at the Hotel di Londra, that we resolved to ascend the mountain to the ruins of the palaces of Tiberius, and to this end we contracted for the services of certain of the muletresses that had gathered about the iron gate, clamorously offering their beasts. The muletresses chosen were a matron of mature years, and of a portly habit of body; her daughter, a mere child, and her niece, a very pretty girl of eighteen, with a voice as sweet as a bird's. They placed the ladies, one on each mule, and then, the mother and daughter devoting themselves to the hind-quarters of the foremost animal, the lovely niece brought up the rear of the second beast, while the patriarch went before, and T. and I trudged behind. So the cavalcade ascended; first, from the terrace of the hotel overlooking the bit of shipping village on the beach, and next from the town of Capri, clinging to the hillsides, midway between sea and sky, until at last it reached the heights on which the ruins stood. Our way was through narrow lanes, bordered by garden walls; then through narrow streets bordered by dirty houses; and then again by gardens, but now of a better sort than the first, and belonging to handsome villas.

On the road our pretty muletress gossiped cheerfully, and our patriarch gloomily, and between the two we accumulated a store of information concerning the present inhabitants of Capri, which, I am sorry to say, has now for the most part failed me. I remember that they said most of the landowners at Capri were Neapolitans, and that these villas were their country-houses; but they pointed out one of the stateliest of the edifices as belonging to a certain English physician who had come to visit Capri for a few days, and had now been living on the island twenty years, having married (said the muletress) the prettiest and poorest girl in the town. From this romance—something like which the muletress seemed to think might well happen concerning himself—we passed lightly to speak of kindred things, the muletress responding gayly between the blows she bestowed upon her beast. The accent of these Capriotes has something of German harshness and heaviness; they say non bosso instead of non posso, monto instead of mondo, and interchange the t and d a good deal; and they use for father the Latin pater, instead of padre. But this girl's voice, as I said, was very musical, and the island's accent was sweet upon her tongue:

I—What is your name?

She—Caterina, little sir (signorin.)

I—And how old are you, Caterina?

She—Eighteen, little sir.

I—Have you a lover?

She feigns not to understand; but the patriarch, who has dropped behind to listen to our discourse, explains: "He asks if you are in love."

She—Ah, no! little sir, not yet.

I—No? A little late, it seems to me. I guess there must be some handsome youngster who pleases you—no?

She—Ah, no! one must work; one cannot think of marrying. We are four sisters, and we have only the buonamano from hiring these mules, and we must spin and cook.

The Patriarch—Don't believe her; she has two lovers.

She—Ah, no! It isn't true. He tells a fib, ha!

But, nevertheless, she seemed to love to be accused of lovers—such is the guile of the female heart in Capri—and laughed over the patriarch's wickedness. She confided that she ate maccaroni once a day, and she talked constantly of eating it, just as the Northern Italians always talk of polenta. She was a true daughter of the isle, and had never left it but once in her life, when she went to Naples. "Naples was beautiful, yes; but one always loves one's own country the best." She was very attentive and good, but at the end was rapacious of more and more buonamano. "Have patience with her, sir," said the blameless Antonino, who witnessed her greediness; they do not understand certain matters here, poor little things!"

As for the patriarch, he was full of learning relative to himself and to Capri; and told me with much elaboration that the islanders lived chiefly by fishing, and gained something also by their vineyards. But they were greatly oppressed by taxes, and the strict enforcement of the conscriptions, and they had little love for the Italian Government, and wished the Bourbons back again. The Piedmontese, indeed, misgoverned them horribly. There was the Blue Grotto, for example: formerly travellers paid the guides five, six, ten francs for viewing it; but now the Piedmontese had made a tariff, and the poor guides could only exact a franc from each person. Things were in a ruinous condition.

By this we had arrived at a little inn on the top of the mountain, very near the ruins of the palaces. "Here," said the patriarch, "it is customary for strangers to drink a bottle of the wine of Tiberius." We obediently entered the hostelry, and the landlord—a white-toothed, brown-faced, good-humored peasant—gallantly ran forward and presented the ladies with bouquets of roses. We thought it a pretty and graceful act, but found later that it was to be paid for, like all pretty and graceful things in Italy; for when we came to settle for the wine, and the landlord wanted more than justice, he urged that he had presented the ladies with flowers, yet he equally gave me his benediction when I refused to pay his politeness.

"Now here," again said the patriarch in a solemn whisper, "you can see the Tarantella danced for two francs; whereas down at your inn, if you hire the dancers through your landlord, it will cost you five or six francs." The difference was tempting, and decided us in favor of an immediate Tarantella. The muletresses left their mules to browse about the door of the inn and came into the little public room, where were already the wife and sister of the landlord, and took their places vis-a-vis, while the landlord seized his tambourine and beat from it a wild and lively measure. The women were barefooted and hoopless, and they gave us the Tarantella with all the beauty of natural movement and free floating drapery, and with all that splendid grace of pose which animates the antique statues and pictures of dancers. They swayed themselves in time with the music; then, filled with its passionate impulse, advanced and retreated and whirled away; snapping their fingers above their heads and looking over their shoulders with a gay and laughing challenge to each other, they drifted through the ever-repeated figures of flight and wooing, and wove for us pictures of delight that remained upon the brain like the effect of long-pondered vivid colors, and still return to illumine and complete any representation of that indescribable dance. Heaven knows what peril there might have been in the beauty and grace of the pretty muletress but for the spectacle of her fat aunt, who, I must confess, could only burlesque some of her niece's airiest movements, and whose hard-bought buoyancy was at once pathetic and laughable. She earned her share of the spoils certainly, and she seemed glad when the dance was over, and went contentedly back to her mule. The patriarch had early retired from the scene as from a vanity with which he was too familiar for enjoyment, and I found him, when the Tarantella was done, leaning on the curb of the precipitous rock immediately behind the inn, over which the Capriotes say Tiberius used to cast the victims of his pleasures after he was sated with them. These have taken their place in the insular imagination as Christian martyrs, though it is probable that the poor souls were anything else but Nazarenes. It took a stone thrown from the brink of the rock twenty seconds to send back a response from the water below, and the depth was too dizzying to look into. So we looked instead toward Amalfi, across the Gulf of Salerno, and towards Naples, across her bay. On every hand the sea was flushed with sunset, and an unspeakable calm dwelt upon it, while the heights rising from it softened and softened in the distance, and withdrew themselves into dreams of ghastly solitude and phantom city. His late majesty the Emperor Tiberius is well known to have been a man of sentiment, and may often have sought this spot to enjoy the evening hour. It was convenient to his palace, and he could here give a fillip to his jaded sensibilities by popping a boon companion over the cliff, and thus enjoy the fine poetic contrast which his perturbed and horrible spirit afforded to that scene of innocence and peace. Later he may have come hither also, when lust failed; when all the lewd plays and devices of his fancy palled upon his senses; when sin had grown insipid and even murder ceased to amuse, and his majesty uttered his despair to the Senate in that terrible letter: "What to write to you, or how to write, I know not; and what not to write at this time, may all the gods and goddesses torment me more than I daily feel that I suffer if I do know."

The poor patriarch was also a rascal in his small way, and he presently turned to me with a countenance full of cowardly trouble and of base remorse. "I pray you, little sir, not to tell the landlord below there that you have seen the Tarantella danced here; for he has daughters and friends to dance it for strangers, and gets a deal of money by it. So, if he asks you to see it, do me the pleasure to say, lest he should take on (pigliarsi) with me about it: 'Thanks, but we saw the Tarantella at Pompeii!'" It was the last place in Italy where we were likely to have seen the Tarantella; but these simple people are improvident in lying, as in everything else. The patriarch had a curious spice of malice in him, which prompted him to speak evil of all, and to as many as he dared. After we had inspected the ruins of the emperor's villa, a clownish imbecile of a woman, professing to be the wife of the peasant who made the excavations, came forth out of a cleft in the rock and received tribute of us—why, I do not know. The patriarch abetted the extortion, but Parthianly remarked, as we turned away, "Her husband ought to be here; but this is a festa, and he is drinking and gaming in the village," while the woman protested that he was sick at home. There was also a hermit living in great publicity among the ruins, and the patriarch did not spare him a sneering comment. He had even a bad word for Tiberius, and reproached the emperor for throwing people over the cliff, though I think it a sport in which he would himself have liked to join. The only human creatures with whom he seemed to be in sympathy were the brigands of the mainland, of whom he spoke poetically as exiles and fugitives.

As for the palace of Tiberius, which we had come so far and so toilsomely to see, it must be confessed there was very little left of it. When that well-meaning, but mistaken, prince died, a popular tumult demolished his pleasure-houses at Capri, and left only those fragments of the beautiful brick masonry which yet remain, clinging indestructible to the rocks, and strewed the ground with rubbish. The recent excavations have discovered nothing beside the uninteiesting foundations of the building, except a subterranean avenue leading from one part of the palace to another; this is walled with delicate brickwork, and exquisitely paved with white marble mosaic; and this was all that was left of the splendor of the wicked emperor. Nature, the all-forgetting, all-forgiving, that takes the red battle-field into her arms and hides it with blossom and harvest, could not remember his iniquity, greater than the multitudinous murder of war. The sea which the despot's lust and fear had made so lonely slept with the white sails of boats secure upon its breast; the little bays and inlets, the rocky clefts and woody dells, had forgotten their desecration; and the gathering twilight, the sweetness of the garden-bordered pathway, and the serenity of the lonely landscape, helped us to doubt history. We slowly returned to the inn by the road we had ascended, noting again the mansion of the surprising Englishman who had come to Capri for three months and had remained thirty years; passed through the darkness of the village, dropped here and there with the vivid red of a lamp; and so reached the inn at last, where we found the landlord ready to have the Tarantella danced for us. We framed a discreeter fiction than that prepared for us by the patriarch, and went in to dinner, where there were two Danish gentlemen in dispute with as many rogues of boatmen who, having contracted to take them back that night to Naples, were now trying to fly their bargain, and remain at Capri till the morrow. The Danes beat them, however, and then sat down to dinner, and to long stories of the imposture and villany of the Italians. One of them chiefly bewailed himself that the day before, having unwisely eaten a dozen oysters without agreeing first with the oysterman upon the price, he had been obliged to pay this scamp's extortionate demand to the full, since he was unable to restore him his property. We thought that something liko this might have happeued to an imprudent man in any country, but we did not tho less join him in abusing the Italians—the purpose for which foreigners chiefly visit Italy.—Nation.

Dress in England.—There has never been a time during the present reign in England, when so much money has been spent as at the present period upon dresses. Our fair ones are running a race in extravagance. In many families the cost per person for dress averages ono thousand pounds a year—this, of course, exclusive of jewelry. For a single dress, prices varying from forty pounds to one hundred and fifty pounds are frequently paid. It is in the rareness of material and its amonnt that the excess usually consists, not in the skill or art of the design. During this week I have been present at the opening of what is termed an International Horticultural Exhibition, in the fashionable part of London—an occasion on which the tickets of admission were one guinea—and there I saw the prevalent wastefulness displayed in the morning dress. Trains of satin, some yards long, were seen dragging over gravel walks and collecting all foreign matter from the grass. Lace was there in shawls and cloaks, which used to be worn only in very small quantities by our grandmothers. As to our bonnets, very soon they will disappear, if they continue to diminish at the rate they have followed for the last two or three seasons. They have dwindled into something of the size of a broad piece of ribbon, but the shapes that are chosen are scarcely to be numbered. Watching the fine figures of many of our English girls surrounded by an immense breadth of somo exquisite "precious stuff" and wearing on their heads some odd jumble of ribbons and flowers, we are frequently forced to admire; but if, in the midst of our ruminations, the form arises in our minds of the chaste and natural style of a few years back, with its simple adornment and harmony with the native grace—or of a classical drapery, such as M'lle Rachel used to wear in her tragedies—these walking bales of goods, these drapers' and dressmakers' models cease to charm. Can any dress be suited to us which prevents the exercise of muscles and limbs! The Countesses and Duchesses whom I saw on Tuesday at Kensington were exposed to a hundred mishaps. To walk with such trappings is a difficulty, but to walk, and to stop and to turn round, is a danger. You may take your hat off to a lady, these days, but if you advance to shake her little hand you fluster her, for you may tread upon her dress. If she is alarmed her admirer is still more so. Some men have acquired the greatest dexterity in avoiding an unfortunate step, for there are men who can stand on anything, on the spire of St. Paul's, but to the average, the modern garb of our ladies is a snare and a vexation.

Prof. Peters, of the Hamilton College Observatory, has discovered a new asteroid.

[For the Californian.]

A GHOST STORY.

THERE are few families without their lore of shadowy legends. The following circumstances came to me from a near friend, with whom I have long been intimately acquainted, and in whose veracity and good sense I have entire confidence. The statement shall be in her own words, as nearly as I can remember, only using fictitious names:

"It was a blithe party, that at Aunt Jane's, out in the country by East Point, and the girls and boys came flocking to it from all the neighborhood, even miles away. It was in the Fall of the year, but the evening was warm, the doors and windows were open, parties scattered through the rooms playing 'juniper tree,' and other kissing games; every lady was talking and laughing at once, and not a merrier party had been seen in that section. But of all the gay girls, the gayest was Martha Stone. She seemed almost on wings.

"After the party broke up, she stayed the remainder of the night, sleeping in the same room occupied by Mary Stolz and myself, occupying a bed at the east end, while we were in another at the west end. Mary and I were young girls also, and, having been as lively as the balance, we slept soundly till the sun had risen high.

"Then Mary declared she must rise and return home, about two miles distant. We begged her to stay, as the sky was growing cloudy, with indications of rain; but she said her mother needed her help and she must go.

"She had hardly made half the distance, when a heavy rain began to fall, and, though she made haste homeward, she was drenched and chilled before her arrival.

"That same night, about 12, while Mary and I were soundly sleeping, we were suddenly awakened by a light shining in the room, and, upon opening our eyes, there we saw Martha Stone standing over the bed she had slept in the night before; not on it, but apparently raised about a foot above it. I saw her face as plain as ever I saw it in my life, or as I see yours now. From about her the light seemed to come that softly filled the room.

"I was not in the least scared. There was only one window in the room. It was on the right hand side, rather nearer our bed than the other. I was so cool as to go to that window to look out, to be sure that the light did not come from without. There was no light outside, and turning I saw her brighter and clearer than ever.

"Mary crept out of bed and ran down stairs to tell her father and mother to come up and look at the apparition. She was dreadfully frightened. I stood and watched it till the light began to fade and the features grow indistinct, after which it gradually disappeared, and was quite gone when the old people came up with Mary.

"The chilly rain had given Martha Stone a violent cold, and a month from the night we saw her above the bed she died of quick consumption." Iro

The Last of the Mamelukes.—The Pacha of Egypt, in 1818, assembled together the whole corps of the Mamelukes, as if for a feast; and having secured all egress except a steep and precipitous descent over the sides of the elevation (the platform of the citadel,) he destroyed them with cannon and musketry. They came, according to custom, in their richest costumes, with their finest arms, and bearing about them all their wealth. At a signal given by the Pacha, death burst forth on all sides. Crossing and enfilading batteries poured forth their flame and iron, and men and horses were at once weltering in their blood. Many precipitated themselves from the summit of the citadel, and were destroyed by the abyss. Two, however, recovered themselves.

At the first shock of the concussion, both horses and riders were stunned; they trembled for an instant like equestrian riders shaken by an earthquake, and then darted off with the rapidity of lightning; they passed the nearest gate, which fortunately was not closed, and found themselves out of Cairo. One of the fugitives took the road to El Ezish, the other darted up the mountains; the pursuers divided, one half following each.

It was a fearful thing, that race for life or death. The steeds of the desert, let loose on the mountains, bounded from rock to rock, forded torrents, flew along the edges of precipices. Three times the horse of one Mameluke fell breathless; three times, hearing the tramp of his pursuers, he arose and renewed his flight. He fell at length not to rise again. His master exhibited a touching instance of reciprocal fidelity; instead of gliding down the rock into some defile, or gaining a peak inaccessible to cavalry, he seated himself by the side of his courser, threw the bridle over his arm, and awaited the arrival of his executioners. They came up, and he fell beneath a score of sabres, without a motion of resistance, a word of complaint, or a prayer for mercy.

The other Mameluke, more fortunate than his companion, traversed El Ezish, gained the desert, escaped unhurt, and in due time became governor of Jerusalem. He was the last and only remnant of that redoubted corps, which, thirty years before, rivalled in courage, though not in fortune, the elite of Napoleon's army.

These French!—A French author went into ecstasies the other week over "that noble line of Sir Thomas More's, the celebrated Irish poet, monody, 'We left him alone in his glory!'" These French! . . The French newspapers mention, in biographical notices of Mr. Peabody of London, it was at his expense Dr. Kane's expedition to search for Sir John Franklin was made. . . It is said, during a recent discussion in the French Academy, the Duke de Noailles exclaimed, in reply to an argument advanced by an opponent: "Terence! Ah! that is possible, for I have forgotten almost all the Greek I ever knew." . . M. Thiers states Nelson was at the bombardment of Copenhagen, which took place in 1807; Nelson died in 1805! . . Some two or three years ago an eminent resident of Passy (the West Philadelphia of Paris) brought a friend to town with him, and carried him to the house of a college chum, where he was going to breakfast, saying, as he presented his neighbor to his chum and wife, "Let me present you the most célebre sauteur of France. He now lives at Passy. I am proud and delighted to have him for a neighbor." The chum and wife were most cordial in their greeting; they evidently were delighted to receive so distinguished a man; they had long admired him with enthusiasm. Breakfast was served. The most célebre sauteur, feeling quite out of his element, said little. Everybody paid him, nevertheless, the most marked attention, and after the cloth was removed, the mistress of the house said to him, with her most gracious smile: "Will you not deign to give us some taste of your talents?" He answered: "It has been a long time, ma'am, since I was in practice; but if you wish it, I am at your orders." He rose. There was a dead silence. He gave a bound, and the next instant he had hold of the iron rod to which the table-lamp was suspended from the ceiling, and was turning somersaults between the ceiling and the table, to the stupefaction of everybody but his friend. The chum ran up to his friend, and asked in a whisper: "Why, whom in the deuce have you brought us?" "Whom? Why, Auriol, the clown of the circus. Did you not recognize him?" "Good gracious, no! You said the most célebre sauteur of France, and we all made sure 'twas Lamartine."—"G. S.," in the American Literary Gazette.

Influence vs. Authority.—Influence is a slower acting force than authority. It seems weaker, but in the long run it often effects more. It always does better than mere force and authority without its gentle, modifying power.

She who obtains an absolute and perfect government over a child, so that he obeys certainly and almost mechanically, produces effects which are more appreciable in their immediate action on family life; her family will be more orderly, her children in their childhood will do her more credit.

But she who has conscientiously no power of this kind, whose children are often turbulent and unmanageable, need not despair if she feel that through affection, reason and conscience, she still retains a strong influence over them. If she cannot govern her boy, she can do even a better thing if she can inspire him with a purpose to govern himself; for a boy taught to govern himself is a better achievement than a boy merely governed.

If a mother, therefore, is high-principled, religious, affectionate, if she never uses craft or deception, if she governs her temper and sets a good example, let her hold on in good hope, though she cannot produce the discipline of a man-of-war in her noisy little flock, or make all move as smoothly as some other women to whom God has given another and different talent; and let her not be discouraged if she seem often to accomplish but little in that arduous work of forming human character wherein the great Creator of the world has declared himself at times baffled.

Population of the Austrian Empire.—The empire of Austria consisted in 1857 of thirty-five millions of inhabitants, of which it lost about 2,726,000 by the peace of Villafranca in 1859. Anstria still retains about thirty-three millions, and of these two and a half are in Lombardo-Venetia. The other elements of the population are as follows: Germans, 8,000,000; Slavonians, 3,800,000; Poles, 2,000,000; Ruthenians, 2,800,000; Croatians, 1,400,000; Czecks and Slovacks, 6,000,000; Magyars, 5,000,000; Jews, 1,100,000; and Bohemians, 150,000. With respect to religion, the population is thus divided: Catholics, 22,500,000; United Greeks, 3,500,000; Greeks, non-united, 3,000,000; Lutherans, 1,200,000; Calvinists, 2,000,000; Jews, 1,000,000. Austria proper contains little more than 12,500,000 inhabitants; Hungary, 10,000,000; Galicia, 4,000,000; Bohemia, 4,800,000; Austrian Silesia, 450,000. The population of Prussian Silesia consists of about three and a half millions. The territory taken from Denmark during the late war contained about 888,750 inhabitants, thus divided; Schleswig, 365,417; Holstein, 476,874; Lauenburg, 46,486.

A person's character depends a good deal upon his bringing up. For instance, a man who has been brought up by the police seldom turns out respectable.

A PRISON IN MADRID.

WE betook ourselves up to the Puerta Sta. Barbara, where stands the debtors' prison. It is called the "Carcel de Villa," and contains not only the debtors, but the criminals of all shades belonging to Madrid, and, besides securing these, serves as a House of Correction for boys from eight to sixteen years of age. Having visited all the prisons in London, besides others in England, all those in Paris, many in the French provinces, several in Belgium and a few in Italy, we consider ourselves in the light of connoisseurs, capable of giving an opinion on the subject, and can safely say that we were wholly unprepared for the interior which here presented itself to our view. Our experience of prison life had never revealed to us anything so forbidding, and so totally unlike what any establishment under the supervision of Government ought to be. The domestic uncleanliness we met with, within those great gaunt walls, was only to be rivalled by the moral turpitude of their denizens; and the lax, irregular discipline by which the place is (mis)ruled was in harmonious discord with the rest. We found the door open, and although there were two sentinels placed before the entrance, we passed in unmolested; these worthies contented themselves with halting for a moment, staring at us, and then continued their oscillations as before. Meantime we proceeded through the portone into a paved passage, and, beneath a tolerably lofty archway, passed on till we came to a door on either side; one of these led to a staircase, but we turned to the other, our curiosity being piqued by a deafening din of numerous voices proceeding from that direction: all were talking at once, in the coarsest and hoarsest of tones; women's voices were mingled with those of men, and each seemed to be doing his best to top the others; add to this that the place whence the sound issued gave back a loud reverberating echo, and the effect may be imagined. The door, as it yielded to our push, revealed the mystery. We found ourselves in a long, lofty, wide, and particularly dirty hall, divided into three compartments by railed partitions, and we at once recognized it as the parloir. Behind the farthest of these partitions, and stretching through the bars as far as the width would admit, like wild beasts in a cage, were eighty to a hundred prisoners bawling at the very loudest pitch of their lungs—

. . . ostia centum
Unde ruit totidem voces.

In the intermediate compartment, according to the custom established in the parloirs of criminal jails, were stationed two sentinels, who walked imperturbably up and down this grilled corridor, while outside the third grating were collected the friends and relatives who had come to avail themselves of the questionable privileges of the "visiting day," and were responsively eager and clamorous in their demonstrations. It was a strange sight to contemplate, and many a touching episode might have been disentangled from the incidents which met our gaze. Gray-haired fathers we saw, and profligate sons, and aged mothers, whose wretched homes were made yet more desolate and destitute by the absence of those to whom they had a right to look in decrepitude and infirmity for some return of the care lavished on their helpless infant years. Wives were there visiting their husbands, brothers and boon companions jesting and making light of a position only too familiar to themselves: the yells, the altercations, and, alas! also the lamentations of those united cries formed an unearthly and lugubrious record. Tales of woe and breaking hearts there must have been mingled with all that brawling and vehemence; but it was not possible to get at any details, or even to discover what class of crime had chiefly contributed to fill this repulsive dungeon; the organization of such places in Spain is so imperfect that facts have rather to be guessed at than ascertained. We gathered, however, that besides those who were merely prévenus or accused, this prison contains convicts condemned to periods of incarceration varying from two to twenty years. This was the "criminal" department. Having escaped from this den of abomination, misery and crime, we entered the other door, and ascended the stairs. On the first floor we found a rough-looking office, where three stout, solemn-looking book-keepers—two seated at tables, and one behind an office-desk—seemed engaged in some registering occupation. One wore spectacles, and had a wise, owl-like expression, and all three looked grave and consequential. They raised their eyes inquiringly as we entered, and the most important looking peered at us over his glasses as if thoroughly puzzled: perhaps he thought we had come to deliver ourselves up to justice! We soon put an end to this mystification by telling him we should be much obliged if he would give us a permission to see the prison. "To see the prison?" said he, with an air which showed he was totally incapable of taking in the idea. "Yes," reiterated we, "to see, to look over, to visit, the prison." "If I understand you," replied he, "you want to have access to the wards and cells, to go up and down stairs, and inspect the prisoners, and the house, and perhaps the kitchen, and all the rest. Well, it's a strange idea, but I have no wish to prevent you if you find any satisfaction in it;" and the three officials looked at each other, and smiled at the novel and comical notion. He motioned us politely out, and then called a jailer, who appeared with a bunch of keys on a large ring, as if by an afterthought he had recollected that there would be some of the doors we should not be able to get through. Our guide conducted us to the debtors' department, not unlike some of the debtors' prisons in Paris in its arrangements, but far more dirty. The prisoners have rooms to themselves, with alcoves for their beds. These rooms open from a common corridor, to which all have access, and here they walk about with a nonchalant air, habited in loose dressing-gowns and smoking caps, visiting each other in their rooms, and seeming altogether to lead a free and easy life. The majority of them were youngish men, but they did not look very happy.—Cosas de Espana. By Mrs. W. P. Byrne.

THE STREETS OF VENICE.

UNLESS the gentle, low-speaking Venetians consent to enjoy a festival sitting at their windows and in their balconies, they are a serious obstacle in their way. Besides the canals, which intersect the city in all directions, there is no lack of streets, or cale, as they are called. But such streets! They are four or five feet wide, are nicely flagged, indeed, and provided with a channel to carry away the superfluous water; but fancy a Philadelphia dandy conducting a lady in the full panoply invented by the French Empress along one of these streets, and encountered front to front by another gentleman and lady similarly accoutred.

The shops at each side are not so narrow in many cases as the streets. They are pretty and gay, and are furnished with painted Indian mats, screens, glass beads, models of gondolas, and all those pretty, but useless, elegancies found in the shops of the Palais Royal.

Venice, however, besides its square and Piazetta, and Quay of St. Mark, can boast of one street, Merceria, which is fully fourteen feet wide—the Broadway of the sea city. It is nicely paved with tiles, and still presents a comparatively animated and pleasant appearance.

For very excellent reasons the Venetians rarely take their comfort or see company on the ground floor, the streets being narrow, or the canal in front. This lower floor is often used as a receptacle for lumber, the family preferring the one above it for sake of light, or to get at a decent distance from the surface of the water, from which occasionally an offensive smell arises, though not to the extent that strangers apprehend. When the mansion is built round a court there is always a tank in the centre to catch the rain water, and every little square or campa in the city is provided with the same convenience. Fresh water, as may be supposed, is an article of value in Venice.

From the second floors, spoken of above, and where once might be seen hanging rich draperies over richly carved stone balconies, and darked beauties, with arms resting on the rich stuffs, and listening to a charming serenade from a gondola, are now frequently found the drying clothes of a working family. The rent of five rooms and a cellar, in a good quarter, is about three dollars of our money per month. A shilling pays the weekly rent of a working family on remote canals. There are a great number of families in poor circumstances, but, apparently, hunger is not a general affliction.

There are no beggars, either because the streets are too narrow to afford them comfortable stations, or that watching round the corners for a copper fillipped from a gondola across the water might entail long delays and small profits. An occasional whimperer is detected in St. Mark's Place, but if the tribe ever flourished, they went out with the bravos and the thieves. Whether it proceeds from the prevailing honesty of the lower classes, or the wonderful ability of the Austrian police, few residents in these our days think it necessary to secure their houses at night.

A NARROW ESCAPE.—That night I was asleep in my tent, when I was suddenly awoke by loud screams, and upon listening attentively I distinctly heard the heavy breathing of something in my tent, and I could distinguish a dark object crouching to the head of my bed. A slight pull at my sleeve showed me that my wife also noticed the object, as this was always the signal that she made if anything occurred at night that required vigilance. Possessing a share of sang froid admirably adapted for African travel, Mrs. Baker was not a screamer, and never even whispered; in a moment of suspected danger a touch of my sleeve was considered sufficient warning. My hand had quietly drawn the revolver from under the pillow, and noiselessly pointed it to within two feet of the dark crouching object before I asked, "Who is that?" No answer was given—until, upon repeating the question, with my finger touching gently upon the trigger ready to fire, a voice replied, "Fadeela." Never had I been so near to a fatal shot! It was one of the black women of the party, who had crept into the tent for an asylum.—The Albert Nyanza.

THE Boston Public Library contains 123 000 volumes. Its largest contributors are Joshua Bates, of London, who gave $100 000 worth of books, and Theodore Parker, who left 11,000 books and 3,000 pamphlets. In 1865, nearly 195,000 books were lent, or an average of 708 per day.

CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

THERE was a trial and execution in Dublin, more than a century since, which excited great interest. It was that of a surgeon, well-known in society and esteemed for his amiable character, remarkable for his humanity to the poor. He lived in a retired street. It happened one evening that the milkwoman found the street door ajar—and not being answered when she knocked at it, she made her way to the kitchen. She had no sooner entered it, than, uttering a loud shriek, she called loudly for help. The passers-by and persons from the neighboring houses were soon on the spot, and the kitchen was crowded in a short time.

A sad spectacle presented itself. The young woman who was servant to the surgeon, was lying dead on the flags, while her dress was stained with the blood which had issued from a wound in the side. In looking about the floor, a surgical instrument was found, which also was stained with blood. A medical man, who was present, ascertained that it was the instrument which had inflicted the death-wound. On a further search, a shirt saturated with blood was found huddled up in the coal-hole; it was marked with the initials of the surgeon's name.

He was immediately seized, and, though protesting his innocence, he was evidently under considerable agitation. The silent witnesses brought against him were thought sufficient to prove his guilt, and all attempts to account for their having been found near the unfortunate girl were scouted in the cross-examination.

A living witness was also produced in court, an old lady, who deposed that she lived in the house directly facing that where the surgeon resided; that her drawing-room window commanded a view of his premises, and that it was customary with her to watch his movements; she deposed that she had not taken her eyes off his house all that day on which the murder was perpetrated; that no one had entered his house all that day but himself; that he went home at about four o'clock, his usual hour of returning; and that on knocking at the door it was opened by the servant, who, to the best of her belief, shut it fast when her master went in; that she saw him three or four times pass the windows of his sitting-room; that the last time she saw him was about an hour and a half before the murder; that she observed him look down both sides of the street, and then shut down the window; he held something in his hand, which she thinks may have been a surgical instrument; but this she would not positively swear.

In summing up the evidence, the horror which the prisoner had betrayed when looking on the body of his murdered servant, was eloquently dwelt on as a crowning proof of guilt. The defence was weak and meagre—a bare denial of the crime being its chief substance. A thrill of horror pervaded the court. The jury retired—a brief space sufficed for deliberation; they returned with a verdict of "Guilty." The judge having donned his black cap, exhorted the prisoner on the heinousness of his crime, and pronounced the fatal sentence. It is said that the condemned showed much fortitude throughout, and persisted to the last in asserting his innocence. He was brought to the place of execution amid a vast concourse and the execrations of the people. We were told by an old gentleman that his father remembered having been held up in his nurse's arms to see the procession pass to the place of execution. He was often spoken of in the social circle as one who had been held in much estimation. His untimely end was lamented, but there were few who believed it undeserved.

It was after the lapse of several years that some one who had emigrated to America returned; he was ill and troubled in mind; something lay heavy on his heart and disturbed his conscience; he made his confession and published it. He had been "the sweetheart" of the murdered girl; she had let him in by the back way early in the evening, to take tea with her. As they sat side by side, he asked her for a kiss, which he would have snatched, when she denied him; she took up her master's surgical instrument which had been left out to be cleaned, and which lay on the table beside her, and she pointed it toward him jestingly; in a struggle she fell on it, and it pierced her side; he snatched the shirt, which she had in her lap to mend, and staunched the blood which was flowing with it; but life soon ebbed away, and he saw the girl whom he loved—who had been laughing and talking with him but a few minutes before—lying dead beside him; his agony only gave way to the instinct of self-preservation when he thought he heard the sound of approaching footsteps; he thrust the blood-stained shirt into the coal-hole, and setting the hall door ajar, he concealed himself behind it; when the crowd had collected on hearing the alarm, he mingled with it, and then passed into the street, and on to the quay, and getting on board an American merchant ship he sailed in a few hours.

When he learned that the surgeon's life had been forfeited he was overwhelmed with anguish. The only reparation in his power was to clear his character from the dreadful imputation; but though he felt a relief in this act of justice, yet it could not undo the injury inflicted.

BRIDAL CUSTOMS IN SWEDEN.

THE Pastor described the wedding supper as being set out on a horse-shoe shaped table ; each guest sat in his or her appropriate place, and the feast lasted from midnight till three o'clock in the morning. one dish of meat and fish succeeding another the whole time. Every dish was flavored with horseradish, this being the correct thing, and was partaken of by every guest; this also being the mode, otherwise it would be considered a slight and an offence. No vegetables made their appearance, they being considered vulgar; and when people had eaten to an incredible extent they rose up to dance.

There are still many curious customs and superstitions relating to weddings, lingering among the Swedish peasants, as for instance : They say, when hands are spoken of, that the news of an approaching wedding will follow. People who eat or sing going to church eat or sing lovers away from them, and will not be married that year. They throw apple-parings over the left shoulder to see the initial letter of the husband or wife's name ; just as is done in England. All sorts of fortune-telling charms and sorceries relating to marriage are practised on Midsummer Eve. In former days, according to the Swedish antiquarian, Raat, the bride used, in some localities, to go round her own and even the neighboring parishes, during the autumn preceding her weddiug, and beg for tow, wool, and hemp, by striking on the house-door with a switch. She did not go in, but waited outside ; and the mistress of the house, understanding the signal, came out with the gift, but did not invite her to enter. The bridegroom, on the other hand, taking some new sacks, woven by the bride, made his journey round at Christmas, begging for oats to sow. In some places, a suitable old woman was selected to represent the bride, and she was permitted to enter the house, but never to ask for anything. These customs, which somewhat resemble the biddings to Welsh weddings, have now very much gone out.

Weddings on New Year's Day, or on Mondays, Wednesdays, or Saturdays, are considered unfortunate. Fridays and Sundays are the luckiest, and are indeed the general days. If the couple be married at church and ride thither, the bridegroom must hold the bridle of the bride's horse, so that no one may ride between them. If there should be any stoppages by the way, it is considered a bad omen. It was customary in the northern provinces, and still may be so, for the bride to give little presents to all her friends and to children, in order that she, henceforth, may always have gifts for the needy. She may also cast away a piece of money, either in the church or churchyard, upon which her coming misfortunes are laid, but woe unto the finder, for they will be transferred to him or her. Weddings generally, however, take place at home, and require endless preparations.

Porridge is eaten at the bride's house the night before the wedding, and a broad-bean dropped into it, which, like the ring in the bride-cake with us, denotes that the young man or woman to whom it falls will be the next married after the bride. The universal wedding-dress is black silk, and the bride is frequently attired by the chief ladies of the neighborhood. It is not considered right for the bride to make her own garments, every stitch she puts in standing for a tear ; nor must she wear pearls, which signify also weeping, but all other ornaments, and as many of them as may be, are desirable.

The " bride's crown," a large silver-gilt crown, which it is considered elegant to adorn with a tuft of feathers, tall enough to sweep the ceiling, belongs to the parish, and is hired out for the occasion on the requirement of the bride being an honest and virtuous woman. It is fixed on a sort of cushion, and firmly placed on the head, though it must of necessity be danced off during the evening. Female friends of the bride are stationed at all conceivable nooks and corners to give notice of the bridegroom's approach ; nor do they mind how long they may have to wait provided only they can secure to her the first view, which is supposed to give her the mastery, especially if she can see him through a ring. The guests assemble at the bride's house in the afternoon, and partake of coffee and rusks, the contributions of some of the guests ; weak tea is drunk, later in the day, not because it is liked, but because it is considered fashionable. The clergyman arrives, and after he too has been regaled with coffee the marriage ceremony commences, the young couple standing under an improvised canopy, usually formed of a large shawl, which is held over their heads by four unmarried people. Superstition cautions the bridal pair against allowing any light to come between them during the ceremony, but they should incline their heads towards each other. Should the wedding-ring be too small, it bodes a great misfortune. As soon as the ceremony is concluded, the bride dances a polka with the clergyman, and afterwards with all the men, the bridegroom, on his side, dancing with all the women. Dancing continues the whole night through, with intervals for lesser refreshments and the great substantial banquet.

Between the courses of pork, beef, pike, and mutton, the healths of all are drunk, from the clergyman and the bridal couple, down to the woman who washes the dishes, the guests having come provided with their own flagons. The bride's father also informs the company of the various articles of his daughter's dowry. After the substantial courses of meat and fish comes the pastry, this being the contribution of the guests who have brought with them gigantic pyramidal tarts, composed of layers of pastry and preserve, each worth about ten riksdalers, and the rule is that everybody must taste everybody else's, otherwise it would be a slight.

People having already eaten enough of the former dishes for a week, the women's large white linen pocket-handkerchiefs, hitherto kept coiled up in their hands as an appendage to their costume, now come into requisition, and if they cannot eat the pieces of tart themselves, as indeed it would be wonderful if they could, they can carry them away in their handkerchiefs. A large pocket too is requisite, as well as plenty of money, for the fiddlers have to be paid by the guests. The fiddling is kept up whilst the wedding feast is eaten, when a plate goes round for the musicians. Besides fiddling indoors, there is no end of firing outside, a supply of gunpowder being laid in for the occasion. When the great banquet is at length concluded, the dishes, with their half devoured joints and other fragments, are shoved under presses and beds, the table taken out, and again dancing commences, and continues till the bride's crown is danced off. In some cases, however, all the girls dance around the bride in a ring, and she being blinded, takes off her crown, and places it on the head of one of the girls, the one, of course, who is to be a bride next after her.—Margaret Howitt's " Twelve Months with Frederika Bremer.

THE SUMMER FASHIONS.

ORGANDIES, mulls, muslins, barèges, mozambiques and piques are all the rage, and they are for the summer certainly the prettiest dresses in the world. These goods have, too, the one great advantage over all other goods—that of cheapness. The most modest purse will dress its owner with comparative elegance during the summer months. There is, in several stores on Chestnut street, (says a Philadelphia paper,) a kind of dress goods called English barége, selling for the mere trifle of 37 cents per yard, which makes a dress pretty enough and elegant enough for any lady in the land. One of these dresses, which we select for particular mention, was a plaid pattern, blue ground, with a white stripe crossing it up and down. The skirt was made very full, with a Swiss flounce, set on in box plaits around the bottom, and ornamented with a blue gimp, with small crystal beads thickly strewed over it. A sacque of the same was worn with it, made in the latest style, being without sleeves, (the sleeve of the dress serving for the sacque,) and finished off at the shoulder with a trimming of gimp and pendants of crystal to match those on the skirt. Sacques, without sleeves, to match the dress, are almost universally worn, and they are so cool and thin and light that there is little doubt they will become more and more general so long as the warm weather continues. Toilettes, consisting of a mixture of black and white, are even more generally worn than they were earlier in the season. Black and white check silks, both in suits and in dresses simply, are great favorites. So also are black and white striped silks. We give the following as examples of a suit of each which have been greatly admired. The checked silk dress was made in the Princess style, ornamented down the front and down each seam of the gores with small black velvet buttons. The sleeves half-close, coat-pattern, and trimmed at the wrist with graduated rows of buttons, the same as on the skirt. At the shoulder the buttons were arranged to simulate an epaulette, and to conceal the fact of the tight basque (worn with the dress on the street, and made of the same material,) having no sleeves. The basque was trimmed with buttons down each seam, the same as the skirt. The scond suit consisted of dress and half-tight sacque to match, and was of striped black and white silk. It was trimmed with pieces of black silk, cut in half-diamonds and placed at regular distances all round the skirt and basque ; each piece of silk was then trimmed around with white chintz lace ; and ornamented between each half diamond with a white velvet button. This was a very elegant and dressy costume, and attracted universal admiration. In Paris, at the present time, white paletots are worn in preference to any other style of outdoor cloak, sacque, or shawl, and are greatly preferred to lace shawls or mantles. They are made of alpaca, muslin, barége or grenadine ; but of whatever pattern, they are, without exception, trimmed with black—either guipure, braid, passementerie jet, or embroidery, according to the wearer's taste ; but the one important and apparently absolute necessity, is, that the trimming must be black. Over the basque and the tight-fitting sacques, youthful ladies, both married and single, wear the waistband and buckle. For our own part we do not admire the fashion ; and think that the lady's figure as seen beneath a thin, loose sacque is much more attractive and modest than the closely-defined waists, busts and shoulders, which are the results of a close-fitting basque and waistband. Although much is said about the summer hat and summer bonnet, there is not actually anything new to be said about either ; except that the gipsy is very rapidly verging backward into the Fauchon and Pamela ; and a movement is on foot to introduce the fashion of fastening the bonnet-strings in a bow under the chignon, instead of, as from time immemorial, wearing them tied beneath the chin. The fashion has been already introduced in Paris, and has met with entire success. The natural inference is, therefore, that before the close of August every lady will tie her gipsy in a bow beneath the back hair.

A FREAK OF ROTHSCHILD.

THE Baron de Rothschild has treated himself to a freak, which he does not often do, and it has set Paris in a roar of laughter from the Emperor down.

You know Baron de Rothschild negotiated the recent Austrian and Italian loans, and he has long regarded the Austrian funds as the safest in Europe. The recent political disturbances which have caused all public funds, and, especially those of Austria and Italy, to decline so much, have not only caused great loss of money to Baron de Rothschild, but they have, which is worse, made him lose his temper. Although he is Austrian Consul General here he does not scruple to express openly enough his anger at that Government for its " tamstubit bolicy." He is the banker of Prince de Metternich, not only in the latter's character of Austrian Ambassador, but in his private character. As Baron de Rothschild is perfectly familiar with the Prince's resources the accouut between credit and funds is never balanced with the sternness showed to the majority of customers. He is allowed to overdraw his account for considerable amounts of money, because upon the whole the sum usually to his credit greatly exceeds these occasional over-drafts, and he is in various ways an excellent customer. He gives information, he obliges the Baron's friends, and besides, a Prince and Princess when they are called von Metternich, and are styled Austrian Ambassador and Ambassadress, are double flowers which adoru a dining or a ball-room. The cashier of the bank is not, however, allowed to pay any checks where accounts are over-drawn until the check presented be shown to Baron James de Rothschild. He gives warrant for this irregular payment by writing, " J. de R." in red ink in a corner of the face of the check. There is no exception to this rule, because were there an exception the cashier would grow negligent and fail to keep the accounts of customers balanced.

A few days since Prince de Metternich sent his body servant to Baron de Rothschild's bank with a check for one thousand dollars. The cashier upon looking into the Prince's account found he had already over-drawn his account ten dollars. He took the check into Baron de Rothschild's private room for the Baron to initial and order him to pay it. To his astonishment the Baron said : " Refuse the check." " Refuse the Austrian Ambassador's cheek—Prince de Metternich's check ! Baron?" gasped the cashier, who had never seen the Baron indulge in so wild a freak before. " Unquestionably. Has he any money here?"

The Prince's servant nearly sank to the floor with astonishment. He thought full surely his ears must have turned Prussian and betrayed him. The agitation of the cashier and the close of the little wicket left him no longer in doubt. He hastened down stairs, threw himself into a hack and was soon at the Austrian Embassy. The Prince heard the intelligence with as much surprise as the servant had felt. It created still more astonishment in Baron de Rothschild's bank and house His wife had issued cards for a large party that evening. The Austrian Ambassador and Ambassadress were invited. Mme. de Rothschild and her sons were greatly annoyed by the Baron's conduct. She determined—with the hope of repairing her husband's folly—to send her eldest daughter to wait on Mme. de Metternich, remind her of the invitation for that evening, and in the name of the family express the hope of seeing her at the party. Mme. de Metternich had heard of the incident and was quite vexed. She received Mlle. de Rothschild with Austrian haughtiness ; heard her tell her tale without aiding her once by those words of courtesy which lighten a disagreeable task. On the contrary Mme. de Metternich listened coldly to the gracious message, and at its conclusion replied : " We shall not go out to-night," half-rising as she spoke to intimate to Mlle. de Rothschild the audience was at an end. " Spiridion," in the Boston Saturday Evening Gazette.

THERE is new rivalry among the law book publishers ; Hurd & Houghton are dabbling in the business ; Baker, Voorhes & Co., an old house in this department of trade, are showing fresh zeal and enterprise ; and Little & Brown, the Boston kings in sheepskin, do not mean to be caught napping, and are getting out new and valuable books for the profession, and also announce a new law magazine.

ANNA DICKINSON remarked, in a public speech, a few days since, that " the nation wants a man "—which is perhaps a modest way of saying that Miss Anna considers herself th nation.

M. DE ROTHSCHILD has, we hear from Paris, refused to give Austria a credit of five millions of francs, which was asked by Prince Metternich on behalf of his government.

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1866.

Full volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

ENGLAND, NOW AND THEN.

JUST eight hundred years ago a Norman army sailed from France and landed on the coast of England. In one month it had overthrown a monarchy, slain its king, and was master of the entire country. The history of that race is the history of all that is cruel and heroic in our nature, and while in its progress it has reached the highest triumphs in civilization, yet during all its past career—at least down to a very short period—it has always carried with it that peculiar vigor and courage, that enterprize and contempt of danger which, after all, are the highest elements in all national greatness—indeed, without which greatness is impossible. This race, so remarkable in those days when the highest virtue lay in sword and torch, is now the foremost in the world in all the distinctions of civilization—in agriculture, commerce, science, arts, and letters. And yet in this extraordinary development of national wealth and prosperity, it is a suggestive subject of inquiry whether or not, so far as England is concerned, have not been lost that national manhood and that prompt vindication of principle which were so conspicuous as the controlling qualities of the English race up to the commencement of this century.

At no period in European history as late as the dethronement of Charles X., of France, could any matter be mooted—any question of territory, morals or state ceremony—but that England had, by virtue of her pluck and power, the arbitrament of. In all history there can be presented no higher spectacle of moral and military grandeur than when the English, conquerors on almost every field from Cressy to Waterloo, dictated peace to all Europe from the capital of France. In that act seems to have culminated the power and greatness of England. The Norman blood which in the olden time was so fiery; which has been shed on so many fields, and which is associated with all that is great and gloriously pugnacious in the annals of modern races, seems to flow sluggish now; and instead of beating high "in honor's field alone"—where oppression seeks to throttle right, courses slowly on the mart and experiences no sense of quickness except when traffic offers gains. It is for the philosophic historian to trace the cause and gradation of this decadence, and the reason why a nation so combative, vigorous, "sudden and quick in quarrel," through a space of eight hundred years, should have so suddenly, in a period of scarce thirty years, lost all ambition to maintain its old glorious position, should consent to descend to the status of a second rate power. The English dead, whether in Westminster or scattered from the Heights of Abraham to the field of Waterloo, must have, to use the common phrase, turned in their coffins when England abandoned Denmark—a daughter of whose king is the wife of the English heir apparent. Had she then stood faithful to tradition and principle, we would not now see Prussia threatening Vienna, the old ally of England; would not see the Napoleonic monocrasy overriding Europe, and would not behold the British Empire, "on which the sun never sets," accepting any seat in the European circus, provided she is allowed quietly to peddle peanuts. At this moment, it is no exaggeration to say, not only has England lost all hold on the continent, but that she is thoroughly despised everywhere as "a nation of shop-keepers."

From the very moment of the commencement of the war in Europe, down to the present, we have had no appeals from the tricks of the Tuileries to the old honest frankness and cudgel of "John Bull." Even beleaguered and sorely pressed Austria, once the friend and ally of England, has not in her present agony reached out, crying, "Save me, or I perish." The truth is, she is already ruled out as a power in Europe—not simply ruled out, but declared to be a nation that will endure a kick, rather than lose a ship which bears to her shores the goods from which she can turn a penny.

Notwithstanding the gross outrages we have suffered at her hands, at a time, too, when we were battling for very life with the flames of rebellion; although our great commercial fleets have been destroyed by cruisers having no Confederate character beyond the flag and their principal officers, and although we have received from her every species of contumely and oppression, yet, after all, we cannot but regret that a people of such real greatness—of such renown in all the accomplishments which belong to nations as well individuals—should have been thrust into a position so utterly antagonistical to all her traditions, her manliness and virtues. We are disposed to believe that her government did not represent the real opinions of England when we were so treated, and that her apparent decline is simply the rule of a privileged class, whose days of domination and influence are passing away forever. Let us hope that with the extension of the right of suffrage, and the elevation of the middle classes to a share in the councils and government, may come to her again that true courage and manhood, which not only will bring back her old martial spirit and pride, but that appreciation of right and that control of the principle of fair play ever the glory and renown of "Old England."

THE POPULAR SENTIMENTAL.

WHY a gentleman, with his face blackened by burnt cork, and a preposterous shirt collar, should be able, by simply singing "Bright Things Can Never Die," or "Why Do Summer Roses Fade?" to so far overcome the manifest defects of his personal appearance as to win not only the respectful attention but hearty applause of an enraptured gallery, is one of those things for which philosophy offers no satisfactory explanation. It is perfectly understood that the singer cares little about the perishable nature of summer roses; still less is the audience concerned in their ephemeral quality; while in regard to the fact, it is undeniable that bright things do die, and that a great deal of the Beauty and Misstrelsy extant is not of a "deathless" quality. It is evident that we must look beyond the mere truth or importance of the abstract statement to find a reason for its extraordinary effect. When the hero in the melodrama avows his intention to rescue somebody or perish in the attempt, we can understand the burst of applause that follows, for the average instincts of humanity are magnanimous, but when this applause reaches a tumultuous climax as he makes the purely abstract and gratuitous addition that the Man who Refuses to aid a Fellow Being in Distress, is Unworthy of the Name of an American Citizen, or a British Subject, as the case may be, we confess we are at a loss. As with the perishable Summer Roses or the immortal Bright Things, there is something that remains to be accounted for. That something is the Popular Sentimental. Cheap, illusive, and diluted it may be, but still popular. It is this one touch of highly artificial nature that makes the whole world kin—that transforms the gaping apprentice for the moment into a poet, and thrills the house-maid with that unutterable and vague longing, above the mere physical appetite for food and drink, which she is pleased to consider is the normal condition of persons of quality.

Now, sentiment is all very well, and undoubtedly has its uses, but the Popular Sentimental, like many other popular things, is very apt to lose the substance and thing itself in the mere symbol and form. The word "Alas," occurring in composition, is to many good-natured people invested with preternaturally affecting qualities. To others the mere fact of keeping a journal or diary is prima facie evidence of the existence of sentiment. Reflections upon the uncertainty of human life—no matter how obvious the truism or apparent the proposition, and suggestions as to the deceitfulness of appearances, are valuable symbols of the Popular Sentimental. As with the summer roses before alluded to, it by no means follows that those who reflect upon mortuary possibilities are at all influenced in their conduct by such reflections, or that the deceitfulness of appearances prevents them from being regularly affected by mere show or glitter. They are simply graceful conventionalities. Clever people are often beguiled into the Popular Sentimental. The frequent call upon their sympathy leads them to adopt words and sentences that have passed current and have a recognized value as the equivalents of genuine sentiment. The currency may be depreciated, but the law of society makes it a legal tender, and he would be foolish who would reject it because he has the real coin locked up and is conscious that it is at a premium. The Popular Sentimental mixes largely in the religion of some people—how largely we sometimes shudder to speculate. So long as the "silent tomb," "the narrow house," "rock of ages," "the better land," and reckless and inordinate Scriptural quotation, occupy serious conversation with formulæ to the exclusion of ideas, we find little difference between the white performer and his brother with the blackened face. Politics is equally favorable to the growth of this quality: so long as the bird of freedom is permitted to soar—so long as we hear of a "freeman's privilege," of "Bleeding Kansas," of the "Hard fisted Democracy," we know that the Popular Sentimental does not languish in the hands of politicians.

We need not look far for a correction of the evil. As it is said of certain poisonous herbs that the antidote is always found in convenient contiguity, so in the same plane of thought and action do we find compensation and remedy for the evil. The lesser satirists and humorists—the Josh Billingses and Artemus Wards—are the checks upon the Popular Sentimental. When Mr. Ward listens to his daughter singing "Why Do Summer Roses Fade?" and replies, "Because it is their Biz"—the humor is coarse but demolishing. People addicted to sentimental inquiry in that direction, whose coarse cuticle would turn the polished shafts of irony, are utterly crushed by his rude but straightforward absurdity. Josh Billings has similarly shown up the cheap philosophy of the Popular Sentimental; and we owe a lasting debt of gratitude to Petroleum V. Nasby for his rough but thorough demolition, as "Pastor of the Church of the New Dispensation," of the mingled blasphemous scriptural quotations and cheap political formulas which invest the Popular Sentimental.

AMUSEMENTS.

LADY DON, the latest reigning star here, is achieving great success, not only as an actress, but also as a vocalist. The Opera House has been crowded every evening, though there has scarcely been a change in the bill since her first appearance, on Monday night. She is an actress of spirit and vivacity, and has an off-hand, easy, natural way of saying and doing her parts, with a thorough disregard of the "prunes and prisms" style of the stage, that is truly refreshing. Clever and pleasing as Lady Don is in her impersonations, yet it is her accomplishments as a vocalist that form her strongest charm of attraction. We have frequently been favored with actresses of greater merit, but probably the Opera House stage has never been graced by a vocalist of equal powers—certainly not since the era of the Nelson sisters. She has, perhaps, a mezzo-soprano voice—it is difficult to classify it—of excellent compass, and under complete command and cultivation. As a cantatrice and ballad singer, she takes high rank.

This lady has been excellently supported by Miss Kate Denin, Mrs. Edwin, Mrs. Jackson, and the Opera House company, and appears to have a wardrobe sufficient to mount half the company.

Lady Don has commenced well, and, as her forte lies in acting burlesques and extravaganzas, with musical interludes, we can heartily commend the entertainments she offers the public as being lively and enjoyable, as well as interesting.

This afternoon the popular burlesque of Kenilworth—which has been the chief attraction of the week—will be played for the last time. To-night Guy Mannering will be produced with all the original incidental music. Orpheus and Eurydice is announced as being the next burlesque feature. It is to be brought out with fine scenic effects and gorgeous costumes.

—

Metropolitan Theatre.—Every musician, whether professional or amateur, has doubtless observed many instances in his musical progress where the old rule, "Practice makes perfect," does not seem to hold good. He may take up a piece of music rather beyond his capacity, and in the excitement of the first reading may nevertheless execute it with tolerable, perhaps even brilliant effect; but on settling down to steady practice for the purpose of mastering all its difficulties in detail, he will find himself playing or singing it worse and worse, until he finally throws it aside in disgust, and wonders whether it could not be learned best by leaving it alone altogether. On the other hand, he may take up a piece which he had labored over, in the same unsatisfactory manner, six months ago, and may now find himself rendering it with a perfection quite surprising. By an involuntary and imperceptible process the musical forms have crystallized into shape in his mind; the spirit of the piece remains, while the incidental labor and disgust have dropped out of sight as if they had never been known. The hard practice, therefore, was not lost, although there was a time when it appeared absolutely futile.

That this theory of musical progress applies to whole opera troupes as well as to individual artists, is proved in a striking manner by the two performances which were respectively the very best, and the very worst, of the eleven (including two extra nights) already given during the present season. Lucia di Lammermoor, put upon the stage almost without preparation, was given to an audience neither large nor fashionable; but the enthusiasm of that audience was roused by a performance so full of life and fire, so brilliant in its principal points, so delicately perfect in detail, and pervaded by such unity of feeling and expression, that it may be set down as the great musical success of the season so far. Faust, on the other hand, was in rehearsal for a week—a long time for California—during which the theatre was closed; produced to an absolutely overflowing audience, comprising 'the wealth, beauty and fashion of San Francisco"—the finest house within the memory of our opera-goers, and of course the great pecuniary success of the season. But the troupe happened to be at that point of progress in Faust when practice does not make immediately perfect; and the enthusiasm of that audience was damped as by a cold and drizzly rain. As the repetition of the opera on Wednesday showed marked improvement in nearly every respect, we shall not remember Monday's failure to the disadvantage of the indefatigable manager and his assistants, (whose labors have been extremely arduous,) but shall confine ourselves to the notice of such faults as happened upon both evenings, and need vigorous correction. There was a constant want of correspondence between the singers and the orchestra, for which we think the former were chiefly to blame, not knowing their parts perfectly; the latter part of the garden scene was a glaring instauce of this on both uights, but the trouble occurred in nearly every concerted passage throughout the opera. The chorus singers, tolerably good in music they have sung for years, do not seem to master this opera, and their weakness and uncertainty, when left to themselves, as in some parts of the Soldiers' Chorus, without accompaniment, were painfully perceptible; though large in nnmbers, they utter no snch distinct and powerful body of sound as we naturally expect. The Second Artillery band was very effective, especially on the second night, when the grand march came out with inspiriting splendor; the whole scene was encored on each eveniug, and with three-fourths of the audience was certainly the most, perhaps the only attractive feature, besides the waltz, in the whole performance; the greater part of Gounod's music being mere sonnd signifying nothing to an uncultivated ear. With the band we find but one fault, which we also observed in their performance on the Fourth of July during the whole procession; the principal cornet player seldom allows rapid passages, especially triplets, (as in the opening phrase of the Faust march.) to fill their whole time in the measure, but jerks them out in a fidgetty way, as if desirous to get over some disagreeable duty as soon as possible; and this detracts very much from the quiet majesty which should characterize the music. The stage business and mountings of the opera had evidently received considerable attention, but some points were badly made, and others neglected. Iu the garden, for instance, "Siebel" hid the bouquet carefully away, and "Margarita" had to pass by the conspicuous jewel casket in order to hunt for the offering which she ought properly to have discovered first. The moonlight, which should have been arranged beforehand so as to shine on Margarita's window, and gradually brightened as if discovered from behind a cloud, was on the first night produced by a loud hissing conflagration in the prompter's box, and on the second by a sort of dark lantern, held at the opposite upper corner of the proscenium, and shining in rapid succession on various wrong places before the right focus was established. Stage scenery can never produce an absolute illusion; but it should not be obtrusively unreal.

Signorina Brambilla has rarely appeared to better advantage than in the character of "Margarita," and has never, we think, sung the music more acceptably than she did on Wednesday night. The spinning-wheel song, ("The King of Thule,") and the bijou song, in the garden, and the prayer in the prison scene, were exquisitely rendered, although the last named was taken, both in the solo and afterwards in the trio, a good deal too fast. Morley was in fine voice on Wednesday, and acted the part of "Faust" with care and spirit on both evenings. Milleri's "Mephistopheles" is a powerful impersonation, different from Morelli's, (with which a comparison is unavoidable,) and hardly equal to it on the whole; he indulges in too much buffoonery, especially in the serenade, and looks like such a "Mephistopheles" as Leporello or Sancho Panza might have made; whereas Morelli, with his princely bearing, sardonic counteuance, and eagle eye, looked and acted the character like the very devil himself.

Mancusi made the part of "Valentine" a principal feature, and was, as we remember, the only one of the four leading artists who sang every note of his music in a manner entirely satisfactory. Miss Landesmann, as "Siebel," did very well, but was too languishing and indulged in too much tremolo for a boy; she should learn to avoid overacting. M'lle. Tourney was excellent as "Marta Schwerlein," and filled her part iu the garden quartet very creditably. We hope to hear the opera again, and in better style than even on Wednesday; but we think the management will do well to let it rest for the present. Last night Un Ballo en Maschera was given for the first time, as the ninth regular performance, bnt the early hour at which we go to press forbids any particular notice. It will be repeated this evening.

—

DR. JORDAN'S ANOTOMICAL MUSEUM.—The ceroplastic preparations, in anatomy and pathology, which Dr. Jordan has at great expense brought to this country, are on exhibition at Eureka Hall to-day, from morning till 10 o'clock, P. M. On Sundays the Hall will be open from five to ten P. M. only.

CABLE-TALK.

THERE was a young person called Cyrus,
Whose talk of his hobby did tire us:
Said he, "If I 'm able,
I'll lay this big cable."
He did it. Good Lord! how he 'll wire us!

—

THERE was a yonng girl named Victoria,
Who, when the long wire was stretched o'er here,
Said, "Aint it nice, Audy?"
"Yes! 't will be handy,
It is, marm, THE mundi gloriæ." M.

[For the Californian.]

THE SECRET WELL.

I KNOW a well so deep and cool
And hid, the crystal-hearted pool
Hath never thrilled a swallow's throat
Or sweetened a lark's notc.

No fainting stag, though perishing,
Hath ventured to disturb this spring;
No leopard with his fiery breast
This fountain dares molest.

No cunning silver-casèd tront
The sheltered source can e'er search out;
No tongue but mine may ever tell
The secret of this well.

I build abont its guarded rim
With added stones; I know the dim
Still twilight of its mossy cell,
Where the sweet waters dwell.

For spirits go between us two
With flasks; they brim with softest dew;
I drink and am refreshed, and seem
As living in a dream.

This well, that is alone for me,
Is all a fount of memory,
And every year that I have known
Is as an added stone.

My willing thoughts, as spirits, haste
To draw the draught I love to taste.
There is an ever full supply,
Yet who may drink but I?

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

FAMILY DISCIPLINE.

THE horrible case of child whipping in the western part of this State, to which we referred on a previous occasion, is to be lamented not merely on account of the nnhappy little victim, but also for its inevitable tendency to loosen the bonds of parental discipline, by associating the idea of child-punishment with the recollection of this clerical wretch, who seems to combine the language of a Pecksniff witb the relentlessness of a Legree. This act is thrice-acurst, in respect to his baby, to himself, and to society. We cannot donbt that he will receive so much of the punishment which he deserves as it is possible lor the law to inflict. Whether it is possible under legal forms to render him full justice may be doubted.

But we cannot afford to let this solitary instance of parental cruelty blind us to the fact that, as a people, we err mainly in the opposite direction. American parents, as a rule, have very little inclination to tyrannize over their children, and are very strongly disposed to loosen the reins of family government. Looking around among our own acquaintance, we do not call to mind a single parent who is a terror to his children; and we rejoice that it is so. But we do know multitudes of parents who never had their children under their control; aud this we cannot rejoice over. The days when children were tied to bed-posts and flogged for slight transgressions are, thank Heaven, substantially past; but the extreme to whicb our grandfathers carried their notions of discipline is no justification for the other extreme into which we are now disposed to run. If there is really no middle path, doubtless the license which is now allowed to children is better than the excessive severity of old times; but no such excuse for laxity can be truly made. There is a middle path; but it requires more patience, perseverance, and enlightened parental love than either of the rival systems of wholesale flogging or laissez faire.

A certain distinguished clergyman once told in our hearing an incident which illustrates our meaning. His little girl, then a little over three years old, was playing in his room, when he called upon her to fetch his shoe. She had often done it before, and been proud to do it; but this time she looked at her father with a smiling face, and did not stir. "I repeated my command," said the father, "but with no better result. 'Now,' said I to myself, 'comes the crisis, and we must see who is to gain the day.' I called her to me, and she came quite cheerfully. I pointed to the shoe, but she would not look at it; she threw her arms round my neck, and would kiss me just as long as I would let her; she brought me an apron, a book, anything but the shoe; that she would not touch. And nothing but the shoe would satisfy me. 'Fetch me that shoe,' said I; but no. For more than two hours the conflict lasted, and then she suddenly grasped the shoe in her little hand, and, rushing up to me, threw herself into my arms in a violent fit of weeping, her little frame perfectly convulsed with sobs; but she was conquered." Such struggles as these occur at least once in the life of every high-spirited child. A Liudsley gratifies his brutal love of domination by the use of a shingle upon his child; the majority of American parents find it easier to abandon the contest, and let their children enjoy a demoralizing triumph, than to persist with mingled firmness, tact, and patience until obedience is secured.

Divine wisdom bas made obedience necessary to the true happiness of every child. A spoiled child is the emblem of misery to itself and discomfort to all around. And American children are universally presumed to be spoiled, not merely by the judgment of foreigners, but by the tacit evidence of our own people. Why is it that landlords are so unanimous in preferring tenants without children? Why is it that children, in all other countries esteemed the object of marriage, are here so commonly thought of as its drawback? There can be no doubt that it is because they are expected, as a matter of course, to be a source of irritation and anxiety, undisciplined, little nuisances, worrying their parents' lives and driving off their parents' friends. We go further, and assert that the enormous prevalency of abortion among married women is largely owing to this universal expectation that children will be a source of far more annoyance than comfort; an expectation which no experience of well-trained children would ever justify. Unquestionably the most judicious training fails in many instances; but as a rule it develops a condition of moral health which makes children the joy of the household and the special attraction of visitors. And it is from the rule, and not from the exceptions, that the common judgments of men are formed. We conclude, therefore, from the general anticipation that children, at any rate other people's children, will be disagreeable and mischievous, that there is a general belief that children are badly trained.

We have already been led incidentally to remark how much discomfort, and even crime, is indirectly caused by the general lack of proper family discipline. These are, however, only part of the evils to which it gives rise. "Young America" is proverbially pert, obtrusive, and irreverent; unaccustomed to obey at home, our young men are apt to lack respect for lawful authority everywhere; untrained at home, they rush into life with shallow thoughts and little training of any kind. Probably half the cost of our late civil war may be fairly charged to the lack of habits of discipline, obedience, and self-command on both sides.

It is even more melancholy to witness the causes which most frequently excite parents to the exercise of their authority, and the manner in which that authority is spasmodically exercised, than it is to observe the general absence of parental control. A falsehood, a petty theft, an act of meanness or cruelty which ought to excite the parent at once to grief and indignation, is usually passed over with slight reproof or total indifference. Charley may torture the cat, or destroy his baby sister's doll, or steal her apple, or show a meanly selfish spirit toward his playfellows with comparative impunity, though he is thus giving way to the basest tendencies of his nature; but woe be to Charley if he breaks his mother's china, or stains her silk dress, even though it should be done by pure accident and in the excess of affectionate zeal. Is not this, in its measure, almost as ghastly a spectacle as that of the Rev. Mr. Lindsley "correcting" his baby with a shingle for refusing to say its prayers? On the one hand the child displays a temper which, if entirely unchecked through life, would make it a fiend. For this it receives no punishment. On the other hand, through mere natural thoughtlessness, it injures a few dollars' worth of goods, which must in any case soon perish. This brings upon it bitter words, perhaps bodily chastisement. Every one knows that this is a contrast daily witnessed in thousands of families. For ourselves, we see it often, and with ever-growing abhorrence.—The Nation.

A JEWISH DIVORCE.—A divorce, according to the practice in the Hebrew Church, took place at the residence of the Rev. J. Gabriel. At the present term of the Superior Court a divorce was obtained by Louis Rothschild from Esther Rothschild. One of the parties desired that a divorce should also be granted after the manner of the Hebrew custom. Yesterday it was accomplished. As it is somewhat interesting to know what the ceremony consisted of, we give it. It is as follows: The wife, dressed in black, with a black veil over her face, appeared with her husband before a council of ten men, members of the synagogue. There were also present three rabbins, one of whom acted as the petitioner, and wrote out on parchment a petition in Hebrew, asking for a divorce, and also wrote out the decree of divorce; the second acted as the respondent or defendant, and the third as a kind of judge; the council of ten acting as a jury. The man and wife having appeared, they stood side by side before the council. The rabbins and council then took an oath, all shaking hands—the oath being to the effect that they would always consider the divorce legal and binding. The wife then removed her veil, and the rabbi who acted as petitioner read the petition in German, and stated the case to the council, who, having heard it, decreed the divorce. The decree, folded up, was handed to the husband, and the wife raising her open hands, the husband dropped the paper into them. The rabbi who acted as judge then took it and cut the edge like a fringe. He then handed it to the president of the synagogue, telling him to place it among the records of the society, to be preserved as evidence of the divorce. This having been done, the ceremony was finished, and the parties departed, no longer man and wife.—New Haven Journal.

THE Howson Opera Troupe have done a good business at Sacramento during the week.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the considerationdoes not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons 10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

The London Quarterly Review (Conservative.)
The Edinburgh Review (Whig.)
The Westminster Review (Radical.)
The North British Review (Free Church.)
Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum..... 7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $18, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
38 Walker street, New York.

TYLER BROTHERS,

NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,

SAN FRANCISCO,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

SCHOOL BOOKS,

STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

BLANK BOOKS,

PORTFOLIOS,

JUVENILE BOOKS,

FANCY ARTICLES,

CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we stamp with

INITIALS,

In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS
ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.
je23

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
mar24 6m Main street, Petaluma.

OCCIDENTAL
HOMESTEAD
Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

Capital Stock, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

This Association was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 469, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the
TURK STREET RAILROAD,
Is NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,
and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17
Have received a Large Stock of GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,
Which they are selling
AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,
SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M

mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

STOP THAT COUGHING.

SOME OF YOU CAN'T, AND WE PITY YOU. You have tried every remedy but the ONE destined, by its intrinsic merit, to supersede all similar preparations. It is not surprising you should be reluctant to try something else after the many experiments you have made of trashy compounds foisted on the public as a certain cure. but

NEWELL'S
PULMONARY SYRUP

is really the VERY BEST remedy ever compounded for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Consumption. Thousands of people in California and Oregon have been already benefited by the surprising curative powers of

NEWELL'S PULMONARY SYRUP,

and with one accord give it their unqualified approbation. We now address ourselves to all who are unacquainted with this, the greatest Panacea of the age, for the healing of all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, assuring you that has cured thousands, and it will cure you if you try it. This invaluable medicine is pleasant to the taste, soothing, healing and strengthening in its effects; entirely free from all poisonous or deleterious drugs, and perfectly harmless under all circumstances.

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

Certificates from many prominent citizens of San Francisco accompany every bottle of

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents.
San Francisco.

REDINGTON'S
Flavoring Extracts

ARE MADE FROM FRESH FRUITS. Each bottle holds twice as much as any other brand in the market, consequently they are the cheapest and the best. USE NO OTHER.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Agents for the Pacific Coast.

MARTHA WASHINGTON
HAIR RESTORER.

THIS IS A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY, and stands above comparison with any other article for the Hair ever brought before the public.

A PERFECT
Hair Restorer and Hair Dresser
BOTH COMBINED IN ONE.

First—It is not a Dye.
Second—Will not Color the Skin.
Third—Will restore Gray Hair to a beautiful Black, Brown, Auburn, or whatever might have been its original color, and cause it to assume its former beauty.
Fourth—Will cure all Humors and Diseases of the Scalp.
Fifth—Will remove Dandruff and Scurf from the head, and keep the hair moist and silk like in its appearance as in youthful days.
Sixth—Will promote a healthy growth.
Seventh—Will prevent it from falling off, and cause it to grow on bald heads where there is life and vitality at the roots, but where these are gone there is no hope of success.
Eighth—The best testimony that can be given will be found inside of each bottle.

Warranted to do all we claim for it, or the money refunded after using two bottles. Try it and be convinced.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Price.....One Dollar

SIMONDS & CO., Proprietors,
Fitzwilliam, N. H.
REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

REDINGTON & CO.'S
Essence of Jamaica Ginger.

THIS VALUABLE PREPARATION, containing in a highly concentrated form all the properties of the Jamaica Ginger, has become one of the most popular domestic remedies for all diseases of the stomach and digestive organs.

As a tonic it will be found invaluable to all persons recovering from debility, whether produced by fever or otherwise, for whilst it imparts to the system all the glow and vigor that can be produced by wine or brandy, it is entirely free from the reactionary effects that follow the use of spirits of any kind.

It is also an excellent remedy for females who suffer from difficult menstruation, giving almost immediate relief to the spasms that so frequently accompany that period.

It gives immediate relief to Nausea, caused by riding in a railroad car, or by sea sickness, or other causes.

It is also valuable as an external application for Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, etc.

REDINGTON & CO.,
au4 6m Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valnable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mail able printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual snbscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MAchine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York,

1865.

my10-3m

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS

CREATE A HEALTHY APPETITE!

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure Dyspepsia, Diarrhœa and Constipation.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Invigornto the System and eulivcu the mind.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Ovorcomo the effects of Druukenuess and Lato Hours.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Cure all Diseases of the Liver, Stomach and Bowels.

ROSENBAUM'S BITTERS
Are Palatable to the Taste.

They are the

BEST BITTERS IN THE MARKET,

And when once used will always he called for again.

They are made in the most careful manner

From Pure Old Wheat Whisky, Medicated from

Roots and Herbs

Especially adapted for the cure of all Stomachic Diseases and Liver Complaints.

Try Them and You will be Satisfied.

For sale everywhere by Druggists and Liquor Dealers or by

N. B. JACOBS & CO.,
423 Front street,
my11-6m San Francisco

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

TRY LE COUNT'S INK.

CORNER OF

Sacramento and Montgomery streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

Post Office Address: Lock Box No 1477. je30 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S

Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine,
ap14-1y Agents for Pacific Coast.

FRANKLIN PRINTING OFFICE,

509 CLAY STREET, (near Sansome,)

SAN FRANCISCO,

"The oldest and most complete Book and Job printing establishment in California. All descriptions of work neatly executed at low rates."

ja1 FRANK EASTMAN, Proprietor.

AYER'S

PILLS.

ARE YOU SICK, FEEBLE and complaining? Are you out of order, with your system deranged and your feelings uncomfortable? These symptoms are often the prelude to serious illness. Some fit of sickness is creeping upon you, and should be averted by a timely use of the right remedy. At once TAKE AYER'S PILLS, and cleanse out the disordered humors, purify the blood, and let the life move on unobstructed in health again. They stimulate the functions of the body into vigorous activity, purify the system from the obstructions which make disease. A cold settles somewhere in the body, and deranges its natural functions. These, if not relieved, react upon themselves and the surrounding organs, producing general aggravation, suffering and derangement. While in this condition, and see how directly they restore the natural action of the system, and with it the buoyant feeling of health again. What is true and so apparent in this trivial and common complaint is also true in many of the deep-seated and dangerous distempers. The same purgative effect expels them. Caused by similar obstructions and derangements of the natural functions of the body, they are rapidly and many of them surely cured by the same means. None who know the virtue of these Pills will neglect to employ them when suffering from the disorders they cure, such as Headache, Foul Stomach, Dysentery, Bilious Complaints, Indigestion, Derangement of the Liver, Costiveness, Constipation, Heartburn, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Worms and Suppression, when taken in large doses.

TAKE AYER'S PILLS,

They are Sugar-Coated, so that the most sensitive can take them easily, and they are surely the best purgative medicine yet discovered.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
jy26-2m and all Dealers.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal.

THE FOURTH ANNUAL SESSION of the above Institution commenced July 30th, 1866.

The age for admission is from seven to fifteen years. For those more than fifteen years of age, it will be necessary to have testimonials of good character from respectable parties.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25
No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance; also, such sum to be deposited as will be sufficient to pay the traveling expenses of the student to his place of residence, and other contingent expenses, such as books, clothes, etc.

No Student will be received without such deposit.

The terms are so reduced (less than one-half the usual charges in this State) that the Institution can be conducted only on a rigid cash principle; hence any failure in remitting the Pension will oblige the authorities of the College to charge ten per cent. additional, or forward the student to his parents or guardian.

Though it be a Catholic Institution, yet pupils of all denominations will be admitted, and their religious convictions respected; but, for the sake of uniformity, all will be required to be present at the public religious exercises.

Bedding, towels, etc., will be furnished by the Institution, to defray the cost of which ten dollars will be paid, once only, by each pupil, as an entrance fee.

Each pupil is required to be provided with a neat black suit for Sundays, and two other plain suits, three pairs of boots, with sufficient linen, stockings, etc.

Five dollars will also be charged annually for medicines and medical attendance.

au4-1m REV P. J. GREY, President.

A CARD.

Great Sale of Fine Clothing.

OUR WHOLE STOCK OF FINE CLOTHING and Gents' Furnishing Goods, for the next

THIRTY DAYS,

At Prices that Challenge Competition.

IT MUST BE SOLD, TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner Bush and Montgomery streets, and corner Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.

au4

GOOD NEWS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Teeth Extracted Without Pain

BY THE

ANÆSTHETIC SPRAY PRODUCER,

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

Partial to a full Upper Set of Teeth, for from $10 to $25, as usual. Filling with best Cement, $1; with Gold, from $1 to $3. All work warranted.

Office, 139 Fourth street, near Howard.
nu4 3m J. P. CROWELL, Dentist.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, - - Petaluma.

mar24-6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE.

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. F. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB,

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

☞ THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

OCCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mb25-tf

OUR BOOK-TABLE.

Robi di Roma. By W. W. Story. In two volumes. Fifth edition. Philadelphia: J. B. Lippincott & Co. London: Chapman & Hall.

THE fame which Mr. Story—the "W. W. S." of Blackwood—has lately acquired as a poet, ought not eclipse the reputation he has fairly won as prose writer through his well known Robi di Roma. This series of admirable sketches of Roman life and manners, is now in its fifth edition, and has already become classic. If we except some passages of Hawthorne's Marble Fawn, it is universally conceded that no writer has ever approximated to Mr. Story in description of Italian scenery and customs. With that skill in delineating outline, and that delight in color which is born of his profession as a painter, he has been enabled to picture Rome to the reader as no other traveller has done. His culture, classical knowledge, and ready memory give to his sketches the character of historical retrospects, without the stiffness and tediousness of retrospect, while travellers, artists, and pilgrims of all nations, concur in the fidelity of his descriptions of the present. The following passage from the chapter of the Colosseum is an instance of the peculiar blending of the pictorial and retrospective:

"Of all the ruins in Rome, none is at once so beautiful, so imposing, and so characteristic as the Colosseum. Here throbbed the Roman heart in its fullest pulses. Over its benches swarmed the mighty population of the centre city of the world. In its arena, gazed at by a hundred thousand eager eyes, the gladiator fell, while the vast velarium trembled as the air was shaken by the savage shouts of 'Habet,' and myriads of cruel hands, with upturned thumbs, sealed his unhappy fate. The sand of the arena drank the blood of African elephants, lions, and tigers—of Mirmilliones Laqueatores, Retiarii, and Andabatæ—and of Christian martyrs and virgins. Here emperor, senators, knights and soldiers, the lowest populace and the proudest citizens, gazed together on the bloody games—shouted together as the favorite won, groaned together fiercely as the favorite fell, and startled the eagles sailing over the blue vault above with their wild cries of triumph. Here might be heard the trumpeting of the enraged elephant, the savage roar of the tiger, the peevish shriek of the grave-rifling hyena, while the human beasts above, looking on the slaughter of the lower beasts beneath, uttered a wilder and more awful yell. Rome—brutal, powerful, bloodthirsty, imperial Rome—built in its days of pride this mighty amphitheatre, and, outlasting all its works, it still stands, the best type of its grandeur and brutality. What St. Peter's is to the Rome of to-day is the Colosseum to the Rome of the Cæsars. The Baths of Caracalla, grand as they are, must yield precedence to it. The Cæsars' palaces are almost level with the earth. Over the pavement where once swept the imperial robes now slips the gleaming lizard; and in the indiscriminate ruins of these splendid halls the contadino plants his potatoes and sells for a paul the oxodised coin which once may have paid the entrance fee to the great amphitheatre. The golden house of Nero is gone. The very Forum where Cicero delivered his immortal orations is almost obliterated, and antiquarians quarrel over the few columns that remain But the Colosseum still stands: despite the assault of time and the work of barbarians, it still stands, noble and beautiful in its display—yes, more beautiful than ever.

"But what a change has come over it since the bloody scenes of the Cæsars were enacted! A supreme peace now reigns there. Thousands of beautiful flowers bloom in its ruined arches, tall plants and shrubs wave across the open spaces, and Nature has healed over the wounds of time with delicate grasses and weeds. Where, through the podium doors, wild beasts once rushed into the arena to tear the Christian martyrs, now stand the altars and stations that are dedicated to Christ. In the summer afternoon the air above is thronged with twittering swallows; and sometimes, like a reminiscence of imperial times, far up in the blue height an eagle, planing over it on widespread motionless wings, sails silently along.

"Here, as you lie, towards twilight, dreaming of the past, upon some broken block of travertine, you will see a procession wending its way between the arches, preceded by a cross-bearer and two acolytes. It is composed of a Franciscan friar in his brown serge and cowl, accompanied by the religious confraternity of the 'Lovers of Jesus and Maria,' and followed by a group of women in black, and veiled. They chant together a hymn as they slowly approach the cross planted in the centre of the arena. There they kneel and cry, 'Adoramus te, Christi, et benedicimus te,' with the response, 'Quia per sanctam crucem tuam redemisti mundum.' Then the monk ascends the platform before one of the altars, plants his crucifix beside him, and preaches a sermon. This finished, the procession makes the round of the stations, and again passes out of the arena. As he advances to the first station he chants:

'L' orme sanguigne,
Del mio Signore,
Tutto dolore
Seguitero.'

And the people respond:

'Vi prego, o Gesu buono,
Per la vostra passione
Darmi il perdono!'

It is strange to hear this chant and sermon in a place once dedicated to blood—strange to hear the doctrine of love and forgiveness on the spot where the gladiator fell and the martyr suffered for his faith!

"As you dream over this change, the splendor of sunset blazes against the lofty walls, and transfigures its blocks of travertine to brown and massive gold; the quivering stalks and weeds seem on fire; the flowers drink in a glory of color, and show like gems against the rough crust of their setting: rose clouds hang in the open vaults above, under which swift birds flash incessantly, and through the shadowed arches you see long molten bars of crimson drawn against a gorgeous sky beyond. Slowly the great shadow of the western wall creeps along the arena; the cross in the centre blazes no longer in the sun; it reaches the eastern benches, climbs rapidly up the wall, and the glory of sunset is gone. 'Twilight now swiftly draws its veil across the sky; the molten clouds grow cool and gray, the orange refines into citron, and pales away to tenderest opaline light, and stars begin to peer through the dim veil of twilight. Shadows deepen in the open arena, block up the arches and galleries, confuse the lines of the benches, and shroud its decay. You rise and walk musingly into the centre of the arena, and, looking round its dim, vast circumference, you suddenly behold the benches as of old, thronged with their myriads of human forms—the ghosts of those who once sat there. That terrible circle of eyes is shining at you with a ghastly expression of cruel excitement. You hear the strange, exciting hum of confused voices, and the roar of wild beasts in the caverns below. You are yourself the gladiator, who must die to make a Roman holiday, or the martyr who waits at the stake for the savage beasts that are to rend you. A shudder comes over you, for the place has magnetized you with its old life. You look hurriedly round to seek flight, when you suddenly hear a soprano voice saying, 'François, where did the Vestal Virgins sit?' and you wake from your dream."

Mr. Story's power of humorous description is no less remarkable in the following account of the Fantoccini, or puppet shows:

"Do not allow yourself to suppose that there is anything ludicrous to the audience in the performances of these buratlini. Nothing, on the contrary, is more serious. No human beings could be so serious. Their countenances are solemn as death, and more unchanging than the face of a clock. Their terrible gravity when, with drooping heads and collapsed arms, they fix on their great goggle eyes, is at times ghastly. They never descend into the regions of conscious farce. The plays they perform are mostly heroic, romantic, and historical. They stoop to nothing which is not startling in incident, imposing in style, and grandiose in movementa. The wars of the Paladins, the heroic adventures of knights and ladies of romance, the tragedies of the middle ages, the prodogies of the melodramatic world, are within their special province. The heroes that tread the fantoccini stage are doughty warriors, who perform impossible feats of prowess, slay armies with a single arm, rescue injured damsels, express themselves in loud and boastful language, utter exalted sentiments, and are equally admirable in love and war. No worthy fantoccino shrinks before an army, or leaves the board of battle till it is covered with the corpses of his enemies.

"The audience listen with grave and profound interest. To them the actors are not fantoccini, but heroes. Their inflated and extravagant discourse is simply grand and noble. They are the mighty x which represents the unknown quantity of boasting which potentially exists in the bosom of every one. Do not laugh when you enter, or the general look of surprise and annoyance will at once recall you to the proprieties of the occasion. You might as well laugh in a church."

* * * * * * *

"The scene when we entered was between two puppets, both dressed in armour, speaking in tremendous voices, and flourishing gigantic swords. One was a child Fantoccino—the other probably Selinguerra. No attempt was made to conceal the agency by which the figures and their weapons were moved. Stout perpendicular wires, piercing the head and passing out of sight above the hangings, sustained the figures, and the hands and swords were moved by the same grossly apparent means. Each Fantoccino when it spoke went into a sudden convulsion, as if it were attacked by a fit of St. Vitus's dance, while the sword seemed animated with spasmodic life, and thrashed to and fro in the air with utter disregard to the warrior's anatomy, which it constantly and painfully dislocated with every movement. But no sooner had he ceased speaking than his arms fell into a helpless collapse, his head dropped drunkenly forward, or remained fixed in a dislocation, glaring at nothing, and with his sword stiffly pointing up to the ceiling, and his legs hanging in the air or huddled under him, so as to leave him quite out of balance, he awaited impotently the answer of his opponent. It was a violent dispute that was taking place between the youth and Selinguerra and his lieutenant, who were threatening to destroy the castle of the 'terribil Gobbo.' Both these doughty warriors were a couple of inches at least above the floor, which they never descended or condescended to touch, save by way of emphasis, when down they came on their heels with a sharp wooden rap, and then jerked suddenly up again. The dispute was tremendous. They launched at each other, in loud voices, terrible threats and challenges. Selinguerra was especially ferocious, and 'Chi sei tu che osi!' he cried to the youth; but the latter, not to be outdone in boasting or fury, with a wild spasm of sword and dangling about of his arms, exclaimed, 'Trema! che son il figlio del terribil Gobbo.' and then collapsed in silence. 'Ah ha,' with a roar, responded his opponent 'male hai fatto a palesarlo--non posso piu contenere il mio immenso furor. Preparati a morir!' and with a galvanic twitch and a thundering rap of his heels on the floor he shook defiance at the bold youth. But the youth now showed himself the true son of the terrible Gobbo. He roused from the collapse in which he had fallen, and coming down with his heels, too (as if Antæus like, to acquire new strength by touching the ground,) he jerked his head and limbs, flung out wildly one leg, and waved a challenge in the name of St. Vitus. Now ensued a terrible encounter. Selinguerra, backed by his lieutenant, attacked the heroic son of the Gobbo, and all three, rising higher from the floor in their excitement, dashed promiscuously together, clashing their swords furiously, and swinging backwards and forwards half the length of the stage, while their helpless legs beat to and fro in the air All the while a drum behind the scenes was 'rolling rapidly.' It was encouraging, however, to see how bravely the son of the Gobbo held his own. Despite the terrible blows he received on his head, each of which would have done forever for a mere 'personaggio,' and the excited efforts he made with his arms and legs, he never for a moment lost his courage or wind. His expression never changed, but on his countenance might still be seen the same calm supernatural glare, the same unwinking eyes. At last, however, he was brought to his knees, or rather, to be accurate, he was brought halfway down backward, with his legs at an angle of forty-five degrees, sitting on nothing at all, and still shaking the 'fragments of his blade' above him. He was now so weak that his endeavors to sit entirely down seemed vain, and in one of his attempts to do so a gigantic apparition of a superhuman fist appeared like a portent above his head, between the slips. 'Preparita a morir!' now thundered Selinguerra, and all seemed over with him, when suddenly the aspect of things changed. In burst the 'terribil Gobbo' himself, 'in complete steel,' and, striking the floor with a succession of bold knocks, and waving with convulsive jerks his sword, while he sidled dislocatedly along towards Selinguerra with little drifting hops, brought help at the most opportune moment. Well did he sustain in the ensuing conflict his terrible reputation. 'Alone he did it.' At first it was Selinguerra and his lieutenant who opposed him, but he soon made minced meat of them; and then the whole army, spasmodically hopping and staggering in sideways to the rescue of their captain, attacked the Gobbo altogether. In the rage of the conflict, both he and the army madly swung the whole length of the stage, suspended in the air, smashing against each other right and left in the utmost confusion, and cutting each other promiscuously in their attempts to hit him, as if it were a 'free fight' in Arkansas. But one by one, and platoon by platoon, they fell before the terrible Gobbo, until at last he hovered above the heaps of slain, sound as ever in wind and limb, and had a spasm of satisfaction over them as they lay there covering the stage, some with their legs straight up in the air. But a messenger now arrived. Where is the Gobbo's spouse? Oh Dio! and messenger and Gobbo drifted out together, bumping each other recklessly on the way, and disappeared between the slips."

THE LAST PARIS FASHION.—I have to announce, says a writer from the centre of fashion, one of the oddest, queerest, strangest, most curious, unaccountable, inconceivable, incomprehensible, extraordinary, wildest, and ugliest invention ever devised by fancy or fashion, and that is "false eyelashes." The Empress has mentioned them—has put her seal upon the patent. Imagine, courting a lovely Hebe, with a mass of golden curls covering her neck and shoulders, and with long lashes veiling her eyes, like a beautiful silk fringe; and then imagine, if you can, seeing one by one of the curls and lashes disappear within the recess of a board card-box.

THE RIGHT TO HISS.—Punch hits the mark exactly in the following: "You will do no good at the theatres until the right to hiss is as much recognized as the right to clap. Abstractedly, these rights are equal; but just hiss and you'll have a dozen snobs crying 'shame,' a fool next you will remark to his friend that it is 'illiberal,' and a policeman will probably say that you 'had better be quiet.' And though a claque may be sent in to applaud, it is called a conspiracy if a group agree to condemn."

A NEW AND GRAND EPOCH IN MEDICINE.—Dr. Maggiel is the founder of a new medical system. The quantitarians, whose vast internal doses enfeeble the stomach and paralyze the bowels, must give precedence to the man who restores health and appetite with from one or two of his extraordinary pills, and cures the most virulent sores with a box or so of his wonderful and all-healing salve. These two great specifics of the Doctor are fast superseding all the stereotyped nostrums of the day. Extraordinary cures by Maggiel's Pills and salve have opened the eyes of the public to the inefficiency of the so-called remedies of others, and upon which people have so long blindly depended. Maggiel's Pills are not of the class that are swallowed by the dozen, and of which every boxfull taken creates an absolute necessity for another. One or two of Maggiel's Pills suffice to place the bowels in perfect order, tone the stomach, create an appetite, and render the spirits light and buoyant. There is no griping, and no reaction in the form of constipation. If the liver is affected, its functions are restored, and if the nervous system is feeble it is invigorated. This last quality makes the medicines very desirable for the wants of delicate females. Ulcerous and eruptive diseases are literally extinguished by the disinfectant power of Maggiel's salve. In fact, it is here announced that Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhea Pills cure where all others fail. While, for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. MAGGIEL, No. 11 Pine street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box. R. H. McDonald & Co., Agents for Pacific coast, corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco. c14

SEWING MACHINES.—We have have written often upon this subject, and urged the value of this implement to a more general use—not only to the wife and daughter, for household purposes, but to the farmers, to make up their grain sacks; by this means a large saving could be made to them. We visited the office of the Wheeler & Wilson Sewing Machine, the present week, and were gratified to notice the business done. Nearly every machine was at work by those who were trying them, as purchasers, under the direction of the Lady Director. Mr. Tileston, the active agent, was busy in his department, preparing machines to be sent away. We noticed one farmer trying a machine to see how thick a mass could be sewed, in order to learn how to sew heavy bags. We saw four thicknesses of heavy cloth sewed as easily as lighter material. The best proof we have of the superiority of the Wheeler & Wilson machine, is that there were thirty-eight machines sent off to order the last week, and the business is steadily increasing.—California Farmer.

IF YOU want a fashionable and well-fitting suit of clothes, or anything choice in gents' furnishing goods, make your selections from the extensive stock of Houston, Hastings & Co. They import their own goods, keep the choicest and largest stock, and sell at low prices. By the aid of these advantages, and liberal advertising, they do an enormous business and take the lead of all other houses in the clothing trade.

LADIES: With tasteful discrimination, the world of fashion has selected Davidson's Circassian Bloom as the most elegant beautifier of the complexion and skin. There is not a notable soiree, ball or party to which its incomparable dressing does not add zest. Sold by all druggists. CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents.

FEATS of magic, astonishing tricks of delusion, etc., will be performed at the Circassian Saloon to-night, and every night next week. Admission free. See advertisement.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for and take none but LYON'S, bearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervation, listlessness, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaints they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedentary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spavin, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Strains, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westbrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky, and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off and turning gray, and promotes its growth upon premature bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.

E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no other. e7m

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

E GOLDSMITH & Co., at No. 616 Sacramento street, three doors below Kearny, have just received some beautiful new style Garibaldis and Zouave Jackets, that for taste and style are particularly worthy of the attention of our lady readers. They have also a fine assortment of Ladies' Furnishing Goods of the choicest description. French corsets for one dollar. A great variety of French toilet and fancy articles, the newest styles of buttons and dress trimmings, may always be found at Goldsmith's 616 Sacramento street.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself a well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend. JOSEPH SPARROW.

DAINTY WORK.—About the daintiest work we ever saw were specimens of hair jewelry at the establishment of Mrs. C. Cook, 645 Clay street, between Montgomery and Kearny streets, yesterday. This lady manufactures all sorts of jewelry—watch-chains, earrings, finger rings, breastpins, and various other kinds of ornaments—from human hair. We witnessed the process of manufacture, and it is intricate and ingenious in the highest degree.—S. F. Examiner.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAN, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty-second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
je2 4m NEW YORK.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets.

VINCENT'S COLD PREVENTIVE.

A Sure Cure
FOR COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS
DYSPEPSIA,
CONSUMPTION,
NIGHT SWEATS, AND PULMONARY DISEASES.

Read the following:

REMARKABLE CURE.

San Francisco, September 5th, 1865.

I desire to make known the fact that I was afflicted with a very bad cough for fifteen years, and, during this time, used everything which I could hear of without getting the better of my disease, until I tried Dr. D. B. Vincent's Cold Preventative or Cough Mixture, which cured me sound and well.

NEWTON MOORE.

This is to certify that my wife has been troubled with indigestion for nearly eighteen months, and, by using one bottle of Dr. Vincent's medicine, has been completely cured.

San Francisco, April 6th, 1866.

JOHNSON J. THOMAS.

San Francisco, July 17th, 1865.

I hereby certify that, having had a Cough some five months since, which had troubled me for two years, and I was so bad that I was able to do but little labor of any kind, and could not walk fast without putting myself out of breath. I was so far gone that I had chills over me and night sweats, and had what other physicians called disease of the lungs. I had been doctoring a part of the time for the last year, when I saw Dr. D. B. Vincent, and he gave me a small vial of medicine, which relieved me of the chills and night sweats, and the cough entirely went away, and I do not take cold so easy, and my health is much better in every respect. My appetite is much better; and I heartily recommend all others who are afflicted with similar complaints to him.

JOHN O'NEILL, National Hotel.

The above named diseases nearly all originate from the same or similar causes, and will cure all of them. It is a sure cure for Dyspepsia. Price, 50 cents per bottle.

THE COLD PREVENTIVE

D. B. VINCENT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND OCULIST,

Treats all diseases successfully on the Electric system. Particular attention paid to treating all Diseases of the Eyes, Rheumatism, Paralysis, etc. Cures guaranteed, or all moneys refunded—in most cases even where others fail.

☞ OFFICE—No. 103 Kearny street, first floor, where he can be consulted at all hours, unless professionally engaged. All orders from the country promptly attended to. ap7

FARRAND'S OSCILLATING
Amalgamator.

THIS UNRIVALLED IMPROVEMENT FOR THE REduction and amalgamation of Gold and Silver Ores, is now running daily at No. 206 Commercial street, between Front and Davis.

THIS AMALGAMATOR INVOLVES
NO COMPLICATED MACHINERY
And possesses the following advantages over all others now in use:

1st. It is capable of doing double the amount of work of the ordinary Pans, at a saving of more than one-half the power.

2d. It reduces the pulp finer, thereby producing a better result.

3d. It requires less quicksilver by one-half at a charge, whilst the loss by trituration is comparatively nothing.

4th. As an Amalgamator for gold contained in sulphurets, as also for very fine or flour gold, it has no equal.

5th. This Amalgamator involves no complicated machinery, and is less liable to get out of order than any of the pans.

DESCRIPTION OF FARRAND'S AMALGAMATOR.

In offering this Amalgamator to the public the inventor does not claim any new or scientific method of extracting the precious metals from the ores; he merely claims a new and simple combination of mechanical principles, whereby a great saving of power (full one-half in amount) is effected. The capacity of the machine varies with its size. The smallest, or prospecting size, will reduce 400 lbs. in three hours, and can be easily worked by the power of one man. The largest size will work 1,500 lbs in three hours, or six tons in 24 hours, with an application of a trifle more than one-horse power. This saving of power, as all mill-men are aware, is an important consideration particularly where fuel is scarce. The power so saved in running the Amalgamators may be advantageously employed to an increase of stamps, and thus proportionally increasing the work of the mill. This machine consists of a semi-cylindrical, trough-shaped vessel, in the interior of which is furnished with moveable concave dies, to be replaced when worn out, as in ordinary pans. The mullers are convex, and attached to a substantial rock shaft, by which they are moved back and forward by crank or eccentric motion. The mullers are held to their places by springs of moderate strength, the pressure of which may be easily regulated. The oscillating motion of the mullers serves to keep the pulp in a constant state of agitation, thoroughly mixing it, and passing it under the mullers without resort to any of the various expedients employed in Pans where a circular motion is maintained.

A large size machine is constructed without dies or mullers, but simply with arms to act as stirrers, to be used in connection with several of the Amalgamators as a "Separator," as it is found that the peculiar motion given to these arms, in connection with the concave shape of the body of the machine, renders it most effectual for such a purpose.

Trials made with this machine in the presence of experts, during the last six months, have been pronounced highly satisfactory. It is peculiarly well adapted to employment by small mining operators in distant localities, as it can readily be taken to pieces and packed upon mules.

W. D. FARRAND

J. PEIRCE,
FURNITURE AND
Bedding Warerooms.

Nos. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

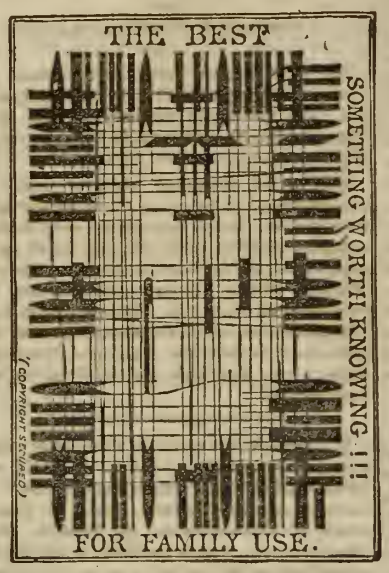
The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
je16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
je30 3m San Francisco.



NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.
je17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,
PRINTERS,
And Blank Book Manufacturers,
517 CLAY STREET,
Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,
SAN FRANCISCO.

YANKEE NOTIONS
AND
FANCY GOODS!

MERCHANTS wanting Goods in this line should not fail to examine our stock, which is new and attractive, before buying elsewhere.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
jy21-3m Battery street, near Pine.

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO
OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.
ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,
Cor. Sansome and California streets, San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes
Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.
LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN immediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship
MOSES TAYLOR,
ON WEDNESDAY, - - - AUGUST 15,
From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely
Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship
SANTIAGO,
2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO
411 CLAY STREET,
BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by
M. D. CARR & CO.
je30-3m

FURNITURE
AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!
LATEST STYLES!
The Best Workmanship,
AND LOWEST PRICES!
AT
Goodwin & Co.'s
FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,
Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

HEUSTON,
HASTINGS
& CO.
The Fashionable Clothiers
OF
SAN FRANCISCO,

Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE
STOCK OF
CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,
GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,
TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,
ON THE PACIFIC COAST,
AT REDUCED PRICES.
je17-3m

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS OF
DRY GOODS, LINENS,
FURNISHING GOODS,
YANKEE NOTIONS,
FANCY GOODS, ETC.
AGENTS FOR THE
MOUNT VERON DUCK COMPANY
NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.
RETAIL HOUSE, - - - NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
jy21 3m Lick House.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,
Teachers of Dancing,
CONGRESS HALL,
On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. au6-3m

QUINCY HALL,
545, 547, 549 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE LARGEST CLOTHING EMPORIUM in California. The daily sales from the establishment is a sufficient guarantee that the prices are less than those of any other house on the Pacific coast. Here you also find clothing of the best of California Cloth, both for Wholesale and Retail trade. Also, particular attention paid to making up fine clothing to order. jy 21

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE
FOR TAX COLLECTOR,
HENRY A. COBB,
OF THE FIRM OF COBB & SINTON, jy21 NO. 407 CALIFORNIA STREET.

RING'S
VEGETABLE AMBROSIA
IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale and retail, by
JOHN F. SNOW,
Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,
je23 San Francisco.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46. steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

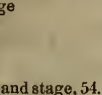
SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,



Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

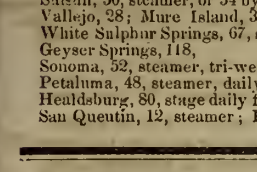
THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. je15 3m

PISCO!



G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
my28 Lied street, San Francisco.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work a all kinds, Spikes,

Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
je10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!

MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,
53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, President

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

ALLEN'S LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR

COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH,

CONSUMPTION,

And all Diseases of the

CHEST AND LUNGS

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.

Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS' Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	fants.....	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Billious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	50
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings.....	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

See that the name,

GEO. W. LAIRD,

is stamped

ON THE BOTTLE.

No other is Genuine.

BLOOM OF YOUTH,

OR

LIQUID PEARL!

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH AND DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay
ap27-3m San Francisco

GUARDIAN'S SALE OF REAL ESTATE.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, That in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California, made on the 19th day of July, A. D. 1866, in the matter of the estates and guardianship of Violet Blair, Jessup Blair and Lucy J. Blair, minors, the undersigned, the guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder, for cash, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Monday, the thirteenth day of August, A. D. 1866, at 12 o'clock M., at the office of the undersigned, in Rooms Nos. 4 and 5, Barron's Building, northwest corner of Montgomery and Merchant streets, in the city and county of San Francisco, where offers or bids will be received, all the right, title, interest and estate of the said Violet Blair, Jessup Blair, and Lucy J. Blair, minors, in and to all those certain lots, pieces, or parcels of land, situate, lying and being in the said city and county of San Francisco, State of California, and bounded and described as follows, to wit:

1. The lot on the northerly side of Bryant street, commencing 100 varas westerly from Fourth street, running thence westerly or southwesterly along Bryant street, 100 varas front by a uniform depth, northerly or northwesterly, of 100 varas, being the lot known on the official map of the city of San Francisco as 100-vara Lot No. 179. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-quarter of said lot.

2. The lot on the southwesterly corner of Main and Folsom streets, fifty varas square. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-half of said lot—subject to lease.

3. The lot on the southerly side of Filbert street, fifty varas square, commencing 50 varas westerly from Powell street, running thence westerly, 50 varas front by a uniform depth southerly of 50 varas, being the lot known on the official map of the city of San Francisco as 50-vara Lot No. 431. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-half of said lot—subject to lease.

4. The lot on the southeast corner of Dupont and Broadway streets, being sixty feet front on Dupont street by a uniform depth easterly on Broadway of fifty feet. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-half of said lot—subject to lease.

5. Lot on southeast corner of Powell and Greenwich streets, being 137½ feet front on Greenwich street by a uniform depth southerly on Powell street of 206 feet and 3 inches. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-half of said lot—subject to lease.

6. The lot on the northerly side of Silver street, commencing 75 feet easterly from Third street, thence northerly parallel to Third street 70 feet, thence easterly parallel to Silver street 150 feet, thence southerly parallel to Third street 70 feet, thence westerly along Silver street 150 feet to the point of beginning, being part of the 100-vara Lot No. 85. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-fourth—subject to contract for lease and improvements.

7. The lot next adjoining the above on the east, fifty feet front on Silver street by a uniform depth northerly of 70 feet, being part of 100-vara Lot No 85. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-fourth.

8. The lot on the southerly side of Silver street, commencing 100 feet easterly from Third street, thence easterly along Silver street 175 feet, thence southerly parallel to Third street 155 feet to Bryant street, thence westerly along the northerly side of Bryant street 175 feet, thence northerly 155 feet to place of beginning, being part of 100-vara Lot No. 85. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-fourth. The same can be sold in subdivisions.

9. Lot on the southeast corner of Sansome and Broadway streets, being fifty feet square. The interest of said minors therein is claimed to be an undivided one-eighth—subject to lease.

TERMS OF SALE.—Cash, in gold coin of the United States: ten per cent. of the purchase money to be paid at the time of the sale; balance on confirmation of sale by the Probate Court. Deeds to be made (including United States revenue stamps) at purchaser's expense. R. C. ROGERS,
Guardian, etc.

San Francisco, July 28, 1866.

NOTICE.—The remaining undivided interests in said lots, except Parcel No. 9, will be sold at same time.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

MARY SMITH, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, be awarded to Plaintiff, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled. WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney, 535 Clay street. je30 3m

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that, in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco made on the 2d day of April, 1866, in the matter of the Estates of Herman R Haste and Julia Haste, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder, for cash, payable in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Saturday, the 18th day of August, 1866, at twelve o'clock, noon, of that day, at the office of D. P. Barstow, Esq., No. 6 Montgomery Block, in the City and County of San Francisco, all the right, title and interest of said minors, Herman R. Haste and Julia Haste, of, in and to all the one undivided one-half part of all that certain lot of land situated in the City and County of San Francisco, and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Merchant street, 23 feet easterly from the north east corner of Merchant street and Dunbar's Alley; thence running easterly along said line of Merchant street 20 feet 2 1 2 inches; thence at a right angle northerly 68 feet and 9 inches; thence at a right angle westerly 20 feet 2 1 2 inches, and thence at a right angle southerly 68 feet and 9 inches to the point of beginning.

Offers or bids for said property will be received at the office of D. P Barstow, Esq., No. 6 Montgomery Block, from this date till Saturday, the 18th day of August, at twelve o'clock, noon, by the undersigned,

CHRISTIAN KIRK,
Guardian of Herman R. Haste and Julia Haste, minors.
(jy28-td)

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of GEORGE D. HANSEN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of CHRISTIAN KIRK, the Executor of the estate of GEORGE D. HANSEN, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the heir and devisee of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

IT IS ORDERED, That all persons interested in the estate of the said George D. Hansen, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the court-room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on Wednesday, the fifth day of September, A. D. 1866, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate to the heir and devisee of the said George D. Hansen, deceased, according to law:

It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 5th day of September, A. D. 1866, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated, San Francisco, August 3d, 1866. 4w

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

CALIFORNIA Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

THE Accidental Insurance Co,

OF NEW YORK,

ISSUES POLICIES INSURING AGAINST INJURIES OF all kinds, and death resulting from accident

In case death does not result from the injury, the insured receives a weekly compensation as long as he is disabled (not to exceed twenty-six weeks.)

Policy.	Premium.	Weekly Compensation.
$1,000	$ 5 00	$ 5 00
$2,000	$10 00	$10 00
$5,000	$25 00	$25 00
$10,000	$50 00	$50 00

SEA VOYAGE POLICIES,

Covering risk to New York, cost $2 per $1,000.

☞ No Medical Examination required.

Life Insurance.

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
HARTFORD, CONN.

For Policies, or further information, apply to

A. D. SMITH & CO., Agents,
Northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets
aug4 3m

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

THIS AFTERNOON.....AUGUST 11,

LADY DON,

SUPPORTED BY

Miss Kate Denin,

AND A POWERFUL COMPANY,

Will appear in the glorious historical burlesque,

KENILWORTH!

OR,

YE QUEEN, YE EARLE, AND YE MAIDENNE.

The Earl of Leicester.....Lady Don
Amy Robsat.....Miss Kate Denin

THIS EVENING.....AUGUST 11,

Guy Mannering,

WITH ALL THE ORIGINAL MUSIC.

IN REHEARSAL:

ORPHEUS AND EURYDICE,

which will be produced with gorgeous scenic effects.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - $1 00
Reserved seats, - - - - - - 50c. extra
Parquet, - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - 25

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,

y19 1m SAN FRANCISCO.

DEMOCRATIC

CANDIDATE FOR

Chief of Police,

P. J. WHITE,

OF THE FIRM OF P. J. WHITE & CO.,

au11 No. 412 Front street.

GRAND OPENING

OF THE

Circassian Saloon,

Corner of Dupont and Pacific streets,

(Formerly "Dinan Saloon,")

ON SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1866.

NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT!—Magic and Gymnastic Feats, free of charge.

☞ The best of WINES, LIQUORS, LUNCH, and CIGARS always on hand,

N. B. Fine Vocal Music, Polite Waiters, etc.

au11 1m

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

ja27-tf between California and Pine.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomary street.

Bianchi's Grand Italian

Opera Troupe.

General Director.....J. P. Crowly
Treasurer.....A. Birrell

NON-SUBSCRIPTION NIGHT.

SATURDAY EVENING.....AUGUST 11,

Will be presented Verdi's Opera of Un Ballo en Maschera.

Ricardo.....Signor Engenio Bianchi
Renato.....Signor Maucusi
Amelia.....Signorina Elvira Brambilla
Ulrica.....Signora Giovanni Bianchi
Oscar.....Louisa Tourney
Sylvano.....Mons. Hennecart
Samuel.....Mons. Charles
Tom.....Mons Roncouvieri

The splendid Band of the Second U. S. Artillery, under the direction of Joseph Schmidt, Esq., will assist in the Grand Masquerade Ball Scene.

CONDUCTOR.....MR. RUDOLPH HEROLD
Scenery by Mr. Rogers. Costumes by Mrs Taylor.

Regular Subscription Nights, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Dress Circle, Orchestra and Parquette.....$1 00
Reserved seats, 50 cents extra.
Gallery.....50

☞ The Box Office is open from 9 A. M. for the securing of reserved seats for season tickets.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR AUGUST:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

AUGUST 18th, - - - - SACRAMENTO,
Captain J. M. Cavarly,
(Connecting with the HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray

AUGUST 30th, - - - - GOLDEN AGE,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth,
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Bradhury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

☞ The splendid steamship COLORADO will be despatched for CHINA on TUESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1867.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

CARRINGTON & CO'S

GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.

Address:

CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE,

751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

AN INSTITUTION designed to prepare boys, young and middle-aged men for the active duties of business in the shortest time possible and at the least expense. For "COLLEGE REVIEW," giving information, call at the College, or address E. P. HEALD, President.

au11 3m

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

ja27-tf between California and Pine.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

LIST OF

Late Publications.

Armadale—a Novel—by Wilkie Collins.
The Dove in the Eagle's Nest, by the author of The Heir of Redclyffe.
Shakspeare's Delineations of Insanity, Imbecility and Suicide, by A. O. Kellogg, M. D.
595 Pulpit Pungencies, with a Table of Contents.
Footlight Flashes, by William Davidge, Comedian.
Hidden Depths—12mo.
Lectures on the Study of History; delivered in Oxford, 1859-61—by Goldwin Smith, M. A.
Kate Marstone; or, Happy Hearts Make Happy Homes.
The Mule Singer—a Novel—by Anna Cora Ritchie (Mowatt.)
Poetical Works of Thomas Buchanan Read—New Edition—3 vols.
Devotions of the Ages; or, Collects, Texts, and Lyrics, illustrative of the Christian Year, by Rev. N. G. Allen.
The Adventures of Captain Castagnette (illustrated, by Gustave Dore.
The Mormon Prophet and His Harem, by Mrs. C. V. Waite.
History of the Gipsies, by Walter Simson.
Josh Billings—His Book.
Beyminstre—a Novel—by the author of The Silent Woman, King'a Cope, Mr. Warenne, etc.
Garden Vegetables, and How to Cultivate Them, by Fearing Burr, Jr. New Edition.
Brief Biographical Dictionary, compiled and arranged by Rev. Chas Hole and W. A. Wheeler.
Poems of Thomas Hood—New Edition, 12mo.
The Maiden and Married Life of Mary Powell.
The Deun's English, by G. Washington Moon.
President Lincoln Self-portrayed, by John M. Ludlow.
Temperance Recollections—an Autobiography—by John Marsh, D. D.
The Masquerade and other Poems, by John G. Saxe.
Life of Benjamin Silliman, by Geo. P. Fisher, 2 vols
Betsy Jane Ward—Better ½ to Artemus.
The Person of Christ, by Philip Schaff, D. D.
Asiatic Cholera, by R. Nelson, M. D.
The Laws of Short Whist, by J. L. Baldwin.
Speeches of Lord Macaulay—a New Edition, 2 vols.
Treasury of Bible Knowledge, by John Ayre.
Martineau's Essays—Philosophical and Theological.
Memoirs of the Right Hon. Richard B. Sheridan, by Thomas Moore.
Gilbert Rugge—a Novel—by the author of A First Friendship.
Short Sermons to Newsboys, by Chas. Loring Brace.
Stanley's History of the Jewish Church, 2d series.
Garden Flowers: How to Cultivate Them, by E. S Rand, Jr.
Adrift in Dixie, by Edmund Kirke.
The Philosophy of Art, by H. Taine.
Life of Emanuel Swedenborg, by William White.
Baked Meats of the Funeral, by Private Miles O'Reilly.
Recommended to Mercy—a Novel—by the author of Taken Upon Trust, Zoe's Band, etc.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street.
jy14 San Francisco

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that in pursuance of the order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California, made on the 26th day of July, 1866, in the matter of the estate of Andrew Robeson, deceased, the undersigned, administrator with the will annexed of said deceased, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, in two parcels, subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Tuesday, the 11th day of September, 1866, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the counting room of Aldrich & Merrill, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county, all the right, title and interest of said Andrew Robeson, deceased, at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has, by operation of law or otherwise acquired, other than or in addition to that of said deceased at the time of his death, in and to all those certain two lots of land situated in said city and county and described as follows, viz: 1st. Commencing at a point on the west side of Mason street, 77 1 2 feet northerly from the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets; thence running northerly along said side of Mason street 60 feet; thence at a right angle westerly 77 1 2 feet; thence at a right angle southerly 60 feet; and thence at a right angle easterly 77 1-2 feet to the point of beginning. 2d. Commencing at a point on the north line of Ellis street, 117 1 2 feet westerly from the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets; running thence westerly along Ellis street 20 feet; thence at a right angle northerly 60 feet; thence at a right angle easterly 20 feet; and thence at a right angle southerly 60 feet to the place of beginning. And said administrator will receive offers or bids for said property from this date till said 11th day of September, 1866, at 12 o'clock noon, at said counting room of Aldrich & Merrill, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county. EDWARD F. STONE, Administrator with the will annexed of Andrew Robeson, deceased.
San Francisco, August 11th, 1866. au11 td

PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors.

It appearing to this court from the petition this day presented and filed by Robert L. Harris, the guardian of the estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors, praying for an order of sale of the real estate belonging to his said wards, that it would be beneficial to the said wards that such real estate should be sold at private sale.

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said wards, and all persons interested in said estate, appear before this court at the court room thereof, at the court house, in the city and county of San Francisco, on Monday the 10th day of September, 1866, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least three successive weeks before said hearing of said petition in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

Dated August 10th, A. D., 1866. M. C. BLAKE,
au11 4t Probate Judge.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,

Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE Proprietor

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
mar24 6m Main street, Petaluma.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S

SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AUCTIONEERS.
Olney & Co., removed to 418 Montgomery street.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.
S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 614 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.
S. W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mil)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearay.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Cogbill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyce & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansoma, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N E cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pin

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalvo, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S. Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. ' Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kobler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.
T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street, - - - - Petaluma.
mar24 6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 13. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 18, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE; 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

PROSE.

On the Sagacity of the Newfoundland.—By "Bret."
Podgerings by the Way.
Our Club.—No. 3.—By "Philip."
The Board of Supervisors, and Slaughter-Houses.
Amusements.
Our Book-Table.
Brilliants for the Ball-room.
Literary Notes.
The Iron Shroud.—By William Mudford.
A Very Hard Case.
Obituary Absurdities.
Capri and Capriotes.—No. 2.
Lord Nelson's Protege.
Strange Hallucinations.

POETRY:

Vespers.—By Charles Warren Stoddard.

[For the Californian.]

PODGERINGS BY THE WAY.

No. 4.

"TWILIGHT dews were falling fast" (that's not quite original,) when I left my perch with the driver and got inside the coach. It was too dark to see who and what manner of man occupied a portion of the back seat, but I thought I could discern an odor of dried fish and stale opium smoke: however, one should not be over-nice when travelling. I dropped asleep, but was roused at the next station by the entrance of another passenger—a lady (every female is called a lady in this country. She of course claimed a back seat. I dropped off in another doze, but after a while was awakened with an oppressed feeling, and discovered that my friends on either side had also fallen asleep and had inclined to the centre, making me a sort of leaning post to support them, and I was carrying weight on both shoulders. The odor of fish and opium was stronger, and on the left there was a suspicion of rancid castor oil not at all agreeable. I could not stand this combination of odors, and very quietly crawled over on to the middle seat, thereby bringing the two heads of my right and left hand neighbors together; and we jogged on, the rattle of the coach being occasionally drowned by the chorus of snores that arose from the four other occupants of the coach. After a time, the moon, having risen, shone in the coach, and I turned around to see who and what my late neighbors were, and discovered a Spanish woman and a John Chinaman with their heads in contact in the most affectionate manner, still asleep: and as the coach jolted and rolled they were rubbing noses together after the most approved manner of some of the Eastern tribes who indulge that time-honored custom by way of salutation and greeting. The woman's head was lying on the Chinaman's shoulder in the most confiding manner; and John, doubtless dreaming of his native land, occasionally muttered to himself, and, for what I know, was giving expression to some most endearing sentiments in the choicest broken China; when suddenly the coach gave an extra bump and roused the lady from her slumbers, and, with a sleepy yawn, she awoke and discovered her close proximity to the Celestial gentleman, whose pigtail had entwined itself about her neck. She started back, and, as she did so, drew the coil of the pigtail closer. She probably thought it some venemous serpent, for she screamed and sprang up, giving an awful jerk on John's highly-ornamental appendage that made him see stars. He started up into an upright position, thus tightening the strain on it and the lady's neck. She, discovering the tie that bound her to Chinadom, commenced forthwith a vigorous application of her nails to John's head and face, and he, in turn, set up a Chinese yell, rousing the other two passengers who, not knowing the cause of the row, fancied John had been taking liberties with the lady, and were going to chuck him out of the coach window, but I interfered, and, after some difficulty, extricated the tangled tie that bound two unwilling heads together. Poor John's nose was bleeding from an incision of the lady's nails, and as he evidently was disgusted with that evidence of her partiality, got out at the next station and crawled on deck, muttering to himself, "Melliky woman muchy frightee; no shabbee, no shabbee."

At two o'clock we arrived at Virginia City, and I for one was glad enough to be released from my oscillating prison, and register my name at the "Hotel de Todos Nationale" for a bed. A gentleman of semi-Spanish extraction, lighting a candle, and taking my carpet-bag, commenced the ascent. It was long and wearying, and what I supposed was the last floor proved to be only the second, owing to the fact that in Virginia City the houses, being built on the steep side hill, are about six stories at one end on one street, and three on the other. I reached the roof after some further vigorous efforts, and was shown my room. I had to call my conductor out to get myself in, and then had to get on the bed to shut the door, and put my carpet-sack under the bed to get a chance to shut one-half the window. I went to bed with great calculations on a sound sleep the rest of the night. I had scarcely closed my eyes when a pair of cats commenced an a-mews-ing argument outside my window, on the subject of opera, and proceed to try their voices. Madame Pussilini Catilini, from the conservatoire of a near neighbor, and La Scala, of Milan' a half, or less, gave a cavatini from Tin Roofi, to which Signorina Meaiu responded. Both being in excellent voice, they luxuriated in a duet from Nacubudoh-no-sir—"No sleep for you." I have an ear for music, and appreciate it on all occasions, and on this I think I did fully. I sacrificed half a bottle of Florida water on my own account, and the soap dish on account of the house, to the cause. As the concert was within a few feet of my window, the shots told, and I am very positive that a couple of cats had urgent business elsewhere. I retired again, but had barely closed my eyes a second time when I heard a thump, thump of small heels along the hall: there was a skuff, skuff, skuffing sound accompanying, that leant a strong suspicion of crinoline. The sounds ceased at my door, and a gentle knock followed. I responded, "Hello!" A voice exclaimed, "Jim, is that you?" I replied, "Yes, it isn't." There was evidently a mistake somewhere—at any rate, I was not the man (her husband, of course) that she was looking for. Several times later; I heard similar heels and similar knockings around that floor, and came to the conclusion that the spirit-rappers were abroad. And I can't say much for the habits of the people of Virginia City, for the lodgers in our hotel came dropping along very promiscuously until daylight. I should not take a sick man in quest of peace and quietness to the Hotel de Todos Nationale; but it is pretty well understood that the hotels at Virginia are of that character known to "run all night."

Virginia City is a place that I enjoy hugely—that is, there is one period of my frequent visits there which I particularly enjoy—that of departure; and the earlier that little event takes place the better it pleases me. A shadow has fallen over that place; times have changed. Two years ago, it was a dangerous enterprize for a man to attempt to cross the street—for the chances were he would get a nip, or a pair of mule heels in his side. The streets were then crowded with six and ten-mule teams, and immense ore and freight wagons blocked the way on the sidewalks, a moving mass of honest and dishonest miners elbowed each other, talked "feet," smoked cigars, and invited each other frequently to "irrigate." But, alas! the streets are quiet enough now, and there's no danger of getting kicked by anything. There is scarcely a team passing as often as once in ten minutes. A few people lean against the awning posts, listlessly whittling and waiting for something to turn up. Now and then a mining superintendent, with a fine pair of horses and a natty Kimball buggy, dashes up to Wells-Fargo's, lands a bar or two of bullion, and accepts an invitation to "moisten" after his exertion. On the arrival and departure of the stage, there is a little bustle of excitement, but it dies away and quiet reigns again. There is a beggarly account of empty houses, "To Let," but they appear to be let alone, and many of them can be had without asking. The city was built in a hurry, and they did not stop when it was as large as it should have been, but kept on and built it considerably larger. It has been hinted that the great staple, gold, has fallen off slightly. At any rate, something has fallen off, and the fall has had a serious effect on the general prosperity of the place, which has sympathized. There is an universal suspicion of shortness of cash, and it is particularly apparent in the deserted state of the saloons. Barkeepers have plenty of time to read the daily papers, and, to keep themselves in practice, throw dice with their friends for the drinks. They are willing to risk the loss for the possible gain—it being nearly all profit when they win, as they keep a decanter of water, colored, to duty as brandy for their own drinks: has the appearance without the cost. The palmy days for judges and lawyers are past, and his Honor may be seen polishing a post at the corner with other gentlemen out of business and out of the "needful." Woe to any non-resident who may have a case to be tried there now, for an outsider is considered fair game and to be victimized. Suits always go against such. A resident must be protected, of course. The law, as construed up there, is very much like some of the surveys of ranches—the lines are run zig-zag, and make many an elbow to take in fertile spots that have no business to be out in the cold. I have had several suits up there. If any one should ever go in my favor, I will take this all back.

Business, and especially mining, is conducted there now on economical and sound principles, and all surplus labor and "splurge" is dispensed with. They have gone earnestly to work, and are now reaping a large product from former wastage. Under this system a town of one-fourth the present size of Virginia City would be quite adequate to the requirements of its present volume of business. The product of the present time is by no means to be despised. A hundredth part of it would run THE CALIFORNIAN for some time, and that is saying considerable, for if a newspaper don't run away with money, what does?

As rough as Virginia City is, it can boast of a little circle of polished society and evidences of refinement not excelled in any city, even though it may not be apparent to the stranger passing through or spending a brief time there.

I had "done" the place, and I might add en passant that it had done me pretty thoroughly previously. I mounted the coach once more, and we rattled towards Carson. At Gold Hill we tarried a few moments to take on board a few hundred pounds of bullion, and at Silver City for a feeble mail bag: and thence on through the sage brush and alkali dust to Carson, that elegant site for a mint. (Peppermint would be more popular, with the addition of a little ice.)

I won't say anything against Carson City; I could not do the subject justice. No man who arrives there periodically, just about daylight in the morning, after a hard night's ride, can take a reasonable view of the place—and humanity, before coffee, is not in its best mood for fair criticism. I have taken breakfasts there that sum up the sum total of human endurance. I have breakfasted there and lived; many people have breakfasted there and didn't. I don't know what I ate. Nobody probably was ever able to give a physician any reliable clue to the disease he was after. I always went to the Ormsby House until I went to the National, and then I wished I had stuck to the Ormsby. It was not which was the best, but which was the least worst. Carson is famous for fleas, dogs, and dust. No money was ever seen there, —no money ever went there; and that is probably the reason why they are going to have a mint—that will bring there the amount necessary to build the institution; there never will be any more. The officers of this Government workhouse will draw their salaries with great fidelity, and that will be all the labor imposed upon them. There will be rotation in office, for they will board at the Ormsby House. My friend Rice lives there, and performs the duty of stage agent—Wells-Fargo's agent—and everybody's agent; but then he is insured. If Wells, Fargo & Co. do not give him a handsome pension for the alkali services he has rendered them for years, they are an ungrateful, unappreciative institution. Rice should be brevetted, and voted a cool spot and a house and lot, for he has earned it all. He has lived in Carson City for several years—but, as I remarked before, I won't say anything against Carson, for, like "San Andreas," it is a very nice place.

As the driver sung out "All aboard!" I mounted the deck seat again, and as we rattled out of Carson I shed an alkali tear of regret that my lot should not have been cast there, for a man who has dwelt for even a brief period in that classic city has nothing to fear in that dim undefined future that all dread.

To the music of Concord axles we skirt along the valley; creep up the six-mile grade; down the broad, smooth grade at Slippery Ford: over the rock-hewn road; down the slope with the roar of the American river in our ears and the spray in our faces; past the Palisades; past the Pyramid Rocks, and rattle up to the cheerful wayside home of Charley Watson, at Strawberry. I'll get down, for I am hungry and dusty.

PODGERS.

THE IRON SHROUD.

BY WILLIAM MUDFORD.

THE castle of the Prince of Tolfi was built on the summit of the towering and precipitous rock of Scylla, and commanded a magnificent view of Sicily in all its grandeur. Here, during the wars of the middle ages, when the fertile plains of Italy were devastated by hostile factions, those prisoners were confined, for whose ransom a costly price was demanded. Here, too, in a dungeon excavated deep in the solid rock, the miserable victim was immured, whom revenge pursued—the dark, fierce, and unpitying revenge of an Italian heart.

Vivenzio—the noble and the generous, the fearless in battle, and the pride of Naples in her sunny hours of peace—the young, the brave, the proud Vivenzio—fell beneath this subtle and remorseless spirit. He was the prisoner of Tolfi; and he languished in that rock-encircled dungeon, which stood alone, and whose portals never opened twice upon a living captive.

It had the semblance of a vast cage; for the roof and floor and sides were of iron, solidly wrought, and spaciously constructed. High above there ran a range of seven grated windows, guarded with massy bars of the same metal, which admitted light and air. Save these, and the tall folding doors beneath them, which occupied the centre, no chink or chasm or projection broke the smooth black surface of the walls. An iron bedstead, littered with straw, stood in one corner, and, beside it, a vessel with water, and a coarse dish filled with coarser food.

Even the intrepid soul of Vivenzio shrunk with dismay as he entered this abode, and heard the ponderous doors triple-locked by the silent ruffians who conducted him to it. Their silence seemed prophetic of his fate, of the living grave that had been prepared for him. His menaces and his entreaties, his indignant appeals for justice, and his impatient questioning of their intentions were alike vain. They listened, but spoke not. Fit ministers of a crime that should have no tongue!

How dismal was the sound of their retiring steps! And as their faint echoes died along the winding passages, a fearful presage grew within him, that never more the face or voice or tread of man would greet his senses. He had seen human beings for the last time! And he had looked his last upon the bright sky and upon the smiling earth and upon a beautiful world he loved, and whose minion he had been! Here he was to end his life—a life he had just begun to revel in! And by what means? By secret poison? or by murderous assault? No; for then it had been needless to bring him thither. Famine, perhaps—a thousand deaths in one! It was terrible to think of it; but it was yet more terrible to picture long, long years in a captivity so appalling, a loneliness so dreary, thought, for want of fellowship, would lose itself in madness, or stagnate into idiocy.

He could not to escape, unless he had the power, with his bare hands, of rending asunder the solid iron walls of his prison. He could not hope for liberty from the relenting mercies of his enemy. His instant death, under any form of refined cruelty, was not the object of Tolfi; for he might have inflicted it, and he had not. It was too evident, therefore, he was reserved for some premeditated scheme of subtle vengeance; and what vengeance could transcend in fiendish malice, either the slow death of famine, or the still slower one of solitary incarceration till the last lingering spark of life expired, or till reason fled, and nothing should remain to perish but the brute functions of the body?

It was evening when Vivenzio entered his dungeon; and the approaching shades of night wrapped it in total darkness, as he paced up and down, revolving in his mind these horrible forebodings. No tolling bell from the castle, or from any neighboring church or convent, struck upon his ears to tell how the hours passed. Frequently he would stop and listen for some sound that might betoken the vicinity of man; but the solitude of the desert, the silence of the tomb, are not so still and deep as the oppressive desolation by which he was encompassed. His heart sunk within him, and he threw himself dejectedly upon his couch of straw. Here sleep gradually obliterated the consciousness of misery; and bland dreams wafted his delighted spirit to scenes which were once glowing realities for him, in whose ravishing illusions he soon lost the remembrance that he was Tolfi's prisoner.

When he awoke, it was daylight; but how long he had slept he knew not. It might be early morning, or it might be sultry noon; for he could measure time by no other note of its progress than light and darkness. He had been so happy in his sleep, amid friends who loved him, and the sweeter endearments of those who loved him as friends could not, that, in the first moments of waking, his startled mind seemed to admit the knowledge of his situation, as if it had burst upon it for the first time, fresh in all its appalling horrors. He gazed round with an air of doubt and amazement, and took up a handful of the straw upon which he lay, as though he would ask himself what it meant. But memory, too faithful to her office, soon unveiled the melancholy past, while reason shuddering at the task, flashed before his eyes the tremendous future. The contrast overpowered him. He remained for some time lamenting, like a truth, the bright visions that had vanished, and recoiling from the present, which clung to him as a poisoned garment.

When he grew more calm, he surveyed his gloomy dungeon. Alas! the stronger light of day only served to confirm what the gloomy indistinctness of the preceding evening had partially disclosed—the utter impossibility of escape. As however, his eyes wandered round and round, and from place to place, he noticed two circumstances which excited his surprise and curiosity. The one, he thought, might be fancy; but the other was positive. His pitcher of water, and the dish which contained his food, had been removed from his side while he slept, and now stood near the door. Were he even inclined to doubt this, by supposing he had mistaken the spot where he saw them over night, he could not; for the pitcher now in his dungeon was neither of the same form nor color as the other, while the food was changed for some other of better quality. He had been visited therefore during the night. But how had the person obtained entrance? Could he have slept so soundly that the unlocking and opening of those ponderous portals were effected without waking him? He would have said this was not possible, but that, in doing so, he must admit a greater difficulty, an entrance by other means, of which he was convinced there existed none. It was not intended, then, that he should be left to perish from hunger; but the secret and mysterious mode of supplying him with food seemed to indicate he was to have no opportunity of communicating with a human being.

The other circumstance which had attracted his notice was the disappearance, as he believed, of one of the seven grated windows that ran along the top of his prison. He felt confident that he had observed and counted them; for he was rather surprised at their number, and there was something peculiar in their form, as well as in the manner of their arrangement, at unequal distances. It was so much easier, however, to suppose he was mistaken, than that a portion of the solid iron, which formed the walls, could have escaped from its position, that he dismissed the thought from his mind.

Vivenzio partook of the food that was before him without apprehension. It might be poisoned: but if it were, he knew he could not escape death, should such be the design of Tolfi; and the quickest death would be the speediest relief.

The day passed wearily and gloomily, though not without a faint hope, that, by keeping watch at night, he might observe when the person came again to bring him food, which he supposed he would do in the same way as before. The mere thought of being approached by a living creature, and the opportunity it might present of learning the doom prepared or preparing for him, imparted some comfort. Besides, if he came alone, might he not in a furious onset overpower him? Or he might be accessible to pity, or the influences of such munificent rewards as he could bestow if once more at liberty, and master of himself. Say he were armed. The worst that could befall, if nor bribe nor prayers nor force prevailed, was a faithful blow, which, though dealt in a damned cause, might work a desired end. There was no chance so desperate but it looked lovely in Vivenzio's eyes, compared with the idea of being totally abandoned.

The night came, and Vivenzio watched. Morning came, and Vivenzio was confounded! He must have slumbered without knowing it. Sleep must have stolen over him when exhausted by fatigue; and, in that interval of feverish repose, he had been baffled: for there stood his replenished pitcher of water, and there his day's meal! Nor was this all. Casting his looks towards the windows of his dungeon, he counted but FIVE! Here was no deception; and he was now convinced there had been none the day before. But what did all this portend? Into what strange and mysterious den had he been cast? He gazed till his eyes ached; he could discover nothing to explain the mystery. That it was so, he knew. Why it was so, he racked his imagination in vain to conjecture. He examined the doors. A single circumstance convinced him they had not been opened.

A wisp of straw, which he had carelessly thrown against them the preceding day, as he paced to and fro, remained where he had cast it, though it must have been displaced by the slightest motion of either of the doors. This was evidence that could not be disputed; and it followed there must be some secret machinery in the walls by which a person could enter. He inspected them closely. They appeared to him one solid and compact mass of iron; or joined, if joined they were, with such nice art that no mark of division was perceptible. Again and again he surveyed them, and the floor and the roof, and that range of visionary windows, as he was now almost tempted to consider them: he could discover nothing, absolutely nothing, to relieve his doubts or satisfy his curiosity. Sometimes he fancied that altogether the dungeon had a more contracted appearance—that it looked smaller; but this he ascribed to fancy, and the impression naturally produced upon his mind by the undeniable disappearance of two of the windows.

With intense anxiety, Vivenzio looked forward to the return of night; and, as it approached, he resolved that no treacherous sleep should again betray him. Instead of seeking his bed of straw, he continued to walk up and down his dungeon till daylight, straining his eyes in every direction through the darkness, to watch for any appearances that might explain these mysteries. While thus engaged, and, as nearly as he could judge (by the time that afterwards elapsed before the morning came in,) about two o'clock, there was a slight tremulous motion of the floors. He stopped. The motion lasted nearly a minute; but it was so extremely gentle that he almost doubted whether it was real, or only imaginary. He listened. Not a sound could be heard. Presently, however, he felt a rush of cold air blow upon him; and, dashing towards the quarter whence it seemed to proceed, he stumbled over something which he judged to be the water ewer. The rush of cold air was no longer perceptible; and, as Vivenzio stretched out his hands, he found himself close to the walls. He remained motionless for a considerable time; but nothing occurred during the remainder of the night to excite his attention, though he continued to watch with unabated vigilance.

The first approaches of the morning were visible through the grated windows, breaking, with faint divisions of light, the darkness that still pervaded every other part, long before Vivenzio was enabled to distinguish any object in his dungeon. Instinctively and fearfully he turned his eyes, hot and inflamed with watching, towards them. There were FOUR! He could see only four: but it might be that some intervening object prevented the filth from becoming perceptible; and he waited impatiently to ascertain if it were so. As the light strengthened, however, and penetrated every corner of the cell, other objects of amazement struck his sight. On the ground lay the broken fragments of the pitcher he had used the day before, and, at a small distance from them, nearer to the wall, stood the one he had noticed the first night. It was filled with water, and beside it was his food. He was now certain, that, by some mechanical contrivance, an opening was obtained through the iron wall, and that through this opening the current of air had found entrance. But how noiseless! for, had a feather almost waved at the time, he must have heard it. Again he examined that part of the wall; but both to sight and touch it appeared one even and uniform surface, while to repeated and violent blows, there was no reverberating sound indicative of hollowness.

This perplexing mystery had for a time withdrawn his thoughts from the windows; but now, directing his eyes again towards them, he saw that the fifth had disappeared in the same manner as the preceding two, without the least distinguishable alteration of external appearances. The remaining four looked as the seven had originally looked; that is, occupying at irregular distances, the top of the wall on that side of the dungeon. The tall folding door, too, still seemed to stand beneath, in the centre of these four, as it had first stood in the centre of the seven. But he could no longer doubt, what, on the preceding day, he fancied might be the effect of visual deception. The dungeon was smaller. The roof had lowered; and the opposite ends had contracted the intermediate distance by a space equal, he thought, to that over which the three windows had extended. He was bewildered in vain imaginings to account for these things. Some frightful purpose, some devilish torture of mind or body, some unheard of device for producing exquisite misery, lurked, he was sure, in what had taken place.

Oppressed with this belief, and distracted more by the dreadful uncertainty of whatever fate impended than he could be dismayed, he thought, by the knowledge of the worst, he sat ruminating, hour after hour, yielding his fears in succession to every haggard fancy. At last a horrible suspicion flashed suddenly across his mind, and he started up with a frantic air. "Yes!" he exclaimed, looking wildly round his dungeon, and shuddering as he spoke; "yes, it must be so! I see it! I feel the maddening truth like scorching flames upon my brain! Eternal God! support me! it must be so! Yes, yes, that is to be my fate! You roof will descend! these walls will hem me round, and slowly, slowly, crush me in their iron arms! Lord God! look down upon me, and in mercy strike me with instant death! O fiend! O devil! is this your revenge?"

He dashed himself upon the ground in agony, tears burst from him, and the sweat stood in large drops upon his face: he sobbed aloud, he tore his hair, he rolled about like one suffering intolerable anguish of body, and would have bitten the iron floor beneath him; he breathed fearful curses upon Tolfi, and the next moment passionate prayers to Heaven for immediate death. Then the violence of his grief became exhausted; and he lay still, weeping as a child would weep.

The twilight of departing day shed its gloom around him ere he arose from that posture of utter and hopeless sorrow. He had taken no food. Not one drop of water had cooled the fever of his parched lips. Sleep had not visited his eyes for six and thirty hours. He was faint with hunger; weary with watching, and with the excess of his emotions. He tasted of his food; he drank with avidity of the water, and reeling, lik a drunken man, to his straw, cast himself upon it to brood again over the appalling image that had fastened itself upon his almost frenzied thoughts.

He slept; but his slumbers were not tranquil. He resisted, as long as he could, their approach; and when, at last, enfeebled nature yielded to their influence, he found no oblivion from his cares. Terrible dreams haunted him; ghastly visions harrowed up his imagination; he shouted and screamed, as if he already felt the dungeon's ponderous roof descending on him; he breathed hard and thick, as though writhing between its iron walls. Then would he spring up, stare wildly about him, stretch forth his hands to be sure he yet had space enough to live, and, muttering some incoherent words, sink down again, to pass through the same fierce vicissitudes of delirious sleep.

The morning of the fourth day dawned upon Vivenzio; but it was high noon before his mind shook off its stupor, or he awoke to a full consciousness of his situation. And what a fixed energy of despair sat upon his pale features as he cast his eyes upwards, and gazed upon the THREE windows that now alone remained! The three! there were no more! and they seemed to number his own allotted days. Slowly and calmly he next surveyed the top and sides, and comprehended all the meaning of the diminished height of the former, as well as of the gradual approximation of the latter. The contracted dimensions of his mysterious prison were now too gross and palpable to be the juggle of his heated imagination.

Still lost in wonder at the means, Vivenzio could put no cheat upon his reason as to the end. By what horrible ingenuity it was contrived, that walls and roofs and windows should thus silently and imperceptibly, without noise and without motion, almost fold, as it were, within each other, he knew not. He only knew they did so; and he vainly strove to rack the miserable wretch who might be immured there with anticipation merely of a fate from which, in the crisis of his agony, he was to be reprieved.

Gladly would he have clung even to this possibility, if his heart would have let him; but he felt a dreadful assurance of its lallacy. And what matchless inhumanity it was to doom the sufferer to such lingering torments; to lead him day by day to so appalling a death, unsupported by the consolations of religion, unvisited by any human being, abandoned to himself, deserted of all, and denied even the sad privilege of knowing that his cruel destiny would awaken pity! Alone he was to perish! Alone he was to wait a slow-coming torture, whose most exquisite pangs would be inflicted by that very solitude and that tardy coming.

"It is not death I fear," he exclaimed, "but the death I must prepare for! Methinks, too, I could meet even that—all horrible and revolting as it is—if it might overtake me now. But where shall I find fortitude to tarry till it come? How can I outlive the three long days and nights I have to live? There is no power within me to bid the hideous spectre hence; none to make it familiar to my thoughts, or myself patient of its errand. My thoughts rather will flee from me, and I grow mad in looking at it. Oh! for a deep sleep to fall upon me! That so, in death's likeness, I might embrace death itself, and drink no more of the cup that is presented to me than my fainting spirit has already tasted!"

In the midst of these lamentations, Vivenzio noticed that his accustomed meal, with the pitcher of water, had been conveyed, as before, into his dungeon. But this circumstance no longer excited his surprise. His mind was overwhelmed with others of a far greater magnitude. It suggested, however, a feeble hope of deliverance; and there is no hope so feeble as not to yield some support to a heart bending under despair. He resolved to watch, during the ensuing night, for the signs he had before observed, and, should he again feel the gentle, tremulous motion of the floor, or the current of air, to seize that moment for giving audible expression to his misery. Some person must be near him, and within reach of his voice, at the instant when his food was supplied; some one, perhaps, susceptible of pity. Or, if not, to be told even that his apprehensions were just, and that his fate was to be what he foreboded, would be preferable to a suspense which hung upon the possibility of his worst fears being visionary.

The night came; and, as the hour approached when Vivenzio imagined he might expect the signs, he stood fixed and silent as a statue. He feared to breathe, almost, lest he might lose any sound which would warn him of their coming. While thus listening, with every faculty of mind and body strained to an agony of attention, it occurred to him he should be more sensible of the motion, probably, if he stretched himself along the iron floor. He accordingly laid himself softly down, and had not been long in that position when—yes—he was certain of it—the floor moved under him! He sprang up, and, in a voice suffocated nearly with emotion, called aloud. He paused—the motion ceased—he felt no stream of air—all was hushed—no voice answered to his—he burst into tears; and, as he sunk to the ground, in renewed anguish, exclaimed, "Oh, my God! my God! You alone have power to save me now, or strengthen me for the trial you permit."

Another morning dawned upon the wretched captive, and the fatal index of his doom met his eyes. Two windows! and two days—and all would be over! Fresh food—fresh water! The mysterious visit had been paid, though he had implored it in vain. But how awfully was his prayer answered in what he now saw! The roof of the dungeon was within a foot of his head. The two ends were so near that in six paces he trod the space between them. Vivenzio shuddered as he gazed, and as his steps traversed the narrowed area; but his feelings no longer vented themselves in frantic wailings. With folded arms, and clenched teeth; with eyes that were bloodshot from much watching, and fixed with a vacant glare upon the ground; with a hard, quick breathing, and a hurried walk—he strode backwards and forwards in silent musing for several hours. What mind shall conceive, what tongue utter, or what pen describe, the dark and terrible character of his thoughts? Like the fate that moulded them, they had no similitude in the wide range of this world's agony for man. Suddenly he stopped, and his eyes were riveted upon that part of the wall which was over his bed of straw. Words are inscribed there! A human language, traced by a human hand! He rushes towards them; but his blood freezes as he reads:

"I, Ludovico Sforza, tempted by the gold of the Prince of Tolfi, spent three years in contriving and executing this accursed triumph of my art. When it was completed, the perfidious Tolfi, more devil than man, who conducted me hither one morning to be witness, as he said, of its perfection, doomed me to be the first victim of my own pernicious skill; lest, as he declared, I should divulge the secret, or repeat the effort of my ingenuity. May God pardon him, as I hope he will me, that ministered to his unhallowed purpose. Miserable wretch, whoever thou art, that readest these lines, fall on thy knees, and invoke, as I have done, His sustaining mercy who alone can nerve thee to meet the vengeance of Tolfi, armed with this tremendous engine which, in a few hours, must crush you, as it will the needy wretch who made it."

A deep groan burst from Vivenzio. He stood, like one transfixed, with dilated eyes, expanded nostrils, and quivering lips, gazing at this fatal inscription. It was as if a voice from the sepulchre had sounded in his ears, "Prepare." Hope forsook him. There was his sentence, recorded in those dismal words. The future stood unveiled before him, ghastly and appalling. His brain already feels the descending horror; his bones seem to crack and crumble in the mighty grasp of the iron walls! Unknowing what it is he does, he fumbles in his garment for some weapon of self-destruction. He clenches his throat in his convulsive gripe, as though he would strangle himself at once. He stares upon the walls; and his warring spirit demands, "Will they not anticipate their office if I dash my head against them?" An hysterical laugh chokes him as he exclaims, "Why should I? He was but a man who died first in their fierce embrace; and I should be less than man not to do as much!"

The evening sun was descending, and Vivenzio beheld its golden beams streaming through one of the windows. What a thrill of joy shot through his soul at the sight! It was a precious link that united him, for the moment, with the world beyond. There was ecstasy in the thought.

As he gazed, long and earnestly, it seemed as if the windows had lowered sufficiently for him to reach them. With one bound, he was beneath them; with one wild spring he clung to the bars. Whether it was so contrived, purposely to madden with delight the wretch who looked, he knew not; but, at the extremity of a long vista cut through the solid rocks, the ocean, the sky, the setting sun, olive groves, shady walks, and, in the farthest distance, delicious glimpses of magnificent Sicily, burst upon his sight. How exquisite was the cool breeze as it swept across his cheek, loaded with fragrance! He inhaled it as though it were the breath of continued life. And there was a freshness in the landscape, and in the rippling of the calm, green sea, that fell upon his withering heart like dew upon the parched earth. How he gazed, and panted, and still clung to his hold! sometimes hanging by one hand, sometimes by the other, and then grasping the bars with both, as loath to quit the smiling paradise outstretched before him; till, exhausted, and his hands swollen and benumbed, he dropped helpless down, and lay stunned for a considerable time by the fall.

When he recovered, the glorious vision had vanished. He was in darkness. He doubted whether it was not a dream that had passed before his sleeping fancy; but gradually his scattered thoughts returned, and with them came remembrance. Yes! he had looked once again upon the gorgeous splendor of nature! Once again his eyes had trembled beneath their veiled lids at the sun's radiance, and sought repose in the soft verdure of the olive tree or the gentle swell of undulating waves. Oh, that he were a mariner, exposed upon those waves to the worst fury of storm and tempest, or a very wretch, loathsome with disease, plague stricken, and his body one leprous contagion from crown to sole, hunted forth to gasp out the remnant of infectious life beneath those verdant trees, so he might shun the destiny upon whose edge he tottered!

Vain thoughts like these would steal over his mind from time to time, in spite of himself; but they scarcely moved it from that stupor into which it had sunk, and which kept him, during the whole night, like one who had been drugged with opium. He was equally insensible to the calls of hunger and of thirst, though the third day was now commencing since even a drop of water had passed his lips. He remained on the ground, sometimes sitting, sometimes lying; at intervals sleeping heavily, and, when not sleeping, silently brooding over what was to come, or talking aloud, in disordered speech, of his wrongs, of his friends, of his home, and of those he loved, with a confused mingling of all.

In this pitiable condition, the sixth and last morning dawned upon Vivenzio, if dawn it might be called—the dim, obscure light which faintly struggled through the ONE solitary window of his dungeon. He could hardly be said to notice the melancholy token. And yet he did notice it; for, as he raised his eyes and saw the portentous sign, there was a slight convulsive distortion of his countenance. But what did attract his notice, and at the sight of which his agitation was excessive, was the change the iron bed had undergone. It was a bed no longer. It stood before him, the visible semblance of a funeral couch or bier! When he beheld this, he started from the ground; and in raising himself, suddenly struck his head against the roof, which was now so low that he could no longer stand upright. "God's will be done!" was all he said, as he crouched his body, and placed his hand upon the bier; for such it was. The iron bedstead had been so contrived, by the mechanical art of Ludovico Sforza, that, as the advancing walls came in contact with its head and feet, a pressure was produced upon concealed springs, which, when made to play, set in motion a very simple though ingeniously contrived machinery that effected the transformation. The object was, of course, to heighten, in the closing scene of this horrible drama, all the feelings of despair and anguish which the preceding one had aroused. For the same reason, the last window was so made as to admit only a shadowy kind of gloom rather than light, that the wretched captive might be surrounded, as it were, with every seeming preparation for approaching death.

Vivenzio seated himself on his bier. Then he knelt and prayed fervently; and sometimes tears would gush from him. The air seemed thick, and he breathed with difficulty; or it might be that he fancied it was so, from the hot and narrow limits of his dungeon, which were now so diminished that he could neither stand up nor lie down at his full length. But his wasted spirits and oppressed mind no longer struggled with him. He was past hope, and fear shook him no more. Happy if thus revenge had struck its final blow; for he would have fallen beneath it almost unconscious of a pang. But such a lethargy of the soul, after such an excitement of its fiercest passions, had entered into the diabolical calculations of Tolfi: and the fell artificer of his designs had imagined a counteracting device.

The tolling of an enormous bell struck upon the ears of Vivenzio! He started. It beat but once. The sound was so close and stunning that it seemed to shatter his very brain, while it echoed through the rocky passages like reverberating peals of thunder. This was followed by a sudden crash of the roof and walls, as if they were about to fall upon and close around him at once. Vivenzio screamed, and instinctively spread forth his arms, as though he had a giant's strength to hold them back. They had moved nearer to him, and were now motionless. Vivenzio looked up, and saw the roof almost touching his head, even as he sat cowering beneath it; and he felt that a farther contraction of but a few inches only must commence the frightful operation. Roused as he had been, he now gasped for breath. His body shook violently; he was bent nearly double. His hands rested upon either wall, and his feet were drawn under him to avoid the pressure in front. Thus he remained for more than hour, when that deafening bell beat again, and again there came the crash of horrid death. But the concussion was now so great that it struck Vivenzio down. As he lay gathered up in lessened bulk, the bell beat loud and frequent; crash succeeded crash; and on and on came the mysterious engine of death, till Vivenzio's smothered groans were heard no more! He was horribly crushed by the ponderous roof and collapsing sides; and the flattened bier was his Iron Shroud.—Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine.

AN AFFECTIONATE BROTHER.—A horse recently jumped over the rail at a race-course and seriously hurt a young man. While he was lying on the grass, another young man uttered a piercing cry, and exclaimed, "My brother, my poor brother!" He flung himself on the prostrate form, from which he was at length kindly and gently raised, while the injured man was taken away to receive medical care. It afterward transpired that the affectionate creature who flung himself on the body of his brother, had done so to steal the gold watch and chain, and portmonaie.

THERE is an anecdote of Albert Smith dining with Barnum. The litterateur dined amply, nay convivially, but the cry as to dishes was, "Still they come;" and Albert, aghast—apparently—said, "My dear Barnum, I will take the rest out in money."

A CHURCH, as a memorial to Washington Irving, is being erected in Tarrytown, in the famed precincts of Sleepy Hollow.

CAPRI AND CAPRIOTES.

II.

STANDING on the height among the ruins of Tiberius's palace, the patriarch had looked out over the waters, and predicted for the morrow the finest weather that had ever been known in that region; but in spite of this prophecy the day dawned stormily, and at breakfast time we looked out doubtfully on waves lashed by driving rain. The entrance to the Blue Grotto, to visit which we had come to Capri, is by a semi-circular opening, some three feet in width and two feet in height, and just large enough to admit a small boat. One lies flat in the bottom of this, waits for the impulse of a beneficent wave, and is carried through the mouth of the cavern, and rescued from it in like manner by some receding billow. When the wind is in the wrong quarter, it is impossible to enter the grot at all; and we waited till nine o'clock for the storm to abate before we ventured forth. In the meantime, one of the Danish who, after assisting his companion to compel the boatmen to justice the night before, had stayed at Capri, and had risen early to see the grotto, returned from it, and we besieged him with a hundred questions concerning it. But he preserved the wise silence of the boy who goes in to see the six-legged calf, and comes out impervious to the curiosity of all the boys who are doubtful whether the monster is worth their money. Our Dane would merely say that it was now possible to visit the Blue Grotto; that he had seen it; that he was glad he had seen it. As to its blueness, messieurs—yes, it is blue. C'est a dire.

The ladies had been amusing themselves with a perusal of the hotel register, and the notes of admiration or disgust with which the different sojourners at the inn had filled it. As a rule, the English people found fault with the poor little hostelry and the French people praised it. Commander Joshing and Lieutenant Prattent. R.N., of the former nation, "were cheated by the donkey women, and thought themselves extremely fortunate to have escaped with their lives from the effects of Capri vintage. The landlord was an old Cossack." On the other hand, we read, "J. Cruttard, homme de lettres, a passé quinze jours ici, et n'a eu que des felicités du patron de cet hotel et de sa famille." Cheerful man of letters! His good-natured record will keep green a name little known to literature. Who are G. Bradshaw, Duke of New York, and Signori Jones and Andrews, hereditary princes of the United States? Their patrician names followed the titles of several English nobles in the register. But that which most interested the ladies in this record was the warning of a terrified British matron against any visit to the Blue Grotto except in the very calmest weather. The British matron penned her caution after an all but fatal experience. The ladies read it aloud to us, and announced that for themselves they would be contented with pictures of the Blue Grotto and our account of its marvels.

On the beach below the hotel lay the small boats of the guides to the Blue Grotto, and we descended to take one of them. The fixed rate is a franc for each person. The boatmen wanted five francs for each of us. We explained that although not indigenous to Capri, or even Italy, we were not of the succulent growth of travellers, and would not be eaten. We retired to our vantage ground on the heights. The guides called us to the beach again. They would take us for three francs apiece, or say six francs for both of us. We withdrew furious to the heights again, where we found honest Antonino, who did us the pleasure to yell to his fellow-scoundrels on the beach, "You had better take these signori for a just price. They are going to the syndic to complain of you." At which there arose a lamentable outcry among the boatmen, and they called with one voice for us to come down and go for a franc apiece. This fable teaches that common carriers are rogues in Naples as well as in New York; but that whereas you are helpless in their hands at home, you may bully them into rectitude in Italy, where they are afraid of the law.

We had scarcely left the landing of the hotel in the boat of the patriarch—for I need hardly say he was first and most rapacious of the plundering crew—when we found ourselves in very turbulent waters, in the face of mighty bluffs, rising inaccessible from the sea. Here and there, where their swarthy fronts were softened with a little verdure, goat-paths wound up and down among the rocks, and midway between the hotel and the grotto, in a sort of sheltered rock, we saw the Roman masonry of certain antique baths—baths of Augustus, says Valery; baths of Tiberius, say the Capriotes, zealous for the honor of their infamous hero. Howbeit, this was all we saw on the way to the Blue Grotto. Every moment the waves rose higher, emulous of the bluffs, which would not have afforded a foothold or a crag to cling to had we been upset and washed against them—and we began to talk of the immortality of the soul. As we neared the grotto, the patriarch entertained us with stories of the perilous adventures of people who insisted upon entering it in stormy weather—especially of a French painter who had been imprisoned in it four days, and kept alive only on rum, which the patriarch supplied him, swimming into the grotto with a bottle full at a time. "And behold us arrived, gentlemen!" said he, as he brought the boat skilfully around in front of the small semi-circular opening in the front of the lofty bluff. We lie flat on the bottom of the boat and complete the immersion of that part of our clothing which the driving torrents of rain had spared. The wave of destiny rises with us upon its breast—sinks, and we are inside of the Blue Grotto. Not so much blue as grey, however, and the water about the mouth of it green rather than azure. They say that on a sunny day both the water and the roof of the cavern are of the vividest cerulean tint—and I saw the grotto so represented in the windows of the paint-shops at Naples. But to my own experience it did not differ from other caves in color or form; there was the customary clamminess in the air; the sound of dropping water; the sense of dull and stupid solitude—a little relieved in this case by the mighty music of the waves breaking against the rocks outside. The grot is not great in extent, and the roof in the rear shelves gradually down to the water. Valery says that some remains of a gallery have caused the supposition that the grotto was once the scene of Tiberius's pleasures; and the Prussian painter who discovered the cave was led to seek it from something he had read of a staircase by which Barbarossa used to descend into a subterranean retreat from the town of Anacapri on the mountain-top. The slight fragment of ruin which we saw in one corner of the cave might be taken in confirmation of both theories; but the patriarch attributed the work to Barbarossa—being probably tired at last of hearing Tiberius so much talked about.

We returned, soaked and disappointed, to the hotel, where we found Antonino very doubtful about the possibility of getting back that day to Sorrento, and disposed, when poohpoohed out of the notion of bad weather, to revive the fiction of a prohibitory consul. He was staying in Capri at our expense, and the honest fellow would willingly have spent a fortnight there.

We summoned the landlord to settlement, who restrained all his household, assembled to present the account, from asking buonamano by a strong sense of previous contract. It was a deadly struggle with them, but they conquered themselves, and blessed us as we departed. The pretty muletress took leave of us on the beach, and we set sail for Sorrento, the ladies crouching in the bottom of the boat, taking their sea-sickness in silence. As we drew near the beautiful town, we saw how it lay on a plateau, at the foot of the mountains, but high above the sea. Antonino pointed out to us the house of Tasso, in which the novelist Cooper also had resided when in Sorrento—a white house not handsomer nor uglier than the rest, with a terrace looking out over the water. The bluffs are pierced by numerous arched caverns, as I said, giving shelter to the fishermen's boats, and here and there a devious stairway mounts to their crests. Up one of these we walked, noting how in the house above us the people, with that puerility usually mixed with the Italian love of beauty, had placed painted busts of terra-cotta in the windows to simulate persons looking out. There was nothing to blame in the breakfast we found ready at the Hotel Rispoli, and as for the grove of slender, graceful orange-trees in the midst of which it stood, and which had lavished the fruit in every direction on the ground, why I would willingly give for it all the currant bushes, with their promises of jelly and jam, on which I gaze at this moment.

Antonino attended us to our carriage when we went away. He had kept us all night at Capri, it is true, and he had brought us in at the end for a prodigious buonamano; yet I cannot escape the conviction that he parted from us with an unfulfilled purpose of greater plunder, and I have a compassion, which I here declare, for the strangers who fell next into his hands. He was good enough at the last moment to say that his name, "Silver-Eye," was a nickname given him according to a custom of the Sorrentines; and he made us a farewell bow that could not be bought in America for money.

At the station of Castellamare sat a curious cripple on the stones—a man with little, short, withered legs, and a pleasant face. He showed us the ticket office, and wanted nothing for the politeness. After we had been in the waiting-room a brief time, he came swinging himself in upon his hands, followed by another person, who, when the cripple planted himself finally and squarely on the ground, whipped out a tape from his pocket and took his measure for a suit of clothes, the cripple twirling and twisting himself about in every way for the tailor's convenience. Nobody was surprised or amused at the sight, and when his measure was thus publicly taken, the cripple gravely swung himself out as he had swung himself in.—The Nation.

Mr. Robert Buchanan has in preparation The Poet: an Essay, a Criticism, and a Biography. His volume of London Poems is to be published immediately.

Mr. Algernon Charles Swinburne's fourth volume is entitled Poems and Ballads. It will appear immediately.

Prof. Aulrecht, of Edinburgh, has just put to press a complete Glossary to the Rig Veda.

Mr. B. W. Proctor's Memoir of Charles Lamb is nearly ready to be published.

BRILLIANTS FOR THE BALL ROOM.

ORIGINAL OBSERVATION.—1. (To your partner)—Have you been out much this season?

2. You must have been very tired after your party the other night.

3. I suppose we shall meet at the Blanks'?

4. It's very hot, isn't it?

5. Almost impossible to dance.

Fickle Partner (to her favorite waltzer, with whom she is surreptitiously dancing for the third time)—Don't go near that corner: I was engaged for this, and he's looking for me.

Fickle Partner (taken at a disadvantage by her Jilted Partner, during an interval of breathing time)—Oh! I don't think this was our dance. I've got you down for the one before this. (Jilted one refers to his tablets, and Fickle Partner, by a stroke of unprincipled genius, turns the tables on him.) You never came to fetch me: ah! I shant forget.

[Shakes her head wickedly at Jilted One, who, being utterly staggered, sees the pair waltz away from him, without being able to get out a word.]

New Idea for the Refreshment Room—Will you take an ice?

Exclamations for Young Ladies on finding an open window (which they welcome like water in the Desert, or water-ice in the Dessert):

Oh! how delicious!

This is delightful!

So refreshing!

This is nice!

This is nice and cool.

Original Idea for a Mamma (to her daughter)—How imprudent, dear! Don't go into the draught.

Original Idea for Supper (in answer to the Gentleman's question, "What'll you take?")—Oh! (Considers, glances rapidly at the table, sees the same supper she's met at every other party, and in despair hits on a new idea.) Oh! Some chicken, please.

Cavalier (with persuasive sweetness)—And some tongue?

Last brilliant thing to be said in the cloak-room—Hallo! This isn't my coat; this is torn in the lining. Confound it, the fellow's gone off with my hat, too, a brand-new gibus; only two of the kind in London.

[Walks out savagely and determines to revenge himself on society by taking somebody else's hat and coat to-morrow night.]

Last of all (after feeling in coat pockets)—And (venial expletive.) My cigar-case was in the coat that he's gone off with.

[Expletive, with renewed resolutions about coats, hats and cigar-cases.]—Punch.

A BIG INCLINATION.—I was acquainted with a well-disposed young gentleman of large fortune, whose only fault was the habit of swearing—such a habit that he often declared that he would give half his fortune to get rid of it. This desire came to the ears of a Quaker, who thereupon had an interview with the young gentleman, and said:

"I can cure thee of that bad habit."

Whereupon the youth caught hold of the Quaker's hand, and gave it a hearty shake, and said:

"How can you perform this miracle?"

"I can tell thee. I have heard that thou art just my size; nobody will know thee; thou shalt come to my house, put on the cocked hat, the coat without buttons, the knee-breeches and the shoe-buckles, and thou wilt find that the strangeness of the dress will have such an effect on thee when thou art going to talk that it will restrain thee from swearing—as thou, perhaps, knowest, my friend, that we Quakers never swear."

The young man cheerfully assented to the proposal, and accompanied the Quaker to his house, where, after changing his clothes, he took his departure in the garb of a Quaker, and went on his way rejoicing. The period of the young gentleman's tour elapsed, and the Quaker, all anxiety, started to meet him. Having met him, he said:

"Well, friend, how hast thou got on?"

"Very well," replied the young man.

"Hast thou sworn so much with that dress on thee?"

The young man, rubbing the sleeves of his coat, replied: "Certainly not; but I felt a d--d inclination to lie!"

THE mysteries of Shakspeare's sonnets still provoke study and suggestion—they form a tantalizing and seductive secret, like perpetual motion and squaring the circle. Gerald Massey, the English poet, has just produced a volume of 600 pages on the theme. He divides them into the Southampton sonnets and into the Herbert sonnets, claiming that Shakspeare, friend of Lords Southampton and Pembroke (Herbert,) wrote them for these noblemen; not in his youth and poverty, but in the fullness of his fame, after he had become a prosperous gentlemen" at Stratford; that Southampton, who once gave him a thousand pounds (equal to five times the amount now,) had employed Shakspeare to put a series of real incidents into verse, to write a number of sonnets expressing Southampton's passion for his mistress, Elizabeth Vernon; others expressing Elizabeth Vernon's love for Southamptou; and others again expressing Elizabeth Vernon's jealousy of Lady Rich. This theory is very ingeniously worked out.

AMUSEMENTS.

AT Maguire's Opera House, the clever burlesque of Kenilworth, after having a run of over a week, was withdrawn on Wednesday, to make way for the Ladies' Club, a lively little comedietta, with some good points, and Orpheus and Eurydice, a mythological burlesque, with any amount of fine music and poor puns. Lady Don appeared to advantage in both pieces, and added to her popularity by the way in which she carried her parts through. Miss Kate Denin's part, "Eurydice," was given with charming grace and finish. Her able support to Lady Don is greatly adding to the success of that lady's engagement. Harry Courtaine, who re-appeared in the last named piece, is also another valuable addition to the support of Lady Don. Barry, too, though for many years kept under a cloud, has at last come come out—like a true California nugget, all the brighter for age—in singing parts; and there has been much controversy among the critics as to the proper classification of his voice, some claiming that it is a tenor, and others a bass. It will be remembered that the same doubt arose in regard to Morelli's voice, upon his first coming amongst us. Upon leaving the question to our opera critic, a very competent judge, to decide, he pronounced it a Barry-tone of the purest quality and the lowest range, and added that he "did not believe there was another like it on the Pacific coast," in which opinion we fully concur.

There have been regular Forrestonian audiences in attendance throughout the week, and Lady Don is proving to be one of the most attractive stars that ever played at the Opera House. The crowded house that she draws (with the aid of the excellent support given her) in the face of the counter attraction of Italian Opera four nights of the week, is sufficient proof of this.

This afternoon, Orpheus and Eurydice will be repeated. Black-Eyed Susan will be played, with Lady Don as "William," for the first time, to-night.

—

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.—Un Ballo in Maschera was presented to full houses on Friday and Saturday evenings of last week, in the same handsome style which has characterized all the efforts of the management, and with a cast well balanced, and adequate to the requirements of the music, though lacking the exceptional brilliancy of the distribution at the Academy of Music during the combination season a year ago. Signorina Brambilla, always good, did not find in the character of "Amelia" an opportunity for the display of her highest artistic power; and Signor Bianchi sang the music of "Ricardo" rather heavily, though correctly, and with good effect on the whole. Signor Mancusi, as "Renato," distinguished himself particularly in his opening address to "Ricardo" ("Alla vita.) and in the splendid imprecation ("E sei tu,") after the interview with "Amelia" in the third act, both of which he sang with great power and expression. The part of "Ulrica" was ably filled by Siguora Bianchi, while Signor Roncovieri and M. Charles appeared as "Samuel" and "Tom." The important part of the "Page" was assigned to Mlle. Tourny, who made quite a hit, considering her want of experience in such characters; her elegant costume displayed a fine figure to great advantage, and she acted with more spirit than we expected, while her singing of the music was very creditable, the favorite air ("Volta la terrea") in the first act meeting with a hearty encore. The chorus was the weakest point in this opera, the magnificent finale of the second act being given with a vagueness and want of power quite disappointing to the audience. The stage arrangements were excellent, as usual. The Second Artillery Band was a great addition to the masquerade scene, and we could only desire a little more precision in the alternating passages, and in the chorus with both band and orchestra.

Lucia di Lammermoor was given (for the first time to the subscribers) on Monday evening, and excited great enthusiasm, although the performance was not equal in merit to that of the same opera, when given on an off night some time before.

On Wednesday evening, Verdi's grand opera of Nabuco was produced, with a remarkably strong cast and great attention to stage effect, the Second Artillery Band being again employed, with a large corps of supernumeraries, an addition of two or three fine voices to the chorus, and of an oboe to the orchestra, which last was under the direction of Mr. Evans, in the absence of Mr. Herold. We have seldom heard in California a more satisfactory first performance of any opera. Signor Mancusi as "Nabuco," Signor Milleri as "Zaccaria," Signor Bianchi as "Abigaile," and Signor Bianchi as "Ismaele," were all in remarkably fine voice; Milleri especially distinguished himself in the splendid music of his part, which we think the most favorable in which he has yet appeared. Mancusi sang with great power and tenderness, especially in the scene of his overthrow and deprivation of reason by the god whom he has insulted, and in the interview with "Abigaile," when begging the life of his child. Signora Bianchi was very effective as the usurping queen, a part well suited to her voice and style. Mlle. Tourny labored under severe hoarseness, but was otherwise excellent in the character of "Fenena." The grand choruses of the opera were rendered with more power and correctness than any we remember during the season, and we are pleased to give credit where we have sometimes had to find great fault. The triumphal march in the first act (the poorest thing in the opera, by the way, and one of the "cheapest" marches we ever heard anywhere,) and the funeral march in the fourth act, were handsomely given by the Second Artillery Band.

Attila was produced last night for the second time, and constituted the twelfth and last performance of a season, which for variety and excellence has never seen its equal on this coast. Ernani, Trovatore, Traviata, Lucrezia, Norma, Attila, Faust, Un Ballo, Lucia, Nabuco—ten operas in twelve nights, at the rate of three nights a week, besides extra performances!

While we admire the pluck and activity of the management, we must nevertheless deprecate in the strongest terms the childish and inconsiderate craving for novelty which characterizes the great majority of opera goers in San Francisco—an appetite as totally different from real desire for musical culture as can well be imagined. If we are ever to have a permanent opera here, we must first effect a reform in our own taste, for no manager can go on for any length of time producing two or three new operas a week. It is not by the second, nor yet by the third performance, but only after frequent repetitions, that full justice can be done to the music and to the artists. And until audiences are not only willing but glad to study a fine opera by attentively listening, night after night, we shall never have nor deserve performances that approach perfection. As it is, the manager meets the public more than half way. We are promised for the second season of twelve nights, (commencing, probably, with Un Ballo, on Monday,) ten operas, including Crispino e la Comare, Ione, and La Juive, entirely new to us here, besides Don Giovanni, Il Barbiere di Siviglia, and others which have always proved attractive. Such variety should secure a handsome list of subscribers for the season.

Ernani will be given this evening as an extra performance.

—

DR. JORDAN'S ANATOMICAL MUSEUM should be visited by all strangers. Through no other means can the same information in regard to the organization of the human body be obtained.

FRIGHTFUL CATASTROPHE. — At 3 o'clock, yesterday morning, San Francisco was visited by one of those fearful occurrences which send a shudder of grief and horror through entire communities. A brick lodging-house, occupied by between twenty and thirty people, gave way at its foundations, and fell with a fearful crash, burying over twenty persons in its ruins. A general alarm was struck, and our volunteer fire department, prompt at the call, hurried to the scene of the disaster, and set to work to exhume the unfortunates thus prematurely buried. Huge beams were tossed on one side like straws, and men burrowed in the chaotic mass digging their way with their bare hands towards some spot to which the feeble moaning of a crushed and maugled fellow creature directed their efforts. All day long the work went on. Nine corpses were exhumed, and sixteen persons terribly crushed were at length rescued. The cause of the fall of the Summer Street Lodging House is stated to have originated in the weakening of its foundations by excavations made on the adjoining lot. Fears were entertained that the walls were insecure, and it was suggested to the owner that they should be shored. After an examination had been made, it was decided that this precaution was unnecessary; and this fatal mistake has resulted in the fearful loss of life which has so shocked the city. Had there been the slightest tremor in the earth yesterday morning, probably no blame would be attached to any one, and highly colored accounts of a "Fearful Earthquake in San Francisco," "Appalling Loss of Life," etc., would have been telegraphed to the world. There are still buildings in this city which need no earthquake to make them fall. At six o'clock, yesterday evening, the debris was nearly entirely cleared away, and no more bodies had been found.

THE Nation tells the following story: "A woman lives—we presume she still lives, for public virtue is decayed—somewhere in the eastern part of New York, who has just disgraced her city, her sex, and the universal race of man? A few days since the infant offspring of this creature fell headlong into the river from a pier. She could not, and the bystanders, if there were any, would not or could not, do anything to rescue the child, which struggled pitifully, and sank. Just then, a Newfoundland dog, which happened to be near at hand, plunged in and, after the little creature had disappeared beneath the surface, caught it by the hair, and then by the clothing, and at last succeeded in bringing it safe to its mother. That female discovered on the head of the infant two or three slight scratches. She at once set off to the nearest police station, and begged for an order authorizing her to have her benefactor killed. The policeman, or sergeant, or captain, or whoever was in authority, after some demurring, acceded to her request, and the dog was put to death that same day.

MANUFACTURE OF ANTIQUITIES AND TRICKS ON CURIOSITY HUNTERS AT ROME.—The correspondent of a London paper says: There exists at Rome secret workrooms of sculpture where the works manufactured are broken arms, heads of the gods, feet of satyrs, and broken torsi—of nobody. By means of a liquid there used, a color of the finest antiquity is communicated to the marbles. Scattered about the country are goatherds, who feed their flocks in the vicinity of ruins, and look out for foreigners. To these they speak incidentally of the treasures found by digging a few feet deep in such neighborhoods. The English, in particular, are the victims of such mystifications, and freely yield their money to the shepherds, who are agents to the General Artificial Ruin Association, and know well where to apply the pickaxe. They are careful, however, to spend much time and fruitless search before they come finally upon the treasure, for which the foreigner willingly pays. England is full of these antiquities of months' age. Nor do the amateur numismatists leave Rome with empty hands: for in that city are daily coined, without fear of the law, the money of Cæsar, Hadrian, Titus, Heliogahalus, and all the Antonies—filed, pinched, and corroded, to give the look of age. Paris may be said to have hitherto, by comparison with London, escaped this epidemy for the youthful antiquities of bronze and marble—but she is devoured by the forgers of middle age antiquities. It is notorious with what skill and impudence certain cabinet-makers manufacture chairs tables, and footstools of the fifteenth century, and how readily they find dupes. A young antiquary showed, lately, with great pride, to an artist, a friend of his, a very fine article of Gothic furniture, which he had just bought at great cost. "It is very fine," said his friend, after examination, "and it will last you long—for it is quite new."

AN AFFECTING INCIDENT.—In Frank Moore's Women of the War, we find the following touching story: One day, a well-dressed, intelligent woman called at the door of the diet kitchen, and asked to see one of the "Christian Commission" ladies. The surgeon had sent her to me to help her find her husband, and the directions were, "Bed one hundred and six, ward two." As we went up the steps, I noticed that she trembled with excitement. I inquired if she was tired, and she said "No," though she had slept none since leaving her home. We entered the ward, and the nurse pointed out the bed, but it was empty. I looked at her and saw she was deadly pale, and hastened to assure her that there was some mistake, as she would not have been sent from the office to look for her husband if he had been dead. While I had been talking to her, the ward-master had referred to his book, and told us her husband's leg had been amputated a few days before, and he was removed to ward four. Again her face was in a glow, and I could hardly keep her from rushing in unannounced. We could see his face from the door, and I thought him asleep. As I was holding her by the arm, and beckoning to one of the men to come to us, he opened his eyes full upon her. Such a scream as he gave! She bounded from me, and in a moment had her arms around his neck, both crying and laughing at the same time. I am sure neither of them uttered a whole sentence for fifteen minutes, so overpowering was the joy of their meeting. His recovery was almost miraculous, and one month from the time she came she started home with her husband. The wife remarked, as she bade us good-by, that she was not half so happy the morning she started on her bridal tour as she was now, taking her husband, though he left one leg in a Southern grave."

A FRENCH HERMIT.—It is very seldom that we have an opportunity of studying the life of an individual thrown entirely on his own resources, with no help from his fellow men, and living solely on the supplies furnished by nature. Six years ago, a man named Laurent was seized with the idea of going to live in a forest: he was then thirty-three years of age, and his mental and physical condition has recently attracted a good deal of attention in France, and especially in the department of the Var. It must not be supposed that this man is an idiot, or a morose-minded man, who has taken up his abode in a forest for the mere sake of getting away from his fellow-creatures; on the contrary, he converses cheerfully with any who come to see him, and is remarkable for his readiness to assist the people whose occupations lie in the forest. To those who argue with him on the life he leads, or who question him concerning the motives which induced him to adopt it, he is very communicative. To M. Mesnet he was remarkably chatty, and that gentleman has since made a report concerning him, from which it appears that, sociable as he is, he determined on living alone because men did not live in harmony together. He chooses to live by nature's work; that is to say, by contenting himself with the productions of nature without troubling himself to cultivate the ground. This kind of existence he calls the life of nature. He will accept nothing which could extenuate the misery to which he has condemned himself. He wishes to live a free life, free of cost. He will have no family; a wife, he says, weakens a man in various ways; he will have no money, because it is not the spontaneous production of nature.

A VERY HARD CASE.

ON the —th of November —8—, I quitted Liverpool for Boston in the Royal Mail Steamship Caledonia. As I stood on the wharf ready to embark, I saw a man whose face was not unknown to me moving to and fro with an uneasy air, asking to speak to the captain of the ship.

The history of this person, who was the possessor of a great fortune, and was very well known in Paris, is worth telling. It is both sinister and amusing.

"Captain! captain! where is the captain?" exclaimed M. X——.

The captain made his appearance.

"My trunks, Mr. Captain! where are my trunks?"

The captain replied in English, "I don't understand you."

M. X—— said, "Hang such a language! Why don't the English speak French? It would be far more convenient all round. Good heavens! if I only knew where my trunks were."

Seeing M. X——'s embarrassment, I offered to be his interpreter, although Lord Byron's language was not very familiar to me at that time.

M. X—— took me affectionately by the hand, saying, "What a service you do me, sir! I have eighteen trunks and—"

"You have eighteen trunks!" I exclaimed, with great astonishment.

"Yes, and they are not one too many when a man is going to the new world. Unfortunately, here I am about to sail and I cannot find my trunks high or low—although eighteen trunks are anything but like a needle in a haystack."

I made inquiries, and M. X——'s eighteen trunks were found and put on board the steamship. An hour afterwards we were at sea. The sea was smooth, but the wind was freshening, and threatened foul weather for the next day.

M. X—— said to me, in a disdainful tone, "I am disappointed in the ocean. It is wide, I grant you, and deep, but it is perfectly flat."

"It is not always flat; and perhaps you may regret to-morrow that it is so high."

"My opinion is, sir, the ocean has been overlauded to humiliate the rivers; which is all the greater injustice; for I should like to know what would become of the ocean if it were not for the rivers. I assure you, I have no private reasons for landing rivers to the ocean's detriment; but I do love justice, and I must say the ocean is very flat."

The wind freshened more and more. Presently the steamship labored as she ploughed her way through the waves, which at first were slight enough, but now began to swell and break with fury on the steamship's bow.

M. X—— began to look pale. I, too, began to feel the first effects of the vessel's pitching.

He said to me, "I don't know what is the matter with me to-day; but I don't feel well."

"Nor do I."

"And yet I ate a very hearty breakfast."

"So did I."

"But I don't think I shall dine with so good an appetite."

"Neither shall I."

"The trouble seems to be with the stomach."

"Ay."

"It is very odd."

"O no. It is perfectly natural."

"It strikes me the sea is not as flat as 't was."

"Are you less disappointed in it?"

"Yes, but more disappointed with myself. Why, how the steamship rolls! It is agreeable, and yet confoundedly disagreeable. Ah, mon Dieu! I begin to believe I am poisoned."

"O no; you are sea-sick as well as I."

"Do you think so?"

"I know it."

"Well, after all, I am glad I sailed."

A person at this moment called me by name. M X—— shook me affectionately by the hand, and asked what I was going to America for.

I replied, "To see the country, and give concerts."

"I lay you cannot guess the object of my voyage. I am going to New Orleans. I am in love."

"In love! That is something serious."

"Yes, I am in love with a woman I met at a ball given at the Hotel de Ville. I never saw anything like her—beautiful, tall, fascinating eyes, and something superb in all her motions, which fires the senses while at the same time it inspires respect. In fine, she is a marvel."

"Of course this marvel is an unmarried lady"

"No, she is married, and lives with her husband in New Orleans."

"But then—if she is married?"

"O, that 's no matter."

"What! that no obstacle?"

"I reckon upon transferring her husband to a lunatic asylum as a madman. As soon as his insanity is proved by decree of court, his wife will sue out a divorce. Then I shall marry her. To be prepared for this happy event I have filled a portion of my trunks with presents for my future wife."

"Really that is an excellent idea, and it proves you possess a most fruitful imagination."

"Love makes men ingenious. And I do so adore her, she is so beautiful! Come down into my cabin and let me read you some of the letters she has written me. You will see how elegant and impassioned is her style. 'Tis Heloise born a Creole, that is, indolence allied with the most exalted sentiments."

"You are a very happy man."

"Indeed I am a very, very happy man."

I wished to remain on deck, having great need of breathing fresh air; but M. X—— insisted so much and so earnestly I was obliged to yield. When M. X—— saw there were several beds in his cabin he became furious.

He said: "This is horrible. I have been swindled. What! I have paid four hundred and eighty dollars, and I shall not be alone in my cabin! And pray who is going to sleep with me?"

The butler replied, "An Englishman, sir!"

"An Englishman! And why do you stick an Englishman with me? Is it because I cannot speak English? No, I have never slept with an Englishman, and I never will sleep with an Englishman."

The captain was summoned. When M. X—— was convinced he could not have a cabin entirely to himself, he begged me to take the Englishman's place. The latter consented to this change of cabins. I became M. X——'s shipmate. He made me read two or three letters of his beautiful Creole every day. He had at least forty of them.

I had been some months in America, when, after landing in New Orleans, I met M. X——. He said to me: "Well, it was perfectly successful!"

"It? What?"

"Why, my scheme. I had the husband sent to an insane asylum; the divorce was decreed, and I married his wife."

M. X—— spoke with perfect seriousness. I was full of horror to think of so monstrous an act. I said to him: "You have resorted to abominable means to satisfy your love. Have you no remorse?"

"No, I have no remorse, but I have some regret at having succeeded so well. If it was not much more difficult to get a sane man out of a mad-house than to send him there, to declare a divorce null than to dissolve a marriage, and if it was not impossible to persuade an unmarried husband to remarry his old wife, long ago the poor husband would have resumed his original position and I mine."

"Has not your marriage proved a happy one?"

"Alas! I have discovered too late that happiness is not to be found in this world, either in the new or old world."

The fascinating Creole who had, with so much alacrity, taken measures to get her first husband adjudged a lunatic, made her second husband so unhappy by her incessant whims and caprices that M. X—— became really crazy. He was carried to an insane asylum upon good ground of reason, and he soon died there in a state of complete prostration."

As for the first husband, the pseudo-lunatic, he laughed heartily when he heard the tragic end of his successor to the favors of his ex-tender half. He obtained his liberty, and confessed he had cheerfully feigned lunacy, because he was afraid he would really become so if he did not get rid of his wife.

The greater lunatic of the two was not he who passed for the madman.

A FROG STORY.—One is half inclined to accept as indubitable what Elian tells us about the water snakes and frogs of Egypt. The former have, he informs us, a passionate liking for frogs—that is, for devouring and digesting them. No one knows this better than the frog, and, accordingly, when they meet in a pond, wonderful is the cunning that ensues. The water snake glides up as if intentionless of evil, but our other slimy friend is quite aware of the intentions of the passionless-looking snake. He makes for the nearest twig, seizes it, and carries it across his mouth, and then fearlessly approaches the hydra. The latter now makes at the frog with open jaws, but the twig across the frog's mouth is much wider than the jaws of the snake, and he can by no possibility swallow the much desired frog. The latter looks down his enemy's throat from the outside, holds fast to the protecting twig and laughs. The water snake tries again and again; he glides around his anticipated victim, but the frog always contrives to keep him in view, and the end of every attempt is that the foiled snake finds the bar carried by his anticipatory victim lying across his open jaws, and the frog once more laughing down his throat. The hydra at length gives it up in despair, and "froggy" plumping into a safe spot, where he knows his kindred to be assembled, tells his exciting tale, and raising a very din of croaking congratulations.

EXPERIMENTS have been made with steam as a disinfectant, in New York, recently. The results obtained are said to be highly satisfactory.

OBITUARY ABSURDITIES.

THE doggerel of the tomb stones has always afforded a curious food for laughter. The droll speeches of the dying, the last words of the ruling passion, have always been a feature of the jest-books. A pretty compilation might be made of funny funeral anecdotes. Likeness in things dissimilar and an audacious mixture of incongruous affairs make the salt of wit compound for blasphemy even with the pious, extenuate impropriety with the decent, give a savor to cosrseness, relieve us from the tension of a wearisome earnestness, and force a fleeting smile upon the saddest of faces. Horsce, if he had thought of it, might have affirmed the pleasure of laughing ex loco as well as in loco. We like to be agreeably irritated and find a fillip in the stroke of an untimely jest. To the least touch of nature our hearts respond. The polite father who apologized at the funeral of his child for bringing so small a body before a company so unexpectedly large, as if he would have provided a coffin six feet long, and not such a sesquipedalian one, had he foreseen the fulness of the house, was a true gentleman in his grief, and only morbidly nervous lest he should fail in some pious point of sepulture. The comic epitaphs, we may be sure, were soberly written, and an honest grief prompted the rudest inscription. When a babe only a span long is dead, the most prosaic are tempted into sending a versified advertisement of the death to the newspapers; and the first mother who placed flowers upon the tomb of her child was an unconscious poet, although these floral offerings have now become hackneyed and cheap. It is the sorrow of a great sorrow that it is so inarticulate and helpless and speechless, and often tearless; in our bereavement we strive, even in some pitiful way, to give words to our agony.

But it is not of these genuine and domestic demonstrations of regret that we propose particularly to speak. We have no jibes for real mourners; but those who are strictly professional and formal in their lugubrious calling, and manage the ceremonies as volunteers or for hire, should either feel assured of their competency for the service, or should keep a prudent silence. It was only the other day, in Boston, that a venerable gentleman, well known in the medical world, was buried, as full of honors as of years. The clergyman who officiated upon the occasion drew a lively picture of the doctor's public and private life; he portrayed his friend's strong religious nature, and went on to say: "With him it was Christ and his kingdom first. He believed in vegetable diet, and lived thirty years without tasting meat. He believed in calomel and used it through life. And now he has gone to be at rest in the Lord." Is not this an extraordinary admixture? When a man has ceased to eat altogether of earthly food, one does not readily see why his hostility to beef and his partiality for potatoes should be proclaimed over his coffin; nor is there any occult connection, that we are aware of, between salvation and salivation. In a church at least, and in a church this funeral oration was pronounced, the controversies of the bolus and the pellet, of heroic dosers and infinitesimal practitioners, of vegetarians and of sarcophagicians, might be permitted to subside. To have told the weeping assemblage that the deceased was five feet high, weighed one hundred and fifty pounds, and > "Wore not rights and lefts for shoes,

> But changed his every day," would hardly have been more untimely than this recital of his dietetic and medical faith.

We have ceased to look for any great oratorical displays in the House of Representatives, nor do we, indeed, think it a proper arena for frequent exhibitions of that character. Speech-making for the sake of making a speech should be intolerable in a body devoted to the business of legislation; because it is well enough known that speeches change no votes and neither affect nor expedite results. Ambitious attempts in that direction are usually either for the purpose of personal display in Washington or of personal aggrandizement at home. The death of a member is one of the few occasions upon which a somewhat elevated style of address may be allowed, because it is natural as the expression of personal friendship and regret, and the utterance of sentiment, however respectable, is not to be restricted by the technical formalities of practical discussion. But, if this license is to be permitted, the credit of the country and common sense require that it should be kept within the strictest limits of good taste. Death is a stern monitor, and the death of a public man is especially suggestive of the emptiness of all which we call honor, and the frivolity of mere display. We think that the late Mr. James Humphrey deserved to have something better said of him than this: "Shortly after midnight he raised himself upon his pillow, repeating the words, 'I faint! I faint!' and, without a struggle or a groan, the gentlemanly spirit of James Humphrey was wafted into the presence of his Maker." Without any coarseness of language to offend us, there is to our minds something painfully coarse in speaking of a departed spirit as "gentlemanly." We need hardly point out to the careful reader that "gentlemanly spirit" is an etymological solecism. A "man" is not a "spirit," and a "spirit" cannot be a "man," in the sense in which the word is here used

But this is a trifle. It is the moral solecism which particularly shocks and offends us. While the title of "gentleman" is certainly expressive of the most noble and praiseworthy qualities of character, it is reasonably to be hoped that all who are entitled to enter upon the eternal joys of paradise are also entitled to the appellation. No "spirit," we believe, is more "gentlemanly" than another. How shocking it would be to our ears to hear the assemblage of the saints spoken of, even by the vulgarest of Hard-shell Baptist preachers, as a company of "ladies and gentlemen!" These are words which have a conventional meaning, and we habitually use them to express something very different from the perfect purification and the complete glorification of the saints. The phrase "gentlemanly angel" would be not merely a contradiction in terms, but it would imply an extension to the next world of the frivolous distinctions of this, and an eternal materiality like that which disgusts us in the revelations of "seers" and of "mediums."

We offer these strictures chiefly in behalf of the violated laws of good taste. The subject, we know, is capable of a higher treatment; but this, perhaps, would not be strictly within our province. Death is certainly not to be regarded with a hopeless and cowardly dread, but still less is that tremendous change to be classed with the common and familiar incidents of our life; and he who cannot attain some degree of extraordinary solemnity in its contemplation, and a reasonable propriety of speech in commemorating the departed, for a thousand reasons had better remain silent.—The Nation.

A MODEST ENGLISHMAN WRITES HIMSELF UP.

THE enemy had received re-enforcements, and were keeping up a brisk cannonade. Two of their minié balls had passed through our limber-box, and one of them struck the breeching of a wheel horse. I had put in a shell with the fuse cut to explode in a second and a half just as the enemy started to charge our piece, and was about to fire, when I found that the linstock was extinguished. They were closing on us, which gave no time to relight it, and the colonel had just sent me orders to bring off the gun, as the enemy were outflanking us with an entire regiment. Determined to have one more shot, I ran to a shovelfull of fire, and, picking up a live coal in my fingers, stuck it in the touch-hole. The piece was discharged, and, rebounding, the wheel struck me on the hip, and knocked me heels over head down the hill. But it did terrible havoc also in front. The shell went crashing down the street, jammed full of the enemy, and, exploding in front of Mr. Watson's house, killed and wounded eleven men. I was enabled to save our piece.

* * * * * * *

Settling myself well in the saddle, I dashed in among the blue-jackets, cutting and thrusting right and left, and parrying a blow when necessary. They were from Michigan and Maryland, and for a while fought well. Observing an officer fighting like a Turk, and cheering his men on, I made for him. He was a man of my own size, wore a very heavy beard, and looked, I thought, very savage as he yelled out, "Come on, you damned rebel; I'll soon fix your flint." This promised good sport. I closed with him, making a powerful front cut, which he parried, and at the same instant made a right cut at my neck. By bringing my sabre down in time, my side caught the blow. Now I had the advantage. Quick as a flash I cut him across the cheek, inflicting a large gash, and he fell to the ground. I gave him in charge of one of my men, and then followed after my first ten, who had pushed the column back two hundred yards while the lieutenant and I were busy with our affair.

* * * * * * *

Liberty is a beautiful little town, and, like many others in Virginia, remarkable for the number of pretty girls it has to boast of. I was standing in front of a fine house, talking to some half dozen ladies, one of whom had just given me a glass of water. They were all crowded around us, laughing and talking. I had just placed the empty glass on the gate-post when a bullet struck its top with a loud rap, and jarred off the tumbler. The ladies screamed, and bounded off for the house, one of them losing her slipper in the flight. Major Douglas (who was present) and I jumped off, but I was so fortunate as to beat him in the race, and got that little slipper. I remounted, telling them the owner must come out and claim her property. We had a deal of fun, and finally persuaded two of them to advance. They had scarcely approached near to the gate when another ball crashed through a lilac bush. One made a spring like a deer for the house, while the other, who had lost the slipper, stood her ground, advanced bravely to the gate, picked up the glass, and put it on the post, though I must admit the sweet little thing did turn pale when she saw the bullet-hole in the wood. I sprang to the ground—down on my knees to replace the slipper. The beautiful foot was soiled with grass. What diligent efforts I made to remove every stain; it is astonishing how long I was about it; and then how awkward I was in getting on the shoe! No doubt it was very tedious to her, but the time was very short to me. Such are some of the few happy scenes that brighten a soldier's life.

My men had encamped near by, while I turned in upon the lawn, for it was against orders to sleep in a house; but we were not forbidden an hour or two on the portico, discussing our little adventure. That young lady, I fear, was told a good many fibs that evening, but I was so utterly worn out and sleepy that I hardly knew what was said. A soldier will make love wherever he goes, for the girls all expect it. They say, "Poor fellow! he'll be killed, wounded, or captured soon, and we shall never see him again; let us give him all the pleasure we can." On bidding my charmer good-by next morning I promised to write to her, but I forgot to ask her middle name. She never wrote to me.—Four Years in the Saddle.

LORD NELSON'S PROTEGÉ.

IT was a bright morning in spring, and the English fleet lay at anchor in Portsmouth harbor, awaiting the admiral's signal to start out on a cruise. The flag-ship, a huge, formidable ship of the line, with its dark sides bristling with guns, was all in commotion. The admiral, the most famous sailor of his day, was coming off from the shore, and the ship was ready to receive him. Already the guns of the squadron were beginning to thunder forth their welcome, and soon the vessel was wreathed in smoke, and quivering beneath the discharges of her heavy ordnance, as Admiral Nelson touched her deck, surrounded by a brilliant staff. Standing near the edge of the quarter-deck, and watching the scene with intense eagerness, was a young lad of about eighteen. He was dressed simply but neatly, and his cheeks glowed, and his eyes kindled, as he watched the exciting events that were going on around him. As he returned the salutes of the officers, the admiral chanced to observe the lad.

"Who is this?" he asked, turning to the captain of the vessel.

"He's a young lad that came on board a few hours ago," replied the captain. "He insists on seeing you, sir, as he says he has something of importance to say to you."

"Well, my lad," said the admiral, kindly, "speak out freely."

"If you please, sir," said the boy, "I've come to ask you to take me to sea with you."

"Is that all you have to say, you young scamp?" asked the captain, sharply.

"Let him alone," said the admiral, laughing. "What position do you want?" he asked, turning to the boy.

"If you would take me as your cabin boy, sir," said the lad, "I should be very glad."

"That's a poor chance for you, if you wish to rise above it," said the admiral, kindly.

"It will be a beginning," replied the lad. "If you'll give me a start, I'll work my way up, sir. You did it; and I mean to do so, too."

The admiral gazed at him kindly but searchingly, and then said, with a smile, "I'll take you with me on this cruise; and if you want to rise, I'll give you a chance. What is your name?"

"Edward Lee," was the reply.

"Very well then, Edward, I take you into my service," said the admiral. "I shall expect you to prove yourself worthy of the trust."

"I'll do that, sir," said the boy, earnestly, as he moved aside, respectfully to let the admiral pass.

In two hours the Vanguard stood out to sea, followed by the squadron, to join Earl St. Vincent at Gibraltar. The young valet of the admiral made a decidedly favorable impression upon the officers of the ship before the completion of the voyage.

"'Tis too bad," said the admiral to his flag captain, one day, "that that boy should fill a menial's position."

The captain agreed with his commander, and the result of the matter was that a few days after the arrival of the Vanguard at Gibraltar, Edward Lee was given a midshipman's warrant by Earl St. Vincent, at the special request of Admiral Nelson.

Then came the famous cruise in the Mediterranean, in search of Buonaparte and his fleet. In the terrific gale which dismasted the admiral's ship, young Lee proved that he merited the kindness his great commander had shown him, and won praise from all on board. Then came the brief halt at Syracuse, the arrival of the wished-for reinforcements, and the departure for Egypt. As the dawn of the memorable First of August revealed to the eyes of the English the tricolor floating over Alexandria, and the French fleet in the bay of Aboukir, Edward Lee was standing by his chief on the deck of the flag-ship.

"There they are!" burst from a score of voices, as the distant vessels came in view.

"Yes," muttered the boy; "and we'll be there, too, before night."

Nelson glanced at him approvingly.

"There's a chance for promotion for us all in here," he said, smiling.

He was right. The fearful encounter which carried such sorrow and despair to so many English homes, brought to these two men fame and honor. Through the whole action the admiral's eye was on the young "middy," and all through that long and thrilling summer night it never lost the gleam of satisfaction which had illumined it as he heard the young sailor's words in the morning. The same dispatch that greeted him as Lord Nelson, informed him that his request for a lieutenancy for young Lee was granted.

Steady devotion to his profession, and conspicuous bravery in times of danger, soon made the youthful lieutenant a noted man in His Majesty's navy. The battle of the Baltic was a memorable day to him. It was truly the greatest battle he had been in. Though severely wounded, he refused to go below, and stood at his post until the close of the action. When Sir Hyde Parker gave the signal for discontinuing the fight, Lieutenant Lee reported it to Lord Nelson. The admiral, putting the glass to his blind eye, said, with mock gravity, "I really don't see the signal. Keep our flag for closer battle still flying. That's the way I answer such signals. Nail mine to the mast."

It seemed that the fortunes of the great admiral and his protegé were mysteriously united; for this victory, which made the one a viscount, made the other a first lieutenant, though he had but just come of age. He followed his commander, who had become warmly attached to him, through all the years that intervened, so that when the great day of Trafalgar came he was the second in command to Captain Hardy. As the action began, Lord Nelson approached him, and placing his hand on his shoulder, said:

"We are going to have a hard day, Edward. I hope you may pass through it safely."

"I shall try to do my duty, my lord," said Lieutenant Lee. "But," he added, pointing to the uniform and decorations which the commander wore, contrary to his ordinary custom, "why does your lordship render yourself so conspicuous to-day? You will surely draw upon you the fire of some marksman."

"I have a presentiment," said the admiral, that my race is run; so I have put on all my harness to-day. In honor I gained them," he exclaimed, proudly, laying his hand on the insignia, "and in honor I will die with them."

The presentiment was realized. It was the last action of the great sailor. As he fell on the deck, in the heat of the battle, the captain and lieutenant of the ship sprang to him, in an agony of grief.

"Go back to your post, Edward," he said as the lieutenant knelt by him. Then he added, gently, "God bless you, lad."

With a sad heart the young man returned to his place. The fate which had seemed to unite his destiny with that of his commander was fully realized on this day, for, just as the victory was gained, a heavy discharge of grape from a French ship of the line swept the deck of Lord Nelson's ship, and when the smoke cleared away, Captain Hardy saw his lieutenant lying almost in the same spot where the Conqueror of the Nile had fallen, with his breast torn open by the terrible discharge.

LORD CHESTERFIELD'S COURTESY.—The following anecdote is well attested. Sir Richard Hill, the elder brother of the Rev. Rowland, gives it as having happened in his presence: "He happened once to be in the company of three extraordinary persons in very different ways—the Earl of Chesterfield, the Countess of Huntingdon, and Mrs. Macaulay. Lady Huntingdon, with her usual zeal, endeavored to introduce the subject of religion, which Mrs. Macaulay continually avoided by bringing in her own favorite views of republicanism. She launched out into rapturous commendations of the Romans, the Lacedæmonians, the laws of Lycurgus, and the praise bestowed on them by Zenophon. Lord Chesterfield, equally uneasy at the mention of either of these topics, still maintained his politeness, though longing all the while for an opportunity to slip away without any breach of good manners. He praised beyond measure the historical knowledge and ingenuity of Mrs. Macaulay, and passed the most flattering encomiums on the zeal, piety and character of Lady Huntingdon. "Ah," said the latter, "it is for want of your Lordship's knowing me more perfectly that you speak of me in such flattering terms; for I am conscious that I am nothing better than a poor, vile, miserable, sinful creature, such as can only hope to be saved by free, sovereign grace, and without any merit of my own to recommend me to the divine favor. This sincere rejection of the flattery of the Earl gave him the desired opportunity of escaping from the seat of thorns on which his courtesy had long kept him. He rose, made a most profound bow, and retired with these characteristic words: "I never yet was in any room or company where I could stay and hear the excellent Lady Huntingdon abused. I am therefore under the immediate necessity of bidding your Ladyship good morrow. Mrs. Macaulay, your obedient."

Punch has a clever picture entitled "A Sketch from Garrison Society," representing an irate old lady lecturing her pretty daughter at a ball room: "Now, miss," she says, "have you written down the distinctions of rank on your card, as I told you?" Alice—"Yes, ma." Mamma—"Very well, then, recollect you've no excuse this time; and if I catch you dancing with any one below a captain, you don't go out for a month."

NOTICE.

The publication of "The Californian" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

White & Bauer, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for The Californian in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 18, 1866.

Full volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume: two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

With the present issue, A. A. Stickney and W. J. Bingham withdraw from The Californian, having disposed of their interests in the paper to J. P. Bogardus.

THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS, AND SLAUGHTER-HOUSES.

MUNICIPAL bodies, as a general rule, get but little commendation or sympathy from their constituency, and it is really doubtful whether they deserve it. Good measures are, speaking very abstractly and in legal contemplation, deemed the purpose and object of their creation; while people, who will persist in taking a practical and common sense view of them, regard mischief as the usual characteristic of all such elective aggregations. If a Board of Government ever retired with the applause of the people, it was only because the power to do harm was suspended. Few such ever intrinsically earned any honest praise. Perhaps it is because we are difficult to please and ungrateful; given to such suspicions as, that time is idly consumed and expenditures of money wastefully made; that the governing powers are stupid and incomprehensibly dull when the public weal is concerned; but keen and untiring in the pursuit of the personal chances which underlie most public measures. Just here may be repeated to some advantage the old truth we see every day in warning salience, that we are governed too much, and that in our democratic governments, law-making and speech are pushed to a sinful extreme. They constitute evils under which we suffer, but which we cannot abate or abolish. The late war had good effects so far as it went, but while it emancipated the negro, it left the whites under the slavery of ignorant majorities; too free and extended a voting franchise; naturalization laws too unrestricted; incumbencies of office too much a matter of arbitrary change, and inferior governments too centrifugal—indeed too many inferior governments.

Our own Board of Supervisors is a body of many virtues. It meets punctually once a week; once a week it votes according to a strict formule; the proceedings of one Monday are the proceedings of all Mondays, except in the matter of vetoes, and they are sporadic; we have spread-eagleism from one member, grave didactics from another; but voting appropriations is pretty uniform. It is a practical Board, we may say, as one should expect, seeing how long it has burrowed among our sand heaps and drilled Telegraph Hill; and the straightforward way it goes to work to ruin a grumbling constituency by street contracts and changes of street grades. And yet with all these harsh duties, it really has leisure for jokes—jokes so full of humour that one can laugh over them heartily every time they come up to one's memory. For example let the reader go back to the Alta of the 31st of July, 1866, and he will find in the published proceedings of that Board the following language, viz.:

SLAUGHTER-HOUSES.

An order was introduced extending the time for removing the slaughter-houses till May next. The present order fixes the time in August next.

Mr. McCoppin said that the condition of the slaughter-houses is much better than it was, and he favored the extension.

Mr. Ashbury said the hog ranches are worse than the slaughter-houses, and both ought to be removed.

Dr. Rowell said that the hog ranches must remain with the slaughter-houses, because the hogs are fed on the offal. If people live together they must bear with one another's stinks. He favored the extension.

The order was referred to a special committee.

In order to appreciate this joke feelingly, the reader must visit the locus in quo; he must stand in that sweet atmosphere through which half of San Francisco and all of San José pass every few days; he must see troughs of blood and intestines reeking still with the steam of a just-butchered vitality; cattle-pens full of modern cropolites; a sluggish stream red with blood from the shambles, and in which float festering carcasses of dead pigs and the viscera of a hecatomb; he must see and smell these things; but he must not laugh there or in that vicinage, for if he does, he will be in danger of asphyxia from irrespirable gases. Is it not a pity that we people cannot bind each individual of our acute and conscientious Board to the railroad ties of Brannan street bridge, to see which of them will longest survive the odors and sights of that spot? And if the cholera does come hitherwards, can we not indnce or compel the aforesaid Board, accompanied by the Health (!) Department, to hold just one session there? If we can, there will be vacancies in the several districts in which our city is topographically divided; and perhaps their successors will have noses, consciences, and an active prevision of that dread missionary from Asia, whose evangelism we fear and flee from. But as the innocent are generally the victims, it is just possible the Supervisors may escape the coming calamity. Be this as it may, we will yet repose on the hope that, as vengeance is the Lord's, He will repay the Board of Supervisors of the city and county of San Francisco, for their unjust and shameful permission to the slaughter-houses to remain where they are until May, 1867.

OUR BOOK-TABLE.

Poems, by Christina G. Rossetti. Boston: Roberts Brothers. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

As there is no one who has yet given a complete and satisfactory definition of poetry, so there is no standard of expression according to which we may determine whether or not a writer will be universally allowed the name of poet. In this uncertainty, talents and genius, varying in strength and texture as noon and midnight, have been classed as poetic, until the name of poet is the most comprehensive of any in literature, including within its family embrace a greater number than that of historian or philosopher. According to one's education, he believes this one to be a poet whose claims as such will be utterly ignored by another equal in education and taste, while he discredits the discrimination of that one whose favorite poet may appear to him entirely without the truest elements of poetry. To some, the vivid rythmical description of nature and the actions of men is the completion of poetic expectation, and to them no one who is not similar in writing to the author of "Marmion," "The Lay of the Last Minstrel," or "The Lady of the Lake," will find favor or win a poet's crown. To others, the concise, musical expression of abstract thought, detached from personalities, and existing only as pure thought, is the high culmination of the poetic art. Whether or not Miss Rossetti, now so favorably received, extravagantly praised by some critics, and for whom so high a place in the affections of the people is confidently predicted, will prove to have any claim upon the remembrance of other generations is a problem which only Time, the corrector of opinion, will solve. If she had been a painter, she would have belonged to the school of the pre-Raphaelites. As she is an artist, she pictures nature with the minuteness and detail characteristic of a very close and careful observer. Her special claim for admiration will be found in her devotional pieces. Her mind is deeply religious, and the expression in her poems of sorrow, religion and death more nearly approaches that musical utterance and melody indispensable to the highest and sweetest poetry. There is perhaps no better specimen of her best powers than the following

SONG.

When I am dead, my dearest,
Sing no sad song for me;
Plant thou no roses at my head,
Nor shady cypress tree;
Be the green grass above me,
With showers and dew-drops wet;
And if thou wilt, remember,
And if thou wilt, forget.

I shall not see the shadow,
I shall not feel the rain;
I shall not hear the nightingale
Sing on, as if in pain;
And dreaming through the twilight
That doth not rise nor set,
Haply I may remember,
And haply may forget.

A New Book of Flowers. New York: Orange, Judd & Co. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

No one, however well acquainted with flowers, will fail to derive some new ideas from this book, and those who are only admirers, but not enthusiasts, will find much to interest them, and derive more pleasure from its perusal than from that of the very latest novel. It has been finely gotten up by Messrs. Orange, Judd & Co., of New York, handsomely illustrated with engravings which are true to nature, and will give to those unacquainted with a plant a better idea of it than whole pages of descriptive matter. It has been brought down to the present day, and includes all of the late novelties which have been recently introduced; also full directions for planting gardens, grounds, the care and attention of flowers, and how to arrange them in bouquets, vases, etc. No one with a love for the beautiful can afford to be without this book.

Four Years in the Saddle. By Col. Harry Gilmor. New York: Harper & Brothers. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

The adventures of Harry Gilmor belong to that class of Confederate war literature, of which the story of Belle Boyd and the notes of a Confederate officer are noteworthy examples. When the Pirate's Own Book and Baron Munchausen pall upon the youthful taste, we can imagine that it will turn to this marvellous record of Col. Gilmor with a thrill of satisfaction. There is that strong personal flavor in the Colonel's story, which is one of the distinguishing marks of this style of Confederate literature. The book is interesting, if not entirely truthful, and, as the writer is not confined to facts, readers of fiction will find it sufficiently entertaining. We give a few extracts in another column, which, by a misplacement of title, are confounded with another article in type crowded out of this week's issue.

Running The Gauntlet. By Edmund Yates. Boston: Loring. San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

[For the Californian.]

ON THE SAGACITY OF THE NEWFOUNDLAND.

THE high intellectual qualities which Cuvier, Buffon and Goldsmith agree in attributing to the Newfoundland, I am satisfied, do but scant justice to the mental capacity of that sagacious animal. The point, I believe, usually made in his favor, is his habit of plunging into the water and rescuing people from drowning, but, as I have frequently had occasion to observe that he exhibits an equal solicitude for sticks and stones, or, indeed, anything that his master may first spit upon, and then throw overboard, I do not think that the intellectual quality of the habit is conclusively proven. I am so well satisfied of this, that I feel confident that my dog—albeit an unusually intelligent member of the species—would refuse through logical consistency to rescue even my most intimate friends, unless they had first been spat upon and thrown in by me.

Nevertheless, although I point with pride to the fact that nobody has been drowned at my residence on Bush street since his advent in the family, I base the evidences of his intellect on somewhat higher grounds. He early evinced a disposition to attack passing Chinamen. I should have probably overlooked this circumstance, had not my attention been previously attracted to an editorial in one of the daily papers conclusively proving the inferiority of the Mongolian race, and I at once saw that what I had presumed to be simply a brutal instinct, was really a mental effort of considerable ability. I have seen him bark at an inoffensive John with a persistency that was as offensive if not as convincing, as a column of rhetoric. I have seen him pursue negroes with that fine blending of ferocity and intelligence which I have hitherto supposed to be peculiar to the genus homo. When I have watched him flush—if I may so call it—a bevy of colored children on their way to school, and stand with his handsome head erect, his silken ears slightly raised at their bases, his tail lightly tossing like a martial plume,—uttering deep-mouthed protests against this manifest abuse of the educational system, he has seemed to me to be an embodiment of chivalrous and aristocratic breeding.

In regard to his literary habits, of which no mention is made by Buffon or other naturalists, I would now speak. My attention was first drawn to the fact by his abusive attitude toward the carrier of a certain newspaper, at whom he continually growled. Although this first attempt at criticism was abstract and vague, he eventually improved upon it so much as to separate the irresponsible agent from the distasteful object itself, and spent his animosity upon the paper. This he literally "chewed up." During the term of my subscription, I do not think that an entire copy of the journal ever reached me; there was usually a column, a page or a paragraph missing. Nor were these objectionable features of the paper apparently confined to the editorial expression; very frequently whole columns of advertisements were the subject of his displeasure. To the savageness he also added the impersonality of the critic; he never permitted himself to be caught in the act, but always wore an air of quiet unconsciousness, when his conduct was the subject of comment, that never revealed his complicity. A few days after this a copy of some Congressional speech was missing from my desk, and was found in the garden, having been clandestinely purloined by him. A preternaturally uninteresting tract, and one or two pamphlets—one, I think, on the cholera—soon followed. Had he occupied himself with this lighter kind of mental pabulum, I should not possibly have interfered. But when his taste for knowledge extended to bound volumes—when a copy of Pope, vilely handled, was found on the verandah—I found it necessary to correct him. He subsequently took Lamb and Bacon, but, as an ingenious young friend assured me that this was evidently through a too literal conception of their titles, I excused him. But when this same young person attempted to justify the seizure of Hogg's Tales as an act not inconsistent with the dog's previous habits, I could only look upon the hypothesis as pleasing in its verbal felicity, but inaccurate in its logic.

That quality of discriminating intelligence which, according to the Ethiopian belief, keeps the monkey from talking lest he should be made to work, was exhibited to a high degree by my Newfoundland. My attempts to teach him certain useful tricks failed solely through his extraordinary sagacity. When I offered him a basket to carry, he would wag his tail and otherwise shew his perfect understanding of the service required, but firmly and quietly decline the office. When I ordered him to go out, he would walk as far as the threshold to show his comprehension of the order, and return to his post on the hearth-rug, to show his superior knowledge of the comparative merits of the two places. He always helped himself, when unobserved, to the victual reserved for the table, in preference to that set apart for his own use, with a fine discrimination of quality. When I sometimes found it necessary to urge him to attack the strange dogs which infested our garden—if he hesitated and exhibited a desire to bark at them from the parlor windows—if he preferred vocal abuse to prompt and physical action—I generally found that the dogs were larger than himself, and that his decision was the result of reason rather than instinct. So well am I satisfied of his sagacity that I am convinced he only waits an opportunity to find some more comfortable lodgings to desert mine, and far from imitating the mere animal instinct which governed Ulysses' dog, I am satisfied that if, in the mysterious future I should present myself as a beggar to him, he would at once recognize my descent in the social scale, and unhesitatingly attack me.

BRET.

[For the Californian.]

OUR CLUB.

No. 3.

EXPLANATORY.

AS historiographer of the social circle that was accustomed to come together in philosophic convocation at stated intervals, I found, after availing myself of a certain channel of communication with the literary world, that although I might be very entertaining to myself, not having been requested to paint portraits for public display, my services in that especial line could be immediately dispensed with. I merely replied, that in the first place nobody could imagine who under the sun the painter was who subscribed himself "THERSITES"—that being the fictitious name you will remember that I had assumed—and that in the second place they who gave me the above hint were unintentionally passing upon me a compliment of which I felt myself altogether unworthy; for that, although I and they knew the real individuals concealed behind the cognomens by which I described them, to all the rest of the world they were the purest creatures of imagination and would always remain so. In reply to this I was told, that while on the one hand no critical member of the Club had intended by any corrective remark to offer nourishment for my vanity, on the other hand discreet persons generally were quite as much aggrieved at being pictured openly for everybody's recognition. This was quite a new phase presented to my mind, and although I expressed some indignation at this designation of the little etchings I had attempted, as I was without any sympathizer I was perforce compelled to remain silent.

Where and what was the occasion of what precedes, did you ask? Merely this, sir, which I must offer in reply to your very courteous inquiry. About two years ago, having by a very contemplative person, perchance my friend, been invited to the ambrosial feasts of certain literary and philosophic gods, I was recognized by them as a fit associate, and was duly initiated into the mysterious penetralia of their temple. I was made to drink of the nectar which they drank without intoxication. Truly the potation was new to me, and if it did not inebriate, it cheered me in a singular manner. I believed myself to be somebody else, and saw these, who were but men, in the semblance of inhabitants of Olympus. I said to myself that nobody ever knew or heard of such contemplative and wise convocations, and I would make the world wiser, if not better, by drawing the picture of the circle, without letting any word uttered here be heard. I had only half finished the picture ere I was arrested by a direct attack made upon me. The Club had met one evening hour, the highly eminent mysteries of the incipient moments had occurred, when I found myself the object of animadversion. In an idle moment the editor had hinted that a recent novitiate had begun to publish what he had considered some devilish clever papers about Our Club; that the same were given to the world in the columns of an obscure weekly, and that—— Thereupon there arose on a sudden a loud burst of inextinguishable laughter, and every countenance was turned towards me. I immediately answered this phase of the question by saying that I was unable to perceive the relevancy of such a demonstration. Thereupon as if by concerted impulse they each rolled their handkerchiefs into a ball and filled the orifices whence proceeded their loud mirth. When quiet was restored, the nervous disciple asked what might be the name of the eminent sheet which was honored by these contributions. When the name was mentioned, another burst of laughter followed, quite equal to the first. I ventured to remark that, if one might make any allusion to the logical faculty which was at times active and demonstrative and deductive, that an inference from such conduct would be prejudicial to their reputation as reasonable and responsible creatures. This remark drew upon me the scornful and indignant gaze of every person present. A certain individual, whom I need not now otherwise indicate, immediately addressed himself to my attention. I was theoceforward to be aware that the minds of the members of the Club rested upon other topics than such as came within the discussion of ephemeral journals which were issued at regular intervals from printing offices. No one could be a consistent member of that organization whose intellect could not maintain its integrity without recourse to such debile pabulum. Any new work upon Philosophy or any of the occult sciences by any member of the Club, would be respectfully considered. It was hoped that no such error had been committed as to have admitted, among recent members, any who might be in any way indirectly connected with any ephemeral publication. Such a thing was worldly and not clubly. Even the existence of that sodality the world ought not to know.

The very measured tones in which these ideas were promulgated, and the transcendental aspect of the speaker, as if he were detached from any terrestial contact and were only existing in an atmosphere of the purest philosophy, made a very singular and solemn impression upon my mind. I felt my pigmiosss complete in this charmed circle of superior beings. In the degraded depths of self-consciousness, I was about to confess my unworthiness, and ask that some one favor me by bisecting my head and weighing my cerebral composition, as a mere indication of my humility. But I remained speechless. That reticence of the tongue, as by sympathy, was communicated to my pen. I yielded up my earnest purpose to tell the world of Our Club, and so have all this time been silent. If I shall now at intervals, and over my own proper signature, endeavor to continue and complete these papers, it will be because the instantaneous fear that affected me, has recognized its original groundlessness.

The natural depravity of woman causes her to wear the thin tissue before her countenance that the world may exercise its credulous imagination and picture to itself female beauty behind it which Nature refuses to verify. The whole world is given to artifices to call forth demonstrations out of all proportion to the significance of events. The mysteries of the supernatural are pretended with a view to the acquisition of reputation which bursteth as a bubble. I regret to say that what I have narrated of the gentlemen composing the Club was but another instance of an ordinary but not uncomely female, attempting to seduce the world into the belief in her possibly extravagant beauty by thickening the gossamer envelope over her countenance—another instance of mysterious seeming over very ordinary and approachable facts. The movement was entirely strategic, but it was some little time before it became evident to my dullness that all "things are not what they seem." While I found then something different from what first appeared, and found what was substantially quite as worthy and delectable, there was existent the natural disappointment that follows a delusion of the senses and a half-regret that the truth was not what to prolonged experience would probably prove intolerable. It is one of the weaknesses of our human nature that it likes wonderfully to be infallible and to seem to be endowed with impossible capabilities that appertain to a higher nature. Even were a positive disadvantage to follow our perverse primal impressions, so they are true, we would rather endure the penalty of positive misfortune than possible derision. It seems to be the worst thing in the world to be laughed at; and whether any one is looking or not, when we slip on the ice, it takes a terrible amount of blushing and confusion of countenance to be experienced before we get again our natural composure. Even if no one saw us, perchance we shall confess it in our dreams, and then—the immeasurable shame!

PHILIP.

OF George Sand, (Madame Dudevant,) queen now in French literature, a young and enthusiastic admirer, also French, as the style too truly betrays, thus descriptively writes: "This is truly she in the miraculous portrait of Calamata, who represents her in the costume of a man, the clothes loose and too large, and a cravat negligently tied, superb then with youth and heroism. That little head that the waved hair caresses in large masses, the oval face, the forehead more developed, and apparently higher in the middle than towards the temples, the brown eye, a little rapproche at the foot of the nose, swimming, almond-cut, and a protruding pupil, a look glistening with a melange of bonhomie and malice, the aquiline nose with the delicate nostrils raised, flexible and mocking, an extremely small ear, shell-shaped, the generous mouth, with lips of a deep red, full and finely chiseled, surmounted with a shadow of down, the teeth very white, narrow, a little long and protruding, the chin somewhat plump, but where one feels a resolute bone, the neck majestic, the bust ample, rich, and well modeled, the very tiny hands, gilded by the kiss of the sun—express magnificently the love of visible splendors, the enthusiasm for created things, the proud appetite for all noble joys. Who had said, before this rosy and flaming aurora of her infant genius, that she would write in reply to M. Feuillet abstract romances, directed against the sacrament of penitence, and peopled with gossamer-like characters with nothing of life in them?"

Mr. Froude, the historian, is spoken of in connection with the chair of modern history at Oxford which Mr. Goldwin Smith has resigned.

(For the Californian.)

VESPERS.

THE poppies nod their sleepy brows,
And reel adown the opiate air;
The sombre lilies slowly rouse,
And fold transparent hands in prayer.

The climbing roses whisper soft
Sweet messages; the four-o'clocks
Are drowsy now—but far aloft
I see the watchmen-hollyhocks.

The Moslem-lilacs seem to call
On "Allah" through the red sunset;
They rise upon the turret-wall
Of every leafy minaret.

The passionate tulips at this hour
Forget their pride. With good intent
The haughty dahlias yield their dower—
The dusky peony-queens relent.

A thousand lights are swung in view
From heaven's dome. I leave the fair
Meek violets kneeling in the dew:
It is the evening hour of prayer.

CHARLES WARREN STODDARD.

LITERARY NOTES.

WE get the following paragraphs from our Eastern exchanges, received by last steamer:

Mr. George Lillie Craik, professor of history and English literature in Queen's College, Belfast, died on the 25th of June. He was born in Fife in 1799, and was the son of a schoolmaster. In 1824 he came to London and got employment under Mr. Charles Knight and the Society for the Diffusion of Useful Knowledge. At the suggestion of Lord Brougham he wrote the Pursuit of Knowledge Under Difficulties. Under Mr. Knight's direction he wrote the Pictorial History of England. He was appointed professor at Belfast in 1849, and has since been more generally known by his History of the English Language and Literature, which was republished in this country. He was also the author of The English of Shakspeare, The Romances of the Peerage, and several minor works.

Mr. Dickens' Our Mutual Friend has been dramatized by Mr. Henry Farnie, and is being performed at the Saddler's Wells Theatre as The Golden Dustman. It enjoyed the honor here, if it be one, some two or three months since. Not to fall into the hands of a mere playwright, Mr. Wilkie Collins is dramatizing his Armadale, which, we believe, is the first time that he has ever turned his stories into plays. In the meantime, Mrs. Henry Wood, whose East Lynne has been brought out at one of the minor London theatres, has been trying to right herself in the matter through the friendly offices of Lord Lyttleton, in Parliament, but without effect. As the English law of copyright now stands, there is no remedy for an author whose works are brought out upon the stage against his or her will.

A writer in Notes and Queries gossips in this fashion concerning some of our old childish lore: "Our popular nursery tales are very ancient, and it is probable that many of them are of Teutonic origin. The English stories of Tom Thumb, Tom a lyn, Tumlane, Tommel finger, etc., all refer to the same mystic personage, who is of Scandinavian descent, and figures in as many different characters in the legends of the North. The adventures of 'Jack the Giant Killer' may be traced in the fictions of the Edda. At one time he is Thor; at another, he robes himself in the coat which renders him invisible, and which is the cloud-cloak belonging to King Alberich, and the other dwarfs of Teutonic romance; and at another, he wears the shoes of swiftness, in which Loke escaped from Valhalla."

Mr. Dion L. Boucicault has made a great success in Paris with Jean la Poste, his translation of Arrah-na-Pogue, which is now running at the Gaité; the critics agreeing that no French dramatists could have succeeded nearly so well in placing such entertaining scenes of Irish life on the French stage. The most popular part of the play is the dance at the wedding, with which, by the way, Mr. Boucicault himself has but little to do in his dramatic capacity.

Mr. Henry Kingsley commences a new novel in the July number of Macmillan's Magazine. The title is Silcote of Silcotes.

Miss Thackeray, the author of The Story of Elizabeth, commences a new tale, The Village on the Cliff, in the July number of the Cornhill Magazine.

Mr. John Ruskin has been invited to stand for the chair of poetry at Oxford, which is soon to be vacant by the expiration of Mr. Matthew Arnold's term of office.

Mr. Thomas Woolner has recently finished a bust of the late Richard Cobden, which is to be placed in Westminster Abbey.

Mr. Emerson is revising his late course of lectures for speedy publication.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Faralloue Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. je15 3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
my28 Lied street, San Francisco.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Brnces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
je10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!

MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,
53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, President

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	faults.....	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Facenche.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach..	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlurged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

BLOOM OF YOUTH,
OR LIQUID PEARL!

See that the name,
GEO. W. LAIRD,
is stamped
ON THE BOTTLE.
No other is Genuine.

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH AND DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay
ap27-3m San Francisco

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

MARY SMITH, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, be awarded to Plaintiff, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled. WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney, 535 Clay street. je30-3m

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that in pursuance of the order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California, made on the 26th day of July, 1866, in the matter of the estate of Andrew Rohesou, deceased, the undersigned, administrator with the will annexed of said deceased, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, in two parcels, subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Tuesday, the 11th day of September, 1866, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the counting room of Aldrich & Merrill, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county, all the right, title and interest of said Andrew Rohesou, deceased, at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has, by operation of law or otherwise acquired, other than or in addition to that of said deceased at the time of his death, in and to all those certain two lots of land situated in said city and county and described as follows, viz: 1st. Commencing at a point on the west side of Mason street, 77 1 2 feet northerly from the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets; thence running northerly along said side of Mason street 60 feet; thence at a right angle westerly 77 1 2 feet; thence at a right angle southerly 60 feet; and thence at a right angle easterly 77 1-2 feet to the point of beginning. 2d. Commencing at a point on the north line of Ellis street, 117 1 2 feet westerly from the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets; running thence westerly along Ellis street 20 feet; thence at a right angle northerly 60 feet; thence at a right angle easterly 20 feet; and thence at a right angle southerly 60 feet to the place of beginning. And said administrator will receive offers or bids for said property from this date till said 11th day of September, 1866, at 12 o'clock noon, at said counting room of Aldrich & Merrill, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county. EDWARD F. STONE, Administrator with the will annexed of Andrew Rohesou, deceased.
San Francisco, August 11th, 1866. au11-td

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that, in pursuance of an order of the Probate Court of the City and County of San Francisco made on the 2d day of April, 1866, in the matter of the Estates of Herman R. Haste and Julia Haste, minors, the undersigned, Guardian of said minors, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder, for cash, payable in United States gold coin, and subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Saturday, the 18th day of August, 1866, at twelve o'clock, noon, of that day, at the office of D. P. Barstow, Esq., No 6 Montgomery Block, in the City and County of San Francisco, all the right, title and interest of said minors, Herman R. Haste and Julia Haste, of, in and to all the one undivided one-half part of all that certain lot of land situated in the City and County of San Francisco, and described as follows, viz: Commencing at a point on the northerly line of Merchant street, 23 feet easterly from the north east corner of Merchant street and Dunbar's Alley; thence running easterly along said line of Merchant street 20 feet 2 1 2 inches; thence at a right angle northerly 68 feet and 9 inches; thence at a right angle westerly 20 feet 2 1 2 inches, and thence at a right angle southerly 68 feet and 9 inches to the point of beginning.

Offers or bids for said property will be received at the office of D. P. Barstow, Esq., No. 6 Montgomery Block, from this date till Saturday, the 18th day of August, at twelve o'clock, noon, by the undersigned,

CHRISTIAN KIRK,
Guardian of Herman R. Haste and Julia Haste, minors.
(jy28 td)

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of GEORGE D. HANSEN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of CHRISTIAN KIRK, the Executor of the estate of GEORGE D. HANSEN, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the heir and devisee of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

IT IS ORDERED, That all persons interested in the estate of the said George D. Hansen, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the court-room of said Court in the City Hall in said city and county, on Wednesday, the fifth day of September, A. D. 1866, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate to the heir and devisee of the said George D. Hansen, deceased, according to law;

It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 5th day of September, A. D. 1866, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated, San Francisco, August 3d, 1866. 4w

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street. Petaluma.
mar24 6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors.

It appearing to this court from the petition this day presented and filed by Robert L. Harris, the guardian of the estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors, praying for an order of sale of the real estate belonging to his said wards, that it would be beneficial to the said wards that such real estate should be sold at private sale.

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said wards, and all persons interested in said estate, appear before this court at the court room thereof, at the court house, in the city and county of San Francisco, on Monday the 10th day of September, 1866, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least three successive weeks before said hearing of said petition in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

Dated August 10th, A. D., 1866. M. C. BLAKE,
au11 4t Probate Judge.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR AUGUST:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

AUGUST 18th, - - - - SACRAMENTO,
Captain J. M. Cavarly,
(Connecting with the HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.

AUGUST 30th, - - - - GOLDEN AGE,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth,
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Bradbury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

☞ The splendid steamship COLORADO will be despatched for CHINA on TUESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1867.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

GRAND OPENING
OF THE
Circassian Saloon,

Corner of Dupont and Pacific streets,
(Formerly "Diana Saloon,")

ON SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1866.

NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT!—Magic and Gymnastic Feats, free of charge.

☞ The best of WINES, LIQUORS, LUNCH, and CIGARS always on hand.

N. B. Fine Vocal Music, Polite Waiters, etc.
au11 1m

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late ex. INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.
mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

QUINCY HALL,

545, 547, 549 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE LARGEST CLOTHING EMPORIUM in California. The daily sales from the establishment is a sufficient guarantee that the prices are less than those of any other house on the Pacific coast. Here you also find clothing of the best of California Cloth, both for Wholesale and Retail trade. Also, particular attention paid to making up fine clothing to order. jy21

E. M. TUBBS & Co. PETERBORO', N.H.

RINGS VEGETABLE AMBROSIA

TO RESTORE GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR

ERADICATE DANDRUFF AND HUMORS from the SCALP & PREVENT BALDNESS.

IS WARRANTED.

PROPRIETORS. TRY A BOTTLE.

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA

IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale and retail, by

JOHN F. SNOW,

Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,

je23 San Francisco.

BREWSTER & CO.'S Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE

WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to

BREWSTER & CO.,

Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with

BREWSTER & CO.,

Of No. 372, Broome street,

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,

mar24 6m Main street, Petaluma.

FURNITURE AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

HEUSTON, HASTINGS & CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE

STOCK OF

CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT

REDUCED PRICES.

je17-3m

MEAGHER, TAAFE & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS OF

DRY GOODS, LINENS,
FURNISHING GOODS,
YANKEE NOTIONS,
FANCY GOODS, ETC.

AGENTS FOR THE

MOUNT VERON DUCK COMPANY

NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.

RETAIL HOUSE, - - - NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

jy21 3m Lick House.

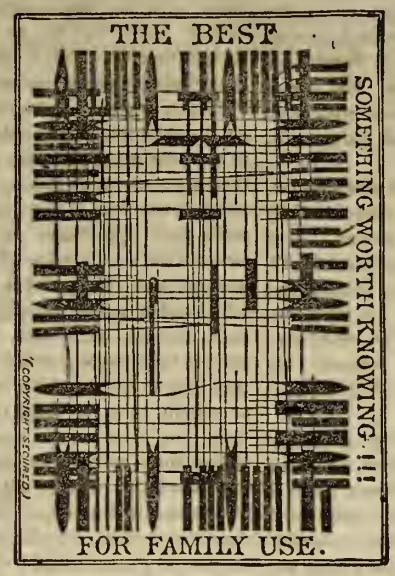
MR. AND MRS. COGILL AND SONS,



Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoiuin Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. au5-3m

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

THE Accidental Insurance Co,

OF NEW YORK,

ISSUES POLICIES INSURING AGAINST INJURIES OF all kinds, and death resulting from accident

In case death does not result from the injury, the insured receives a weekly compensation as long as he is disabled (not to exceed twenty-six weeks.)

Policy.	Premium.	Weekly Compensation.
$1,000	$ 5 00	$ 5 00
$2,000	$10 00	$10 00
$5,000	$25 00	$25 00
$10,000	$50 00	$50 00

SEA VOYAGE POLICIES,

Covering risk to New York, cost $2 per $1,000.

☞ No Medical Examination required.

Life Insurance.

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

HARTFORD, CONN.

For Policies, or further information, apply to

A. D. SMITH & CO., Agents,

Northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets au4 3m

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 15, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON WEDNESDAY, - - - AUGUST 15,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,

Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,

Up stairs, San Francisco.

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

je30-3m

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

Nos. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET, NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,

Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,

je16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

B. F. STERETT, 533 Clay St., a few doors below Montgomery, continues to print all kinds of Books, Bills, Circulars, Cards, etc. in superior style, and at reasonable prices.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,

je30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

je17-3m

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

YANKEE NOTIONS AND FANCY GOODS!

MERCHANTS wanting Goods in this line should not fail to examine our stock, which is new and attractive, before buying elsewhere.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,

jy21-3m Battery street, near Pine.

STRANGE HALLUCINATIONS.

TULPINS mentions a painter who verily believed that all the bones of his body were so soft and flexible that they might easily be crushed together, or folded one within another, like pieces of pliable wax. A Lusitanian doctor had a patient who insisted that he was perpetually frozen, and would sit before a great fire even in dog-days. The doctor made him a dress of rough sheepskins, saturated with aqua vitæ, and set him on fire. He then said he was quite warm, rather too much so, and so was cured.

Galen and Avicenna make mention of people who have fancied themselves earthen pots, and therefore have carefully avoided being touched for fear they should be broken. Then there is the case of the insane watchmaker mentioned by Pinel, who insisted that he had been guillotined, and that another head had afterward, by mistake, been put on his shoulders, instead of hit own. "Look at these teeth," he would say; "mine were extremely handsome—these are decayed. My mouth was sound and healthy—this is foul. How different is the hair from that of my own head."

Mr. Haslam, in his work on insanity, mentions a case of one who insisted that he had no mouth, and when compelled by force to swallow, declared that a wound had been made in his throat, through which the food had been introduced. Benvenuto Cellini, the celebrated Florentine artist, in his life, says that the governor of the castle in which the former was confined had a periodical disorder of this sort; every year he had some different whim. One time he conceived himself changed into a pitcher of oil; another time he thought himself a frog, and began to leap as such; another time, again, he imagined he was dead, and it was found necessary to humor his conceit by making a show of burying him.

At length he thought himself a bat, and when he went to take a walk he sometimes made just such a noise as bats do; he likewise used gestures with his hands and body, as if he were going to fly.

Noses have been known to be particularly troublesome to hypochondriacs. One man fancied that his nose was of a ludicrous length, and consequently kept backing off as his friends approached to hold a parley with him, fearing that he should put their eyes out. It is said that frequently this same deluded possessor of a long nose might have been seen going along the street, guiding his nose with his hand to keep it from breaking the shop windows.

A young man had a strong imagination that he was dead, and earnestly begged his friends to bury him. They consented by the advice of the physician. He was laid upon a bier and carried upon the shoulders of men to church, when some pleasant fellow, up to the business, met the procession and inquired who it was; they answered. "And a very good job it is," said one of them, "for the world is well rid of a very bad character, which the gallows must have had in due course." The young man now lying dead hearing this, popped his head up, and said they ought to be ashamed of themselves in thus traducing his fair fame, and if he were alive he would thrash them for their insolence. But they continued to utter the most disgraceful language. His excited temper could no longer bear it; up he jumps, they run, he after them, until he fell down quite exhausted. He was put to bed; the violent exertion he had gone through promoted perspiration, and he got well.

A SINGULAR DISCOVERY.—News of the discovery of a mammoth in the frozen soil of arctic Siberia has just been received from the Imperial Academy of Sciences at St. Petersburg, to the satisfaction of palæontologists, who are hopeful that it will afford an opportunity for a complete and trustworthy description of the ancient creature. It was discovered in 1864 by a Samoyed, near the bay of Tas, the eastern arm of the Gulf of Obi, imbedded in the earth, covered with hair, and the skin apparently entire. This state of preservation is due to the almost perennial frost which prevails on the northernmost coast of Asia, and it is to be hoped that partial exposure to the air will not, as in a former instance, have occasioned sudden decomposition. In February of the present year, the Academy above referred to commissioned a well-known palæontologist, one of their body, to visit the spot, and note its geology, together with every possible particular concerning the mammoth. We may therefore hope to have, in due time, a detailed report of the discovery, as well as the appearance of the animal, and should circumstances prove favorable, of the contents of its stomach. The subject is the more interesting, inasmuch as it involves the question of a change of climate since the age when the mammoth roamed along the shores of what is now a frozen sea.

NORTH AMERICAN INDIANS AT ROME.—A large collection of objects of fictile art, of great interest, although singularly at variance with the remainder of the contents of the Christian Museum at St. John Laterun, at Rome, has recently been placed in one of the great rooms on the principal floor of that palace, consisting of terra-cotta busts of life size, statuettes and tableaux in alto rilievo, illustrating the various tribes of North American Indians, with events in their history, manners and customs, dresses, etc.

NEWSPAPER CORRESPONDENTS.—Newspaper correspondents appear pretty well to understand their relationship one to another—their common duties—which seem to be to get as much space as they possibly can in the prints they address, without paying for it; to treat public journals, in fact, as though they were public property, which they are not. Of their duties to newspaper proprietors, however, they are very oblivious, or choose to be very oblivious. They seem to have got a notion into their heads that they have as good a right to use your pages as to use a public road. But, as they pay their shares towards making and keeping in repair the latter, either in the form of turnpike toll or highway rate, and never make their appearance on Saturday night with their quota towards the week's wages of our compositors, reporters, and machine-men, etc., we refuse to see any parallel between ourselves and a public thoroughfare. We deny their right to stalk through us, or talk through us; nay, more, we insist upon it that people generally have no more reason to expect that they should use our columns, unless we in courtesy choose to permit them, or they, as advertisers, choose to pay for them, than they have to wear our Sunday coat, or insist upon sitting down with us to our Sunday joint. We should not mind the latter, with an old and pleasant friend—one willing to dispense with ceremony, to dine between services, and not expect more than one plain pudding. But correspondents are not always pleasant, and far from being profitable. Courage, too—moral courage we mean—is not a quality they abound in; they sometimes like to say sharp and saucy things to another, keep their incognito, and withhold their card if you will let them do so. Like Teucer, they like to use a broadsheet as he did the broad shield of Ajax—as a shelter under which to fly the arrows. But if anything unpleasant happens to arise out of their effusions, they have at times a great reluctance to stand forth and face the consequences. Not only is the editor expected to find paper, types, and ink for their amusement. but to bear the blunt and the blame of whatever they put forth. One would have thought that by this time people understood this. Nevertheless, if at this moment you refuse a long-winded or unmannerly scribbler the use of your columns, he talks largely about the right of public discussion, and vapors indignantly against your denial, as though you were the post-office, and would not carry his letters, or the dispensary doctor, and declined to visit a patient upon the recommendation of a subscriber.—Bristol Paper.

ROMAN LAWYERS AND THEIR FEES.

THE bar with us is one of the great forces of society, and opens a road to affluence and to political success. But the old Roman lawyers seem to have had some advantages over their modern brethren, to judge by an article in the British Quarterly:

At first the Roman pleaders received no remuneration beyond the services which every client owed to his patron. Subsequently, when law had become a difficult science, it became the practice for clients to reward their advocates by making them presents, which (to evade the Cincian law passed to prevent this) were often disguised as secret loans. Before the fall of the republic these fees equalled in magnitude the largest fees known in modern times. Even Cicero, who was regarded as a model of disinterestedness, is said to have received from Publius Sylla about $40,000 as a fee for his forensic services. In modern times many large fortunes have been made at the bar, but, we imagine, none to be compared with that of M. Lucinius Crassus, whose fortune is said to have exceeded $15,000,000. One mode of rewarding advocates, by legacies left to them by their clients, appears to have been a source of considerable profit, and was esteemed highly honorable to the legatee. Cicero boasted that in this way he had received twenty millions of sesterces, more than $800,000. We fear that clients in our days are not so liberal in their last wills and testaments.

In fact, during the best days of Rome, success at the bar was the surest introduction to popularity, distinction and political power. No wonder, then, that the art of forensic speaking was greatly cultivated, and with so much success. Probably no age has produced a band of more eloquent men than Cicero and his contemporaries of the Roman bar. Nor were the barristers of Rome distinguished only for oratory. Many of them were men of enlarged erudition, of literary taste, and of varied acquirements. Varo, "the most learned of the Romans," Quintilian, Suetonious, Pliny and Tacitus were all advocates; and the volumes of Cicero still bear testimony to his versatility and power in almost every department of literature. Under the Emperor the eloquence of the Roman bar had greatly declined, as all that is manly and great must decline and wither with the loss of freedom. Moreover, the treatment of the bar was not always such as to encourage much mental vigor. Lord Makenzie relates that one day Gallicus was pleading before the Emperor Claudius, near the banks of the river Tiber, when the advocate, having irritated the Emperor, was by his orders thrown into the river. Some days after a client of Gallicus brought his case to Afer, the most celebrated advocate of the age, and requested him to plead it before the Emperor. "Who told you, said Afer, "that I was a better swimmer than Gallicus?"

WHAT WORKMEN MAY BECOME.—It is not given to all to be masters of song, like Burns; of art, like Palissy or Gibson; of engineering skill, like Stephenson; of critical acumen, like Gifford; or of abstract science, like Furguson or the elder Herschel; yet these, at first, were all poor working men, who gained their education by their own efforts—who did battle with pinching poverty, lack of educational means, prejudice of class, and all those lions which stand in the way of men of weaker mould, who "let I dare not wait upon I would." All cannot be field-marshals in the army of life; but somewhat lower, yet very honorable grades, have been attained by men once in the ranks, who, while never for a moment despising the labor by which they gained honest bread, were not disposed to consider working, eating, and sleeping, all that is worth living for. Their daily labor honestly and intelligently performed, they felt themselves to be free citizens of the empire of thought, in which true men take rank according to what they essentially are, quite independently of the conditions of their life. When the sun shines, it shines for all, lord or laborer; and the precious instincts which make men believe in good and beautiful things, treasure up and nourish the suggestions of universal nature, and cultivate the talents entrusted to their care, are bestowed as impartially as the sunshine. Look into any biographical dictionary, and you will see how little the circumstances of early life have been able to impede the careers of really great men. Real mental energy soon masters them, and makes them even subservient to its will.—The Working Man.

Miss Harriet Parr has lately published the Life and Death of Jeanne d'Arc, called 'The Maid," which shows that the heroine was not so much a warrior as a tender hearted woman: "Jeanne was asked which she liked best to carry—her standard or her sword. 'I liked to carry my standard forty times better than my sword. And I always carried my standard myself when I attacked the enemy, to avoid killing any one; and, indeed, I never did kill any one.'"

EXTRACT FROM THE REPORT FOR 1866, OF HON. WM. BARNES, SUPERINTENDENT OF THE INSURANCE DEPARTMENT OF THE STATE OF NEW YORK.—The Superintendent has noticed with regret that the NORTH AMERICA LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY has engaged in the business of insuring AGAINST TRAVELLING ACCIDENTS; thus perilling its Life policy-holders by experiments in a new and comparatively untried field of Insurance not within the scope of their contracts. It is the duty of this Department to warn the public that any Life Insurance Company which engages in Fire, Marine, Casualty, Accident, or any other branch of Insurance, adds new elements of hazard to its engagements, the extent or danger of which it is impossible to calculate with certainty, and which are entirely foreign and repugnant to a legitimate and safe system of Life underwriting. The main object of Life Insurance is thus practically nullified by exposing the policy holders to those perils of business and speculation the avoidance of which furnishes the main incentive for procuring a policy.

It is questionable whether the rapid multiplication of Casualty Insurance Companies has not already exceeded the public demand, unless new branches of miscellaneous business are superadded, for which ample provision has been made in the New York Statute. (See N. Y. Insurance Laws, p. 75.) A disposition has been shown by the Travellers of Hartford and the United States Accident of Syracuse, to encroach upon the field of Life Insurance, which is expressly forbidden by the general Act and the general Legislative policy of this State since 1849. The preservation intact and unimpaired of the vast interests now connected with Life Insurance in this country, demand that this mixture of Life with other branches of Insurance should be sternly resisted; and if the Casualty Company are unable to maintain themselves in their chosen field, and persist in invading the franchises of the Life Companies, our statute should be so amended as to restrain the Casualty companies from issuing any policies insuring against fatal accidents and casualties, thus confining their operations to non-fatal accidents only and other subdivisions of miscellaneous insurance.

DR. BECK, Professor of Anatomy and Medicine, and formerly connected with the Anatomical Museums of New York and San Francisco, has recently resumed the practice of medicine. To those seeking medical relief it is only necessary to state that Dr. Beck is a member of several European and American Medical Universities, and, unlike many practitioners and heads of "Medical Institutes" in this city, who are not graduates but medical imposters, he, as a physician and surgeon, is thoroughly conversant with the requirements of his profession. We can confidently recommend Dr. Beck to the public. His rooms are 314 Kearny street, between Pine and Bush.

WE saw, in Wheeler & Wilson's Sewing Machine Office, the other day, a sewing machine numbered Two Hundred and Thirty-three Thousand. If the demand for their Sewing Machines can be taken as evidence—and we know no better—the Wheeler & Wilson Machine must certainly rank as the best.

JOB PRINTERS.—William M. Cubery, formerly editor of the Wilmington Journal, has retired from that paper, and associated himself with B. F. Steritt, of this city, in the job-printing business. The firm of Sterett & Cubery are at 553 Clay street.—Morning Call.

LADIES' NOTE PAPER.—Ladies' Note Paper of all sorts and sizes, of the latest Parisian and New York styles, can be had at Chilean Beach's Bookstore, opposite Heuston, Hastings & Co., Lick House; also, works fresh from the English and American publishers, with the best selection of Albums. Ladies, call and supply yourselves.

LADIES: Deserving of your confidence, there is no article at all equal for fragrance, innocency, and perfect imitation of nature to Davidson's Circassian Bloom, for the skin and complexion. It excels every other article in use. Sold by all druggists.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammatiou, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for and take none but LYON'S, bearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervation, listlessness, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaints they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedentary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spavin, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Strains, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westbrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky, and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off and turning gray, and promotes its growth upon prematurely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.
E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no other. e7m

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

SAN FRANCISCO, September 6, 1861.

Dr. Bourne: Last Winter I was nearly dead, by an attack of inflammatory rheumatism. I suffered the most excruciating pains for about five weeks, without any hope of relief, when a friend, hearing of my illness, called to see me, and assured me that if I would stop "drugging and dosing," and go to you, that you would have me walking about the streets in three days. Sure enough, although I was utterly helpless, and conveyed to your house in a carriage, and carried into it by three stout men, and was by them lifted into the bath, yet, on coming out of the bath I was able to largely assist myself, doing much toward dressing, and without assistance walked from the bath to the carriage. On the fourth day, I discharged my carriage and walked with a friend's aid the entire distance to your house (nearly a mile) and home again, and so on until cured; and I had not taken more than twelve baths when, all pain and swelling having ceased, I felt myself in well man. And now I am happy to do this little service of publicly certifying to the simple truth, leaving it to do its own work among such of my friends and acquaintances as may chance to see this. Your friend. JOSEPH SPARROW.

PHOTOGRAPHY.—The pictures taken in this city are far superior to those taken in the East and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The best gallery to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The NEW YORK, on the east side side of Third street, a few doors below Market, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries.

JACOB SHEW & Co., No. 315 Montgomery street, near Pine, take First-Class Photographs, of all kinds, at the lowest scale of prices adopted by the Associated Photographers. Photographs retouched in the highest style of the art.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

WANTED—Agents to sell, by subscription only the most popular work ever written: "GRANT AND SHERMAN; their Campaigns and Generals." By the world-renowned historian, Hon. J. T. Headley, author of Washington and his Generals, Sacred Mountains, etc. Agents are taking as high as thirty subscribers per day, and all agree in pronouncing it the most saleable work they ever took hold of. The people want Headley's illustrated "GRANT AND SHERMAN," etc. For terms and territory, address E. E. SHEAR, No. 8 Montgomery Street, and Box 1,430, San Francisco, California

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty-second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
NEW YORK.

je2-4m

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

AUCTIONEERS.
Olney & Co., removed to 418 Montgomery street.

BUSINESS AND PROPERTY AGENCY.
S. P. Whitman, 313 Montgomery st.

BATHS.
Dr. Bourne's, (Medical,) 10 Post, near Montgomery

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

COLLECTOR.
B. Pulverman, 614 Montgomery—Office hours, 1 to 3 P.M.

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

COPPER CRUSHER AND SAMPLER.
S. W. Howland, 24 California street, (at Thomas' Mil)

DRESS TRIMMINGS, WORSTEDS, ETC.
Mrs. Norcross, 5 Montgomery street (Masonic Temple.)

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyce & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miol Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pin

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. C. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldhush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.
T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 onnces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE,

751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

AN INSTITUTION designed to prepare boys, young and middle-aged men for the active duties of business in the shortest time possible and at the least expense. For "COLLEGE REVIEW," giving information, call at the College, or address E. P. HEALD, President.
aul1 3m

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM
AT THE
State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,
General Agent,
111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE
RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.
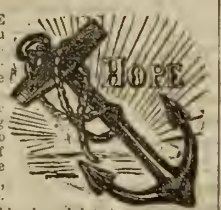
my10-3m



CARRINGTON & CO'S
GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT
Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,
SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.
Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.
COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.
Address:
CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y

CANTY & WAGNER,
(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Confectioners,
111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

AYER'S PILLS.

ARE YOU SICK, FEEBLE and complaining? Are you out of order, with your system deranged and your feelings uncomfortable? These symptoms are often the prelude to serious illness. Some fit of sickness is creeping upon you, and should be averted by a timely use of the right remedy. At once
TAKE AYER'S PILLS,
and cleanse out the disordered humors, purify the blood, and let the fluids move on unobstructed in health again. They stimulate the functions of the body into vigorous activity, purify the system from the obstructions which make disease. A cold settles somewhere in the body, and deranges its natural functions. These, if not relieved, react upon themselves and the surrounding organs, producing general aggravation, suffering and derangement. While in this condition,
TAKE AYER'S PILLS,
and see how directly they restore the natural action of the system, and with it the buoyant feeling of health again. What is true and so apparent in this trivial and common complaint is also true in many of the deep-seated and dangerous distempers. The same purgative effect expels them. Caused by similar obstructions and derangements of the natural functions of the body they are rapidly and many of them surely cured by the same means. None who know the virtue of these Pills will neglect to employ them when suffering from the disorders they cure, such as Headache, Foul Stomach, Dysentery, Bilious Complaints, Indigestion, Derangement of the Liver, Costiveness, Constipation, Heartburn, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Worms and Suppression, when taken in large doses.

They are Sugar-Coated, so that the most sensitive can take them easily, and they are surely the best purgative medicine yet discovered.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
jy26-2m and all Dealers.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,
San Francisco, Cal.

THE FOURTH ANNUAL SESSION of the above Institution commenced July 30th, 1866.

The age for admission is from seven to fifteen years. For those more than fifteen years of age, it will be necessary to have testimonials of good character from respectable parties.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance; also, such sum to be deposited as will be sufficient to pay the traveling expenses of the student to his place of residence, and other contingent expenses, such as books, clothes, etc.

No Student will be received without such deposit.

The terms are so reduced (less than one-half the usual charges in this State) that the Institution can be conducted only on a rigid cash principle; hence any failure in remitting the Pension will oblige the authorities of the College to charge ten per cent. additional, or forward the student to his parents or guardian.

Though it be a Catholic Institution, yet pupils of all denominations will be admitted, and their religious convictions respected; but, for the sake of uniformity, all will be required to be present at the public religious exercises.

Bedding, towels, etc., will be furnished by the Institution, to defray the cost of which ten dollars will be paid, once only, by each pupil, as an entrance fee.

Each pupil is required to be provided with a neat black suit for Sundays, and two other plain suits, three pairs of boots, with sufficient linen, stockings, etc.

Five dollars will also be charged annually for medicines and medical attendance.
au4-1m REV P. J. GREY, President.

A CARD.

Great Sale of Fine Clothing.

OUR WHOLE STOCK OF FINE CLOTHING and Gents' Furnishing Goods, for the next
THIRTY DAYS,
At Prices that Challenge Competition.

IT MUST BE SOLD, TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Corner Bush and Montgomery streets, and corner Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.
au4

GOOD NEWS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Teeth Extracted Without Pain
BY THE
ANÆSTHETIC SPRAY PRODUCER,
WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

Partial to a full Upper Set of Teeth, for from $10 to $25, as usual. Filling with best Cement, $1; with Gold, from $1 to $3. All work warranted.
Office, 139 Fourth street, near Howard.
au4 3m J. P. CROWELL, Dentist.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY THE CALIFORNIAN PUBLISHING COMPANY.

A. A. STICKNEY, J. P. BOGARDUS, W. J. BINGHAM, C. H. WEBB

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

☞ THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,
No 532 Merchan street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary.
mh26-tf

TRY LE COUNT'S INK.

CORNER OF
Sacramento and Montgomery streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Post Office Address: Lock Box No 1477. je30 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S
Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine,
ap14-1y Agents for Pacific Coast.

NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, siguing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, mutches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper ..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payuble on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideratioudoes not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performauce of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3: over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

VINCENT'S COLD PREVENTIVE.

A Sure Cure

FOR COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS
DYSPEPSIA,
CONSUMPTION,
NIGHT SWEATS. AND PULMONARY DISEASES.

Read the following:

REMARKABLE CURE.

San Francisco, September 5th, 1865.

I desire to make known the fact that I was afflicted with a very bad cough for fifteen years, and, during this time, used everything which I could hear of without getting the better of my disease, until I tried Dr. D. B. Vincent's Cold Preventative or Cough Mixture, which cured me sound and well.

NEWTON MOORE.

This is to certify that my wife has been troubled with indigestion for nearly eighteen months, and, by using one bottle of Dr. Vincent's medicine, has been completely cured.

San Francisco, April 6th, 1866.

JOHNSON J. THOMAS.

San Francisco, July 17th, 1865.

I hereby certify that, having had a Cough some five months since, which had troubled me for two years, and I was so bad that I was able to do but little labor of any kind, and could not walk fast without putting myself out of breath. I was so far gone that I had chills over me and night sweats, and had what other physicians called disease of the lungs. I had been doctoring a part of the time for the last year, when I saw Dr. D. B. Vincent, and he gave me a small vial of medicine, which relieved me of the chills and night sweats and the cough entirely went away, and I do not take cold so easy, and my health is much better in every respect. My appetite is much better; and I heartily recommend all others who are afflicted with similar complaints to him.

JOHN O'NEILL, National Hotel.

The above named diseases nearly all originate from the same or similar causes, and will cure all of them. It is a sure cure for Dyspepsia. Price, 50 cents per bottle.

THE COLD PREVENTIVE

D. B. VINCENT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND OCULIST,

Treats all diseases successfully on the Electric system. Particular attention paid to treating all Diseases of the Eyes, Rheumatism, Paralysis, etc. Cures guaranteed, or all moneys refunded—in most cases even where others fail.

☞ OFFICE—No. 103 Kearny street, first floor, where he can be consulted at all hours, unless professionally engaged. All orders from the country promptly attended to. ap7

TYLER BROTHERS,

NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,

SAN FRANCISCO,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

SCHOOL BOOKS,
STATIONERY,
PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,
BLANK BOOKS,
PORTFOLIOS,
JUVENILE BOOKS,
FANCY ARTICLES,
CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we stamp with

INITIALS,

In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS
ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.

je22

OCCIDENTAL HOMESTEAD Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

CAPITAL STOCK, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

THIS ASSOCIATION was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular mouthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 409, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,
New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING
—AND—
FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
jal 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,
SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour; instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11.30 P. M.

mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

STOP THAT COUGHING.

SOME OF YOU CAN'T, AND WE PITY YOU. You have tried every remedy but the ONE destined, by its intrinsic merit, to supersede all similar preparations It is not surprising you should be reluctant to try something else after the many experiments you have made of trashy compounds foisted on the public as a certain cure. but

NEWELL'S
PULMONARY SYRUP

is really the VERY BEST remedy ever compounded for the cure of Coughs. Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Consumption. Thousands of people in California and Oregon have been already benefited by the surprising curative powers of

NEWELL'S PULMONARY SYRUP,

and with one accord give it their unqualified approbation. We now address ourselves to all who are unacquainted with this, the greatest Panacea of the age, for the healing of all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, assuring you that has cured thousands, and it will cure you if you try it. This invaluable medicine is pleasant to the taste, soothing, healing and strengthening in its effects; entirely free from all poisonous or deleterious drugs, and perfectly harmless under all circumstances.

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

Certificates from many prominent citizens of San Francisco accompany every bottle of

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

REDINGTON'S
Flavoring Extracts

ARE MADE FROM FRESH FRUITS. Each bottle holds twice as much as any other brand in the market, consequently they are the cheapest and the best. USE NO OTHER.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Agents for the Pacific Coast.

MARTHA WASHINGTON
HAIR RESTORER.

THIS IS A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY, and stands above comparison with any other article for the Hair ever brought before the public.

A PERFECT

Hair Restorer AND Hair Dresser

BOTH COMBINED IN ONE.

First—It is not a Dye.
Second—Will not Color the Skin.
Third—Will restore Gray Hair to a beautiful Black, Brown, Auburn, or whatever might have been its original color, and cause it to assume its former beauty.
Fourth—Will cure all Humors and Diseases of the Scalp.
Fifth—Will remove Dandruff and Scurf from the head, and keep the hair moist and silk like in its appearance as in youthful days.
Sixth—Will promote a healthy growth.
Seventh—Will prevent it from falling off, and cause it to grow on bald heads where there is life and vitality at the roots, but where these are gone there is no hope of success.
Eighth—The best testimony that can be given will be found inside of each bottle.

Warranted to do all we claim for it, or the money refunded after using two bottles. Try it and be convinced.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Price.....One Dollar.

SIMONDS & CO., Proprietors,
Fitzwilliam, N. H.
REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

REDINGTON & CO.'S
Essence of Jamaica Ginger.

THIS VALUABLE PREPARATION, containing in a highly concentrated form all the properties of the Jamaica Ginger, has become one of the most popular domestic remedies for all diseases of the stomach and digestive organs.

As a tonic it will be found invaluable to all persons recovering from debility, whether produced by fever or otherwise, for whilst it imparts to the system all the glow and vigor that can be produced by wine or brandy, it is entirely free from the renetionary effects that follow the use of spirits of any kind.

It is also an excellent remedy for females who suffer from difficult menstruation, giving almost immediate relief to the spasms that so frequently accompany that period.

It gives immediate relief to Nausea, eased by riding in a railroad car, or by sea-sickness, or other causes.

It is also valuable as an external application for Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, etc.

REDINGTON & CO.,
au4-6m Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

THIS AFTERNOON.....AUGUST 18,

LADY DON,

SUPPORTED BY

Miss Kate Denin,

AND A POWERFUL COMPANY

Will appear in

Orpheus and Eurydice,

which will be produced with gorgeous scenic effects.

THIS EVENING.....AUGUST 18,

Lady Don

Will appear for the First Time in California, as

WILLIAM, in the Nautical Drama of BLACK-EYED SUSAN.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra,	$1 00
Reserved seats,	50c. extra
Parquet,	50
Upper Circle,	25

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,

y19 1m SAN FRANCISCO.

UNION CANDIDATE

FOR

City and County Attorney,

H. M. HASTINGS.

ELECTION PROCLAMATION.

FOR THE MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

PUBLIC NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the Municipal Election in and for the City and County of San Francisco, will be held on WEDNESDAY, September 5th, 1866; and the qualified voters of said city and county are hereby called upon to meet in their respective districts for the purpose of electing the following-named officers at said election, to wit:

Attorney and Counsellor
Auditor.
Tax Collector.
Public Administrator.
Superintendent of Pub Streets, Highways, and Squres.
Chief of Police.

One Supervisor and one School Director in each of the following Districts: First, Third, Fifth, Seventh, Ninth, and Eleventh, for the full term.

Also, one Supervisor in the Eighth District for an unexpired term.

Witness my hand and the seal of the city and county of [SEAL.] San Francisco, this fourteenth day of August, 1866. H. P. COON, Mayor

Attest: CHAS. L. WIGGIN, Clerk. au18

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—Estate of WILLIAM MACMICHAEL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, administrator with the will annexed, of the above named estate, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against William MacMichael, deceased, to exhibit the same, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at his place of business, No 12 Post street, Masonic Temple, in the city and county of San Francisco.

San Francisco, August 18, 1866.

THEODORE L. SCHELL,
Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of William McMichael, deceased.

WILKINS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Administrator. 5t

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

Bianchi's Grand Italian

Opera Troupe.

General Director.....J. P. Crowly
Treasurer.....A. Birrell

NON-SUBSCRIPTION NIGHT

SATURDAY EVENING.....AUGUST 18,

Will be presented Verdi's Opera of ERNANI!

Ulrica	Signora Giovanni Bianchi
Oscar	Louisa Tourney
Sylvano	Mons. Hennecart
Samuel	Mons. Charles
Elvira	Signorina Elvira Brambilla
Ernani	Siguor Eugenio Bianchi
Carlo Quinto	Signor Mancusi
Silva	Signor L. Milleri
Don Riccardo	Herr Schraubstadter
Iago	Mons Ronconvieri
Giovanna	Madame Bernard

In active preparation, and will shortly be produced, Ricci's famous Comic Opera entitled

CRISPINO E LA COMARE,
(THE COBBLER AND THE FAIRY.)

MONDAY—First Night of the New Season.

CONDUCTOR.....MR. RUDOLPH HEROLD
Scenery by Mr. Rugers. Costumes by Mrs Taylor.

Regular Subscription Nights, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Dress Circle, Orchestra and Parquette	$1 00
Reserved seats, 50 cents extra.
Gallery	50

☞ The Box Office is open from 9 A. M. for the securing of reserved seats for season tickets.

DEMOCRATIC

CANDIDATE FOR

Chief of Police,

P. J. WHITE,

OF THE FIRM OF P. J. WHITE & CO.,

au11 No. 412 Front street.

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE

FOR

TAX COLLECTOR,

HENRY A. COBB,

OF THE FIRM OF COBB & SINTON,

jy21 NO. 407 CALIFORNIA STREET.

NOTICE TO TAX-PAYERS.

CLERK'S OFFICE, BOARD OF SUPERVISORS,
San Francisco, August 13, 1866.

Public notice is hereby given that the Books of the Real Estate and Military Assessment Rolls of the city and county of San Francisco for the fiscal year 1866-'67, will be open for examination in this office from 9 A. M. to 4 o'clock P. M., during the sitting of the Board of Equalization.

A Committee of the Board of Equalization will be in session in the chambers of the Board of Supervisors daily (Sundays excepted) from 1 to 3 o'clock P. M., until further notice, for the purpose of receiving and considering applications for the alterations or reduction of assessment upon Real Estate.

All applications for reduction of assessments are required to be verified by each. (See Statutes of 1863-'64, page 189.)

JAS W. BINGHAM.
Clerk of Board of Supervisors.
au18

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY.

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order. au15

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

LIST OF

Late Publications.

Armadale—a Novel—by Wilkie Collins
The Dove in the Eagle's Nest, by the author of The Heir of Redclyffe.
Shakespeare's Delineations of Insanity, Imbecility and Suicide, by A. O. Kellogg, M. D.
595 Pulpit Pungencies with a Table of Contents.
Footlight Flashes, by William Davidge, Comedian.
Hidden Depths—12mo.
Lectures on the Study of History; delivered in Oxford, 1859-61—by Goldwin Smith, M. A.
Kate Marstone; or, Happy Hearts Make Happy Homes.
The Mule Singer—a Novel—by Anna Cora Ritchie (Mowatt.)
Poetical Works of Thomas Buchanan Read—New Edition—3 vols.
Devotions of the Ages; or, Collects, Texts, and Lyrics, illustrative of the Christian Year, by Rev. N. G. Allen.
The Adventures of Captain Castagnette (illustrated, by Gustave Dore.
The Mormon Prophet and His Harem, by Mrs. C. V. Waite.
History of the Gipsies, by Walter Simson.
Josh Billings—His Book.
Beyminstre—a Novel—by the author of The Silent Woman, King's Cope, Mr. Warenne, etc.
Garden Vegetables, and How to Cultivate Them, by Fearing Burr, Jr New Edition.
Brief Biographical Dictionary, compiled and arranged by Rev. Chas Hole and W. A. Wheeler.
Poems of Thomas Hood—New Edition, 12mo.
The Maiden and Married Life of Mary Powell.
The Dean's English, by G. Washington Moon.
President Lincoln Self-portrayed, by John M. Ludlow.
Temperance Recollections—an Autobiography—by John Marsh, D. D.
The Masquerade and other Poems, by John G. Saxe.
Life of Benjamin Silliman, by Geo. P. Fisher, 2 vols
Betsy June Ward—Better ¼ to Artemus.
The Person of Christ, by Philip Schaff, D. D.
Asiatic Cholera, by R. Nelson, M. D.
The Laws of Short Whist, by J. L. Baldwin.
Speeches of Lord Macaulay—a New Edition, 2 vols.
Treasury of Bible Knowledge, by John Ayre.
Martineau's Essays—Philosophical and Theological.
Memoirs of the Right Hon. Richard B. Sheridan, by Thomas Moore.
Gilbert Rugge—a Novel—by the author of A First Friendship.
Short Sermons to Newsboys, by Chas. Loring Brace.
Stanley's History of the Jewish Church, 2d series.
Garden Flowers: How to Cultivate Them, by E. S Rand, Jr.
Adrift in Dixie, by Edmund Kirke.
The Philosophy of Art, by H. Taine.
Life of Emanuel Swedenborg, by William White.
Baked Meats of the Funeral, by Private Miles O'Reilly.
Recommended to Mercy—a Novel—by the author of Taken Upon Trust, Zoe's Band, etc.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street,
jy14 San Francisco.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON TUESDAY, - - - SEPT. 25,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Capital fully paid in Gold Coin	$500,000 00
Surplus, April 30, 1866	154,824 57
Total Assets	$654,824 57

Insure against Loss or Damage by Fire, on Stores, Dwellings, Merchandise, Vessels and Cargoes in Port, and other insurable property.

$50,000 is the largest amount taken on any one risk. This Company reinsures whenever the risks are deemed too large for the locality.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY of STOCKHOLDERS

Under the Constitution and Statutes of California.

ALL LOSSES PAID PROMPTLY IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

W. B. BOURN, President.
D. J. STAPLES, Vice President.
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary. au17 3m

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
Ja27-tf between California and Pine.

DEMOCRATIC

City and County Ticket.

For Chief of Police,
P. J. WHITE.

For Tax Collector,
GENERAL H. A. COBB.

For Auditor,
WASHINGTON BARTLETT.

For Superintendent of Streets,
LEANDER WINTRINGER.

For City and County Attorney,
SELDEN S. WRIGHT.

For Public Administrator,
COL. M. C. SMITH.

For Fire Commissioners,
JOHN BARR, SIMON T. WALSH.

For Supervisors,

WARD		WARD
First	P. H. Daly	Seventh	Peter Wheelan
Third	W. B. Fairman	Eighth	Dr. J. W. Winter
Fifth	M. O'Neil	Ninth	Jas. B. Carson
Eleventh	F. McCoppin

For School Directors,

WARD		WARD
First	Michael Daly	Seventh	T. G. McGuire
Third	Peter Dempsy	Ninth
Fifth	J. C. Shorb	Eleventh	Peter Johnson

For Constables,

First Township	Samuel Bridgewood
Second Township	Cornelius Mooney
Third Township
Fourth Township	Michael Hawkins
Fifth Township	Thomas Agnew
Sixth Township

ADDRESS

To the Voters of San Francisco.

We, the Members of the Democratic County Convention, respectfully addressing ourselves to the Voters of San Francisco, claim for the ticket we have nominated, your approval and support.

We have succeeded in securing gentlemen of irreproachable character and acknowledged fitness to serve as candidates. In making the selection, we have been careful that schemes for personal aggrandizement and mere political success should not shut out from view the future welfare of the community. The peace of the city, protection to property, and fidelity on the part of the custodians and dispensers of the public moneys, are the considerations which have controlled their deliberations.

We are persuaded that a change for the better can be made in the manner of administering the several Departments of the City Government; and this we believe to be the general conclusion in the public mind.

Whilst it is conceded that much credit was due, for a time, to those who managed our municipal affairs in an independent spirit, it is also contended that more recently they have ignored the former proper tests for official position, and have become mere partisans, intolerant in their views and prejudiced in their action. With this change in the spirit of their government, there has also come extravagance in public expenditures, oppression in their license system, and corruption in the police regulations. Reform is therefore needed in the City Government. This reform can be effected only through the agency of the ballot-box. To that end we heartily invite the co-operation of the voters of San Francisco.

Nor should it be forgotten that the result of the approaching local election will, to some extent, affect all the social and monetary interests of our city. Moreover, it will exert an important influence on politics throughout the State; and, in order that the people may fully appreciate the political significance of the victory we fervently hope to achieve, we shall briefly declare the principles which our nominees adhere to, touching their duties and the great issues of the day.

We pledge them to a faithful discharge of the obligation their election will cast upon them.

We pledge them to an unwavering support of those principles of our Government which assert the supremacy and vindicate the dignity of the white race.

We pledge them to the doctrines of the equality of all the States of the American Union, and the right of each individual one to determine, under the Constitution of the United States, the qualification of its electors, and to provide for its local prosperity and domestic happiness in its own way; and

We pledge them to a firm adherance to the policy of the National Administration, looking to the defence of these great principles as the only means calculated to heal our differences, to secure for the Government the undivided affection of the people, and to the Union of the States, that freedom, prestige and power rightfully belonging to a great Republic; and, in conclusion, we declare that they approve of the call for a National Convention, and hope that beneficial results may come of its patriotic purpose.

Finally, we beg leave to say that the evasion practiced by the County Convention of the opposite party on these vital questions, is, in our opinion, designed to accomplish a great political fraud, and trifling with the intelligence of the people and the interests of the State. We condemn as dangerous, ill-timed, and characteristic of Radicalism, the letter and spirit of the address put forth by that body. It is but an appeal to the passions of party at a time when those powerful in war and successful in battle should be just and magnanimous in peace.

By order of the
DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION.
au18

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 14.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, AUGUST 25, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE; 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:

Applications for the Position of Editor.
Podgerings by the Way.
A "Disgusted" Literary Journal.
"The Intellectual Degeneracy of the Clergy."
Italian Opera in London.
The Free Church Movement.
"The Lion's Mouth."
A Model Verdict.
Sea-calls.—A Poem.—By Emilie Lawson.
Minor Editorials.
Amusements.

SELECTED:

"Mark Twain" on his Travels.
The Story of the Burning Ship.
Boggs' Story of Western Life.
An Ancient American Pyramid.
Eyes and Noses.
Italian Women.
Sorrows of a Lecturer.
Bummers.
California Productions in Washington.
Public Marriages.
"Jubilante."
Stories, Sketches, Humor, Miscellaneous Paragraphs, etc.

(For the Californian.)

PODGERINGS BY THE WAY.

No. 5.

STRAWBERRY Valley, so named because there never was a strawberry seen there—but the first way-side inn was kept by one Berry, whose beds were stuffed with straw, hence the name. Who that has travelled over the mountains in early days does not remember with what a sense of satisfaction he dismounted, tired and hungry, from his weary mule, and entered the low ceiling, large public room, to find a cheerful log-fire blazing in that splendid, old fashioned, huge fireplace—vast in its dimensions, hospitable in its bright blaze of pitch pine logs, that threw a ruddy light upon the bronzed faces of the seekers for gold who gathered around it. It was a snug harbor in those days, and is so still; and many a good story has been told as the travellers assembled around its ample hearth, after a solid supper, and smoked their pipes. A good old fashioned fire place is a rare thing in these days of stoves and modern contrivances for warming. Many a night the floor of the old room at Strawberry has been covered with lodgers, who were glad to enjoy its hospitable shelter, and wrap themselves up in their blankets for a night's rest after a long, weary ride over the mountains. Judges, lawyers, and divines have availed themselves of its rough floor to rest their aching bones—it is not necessary now, for beds and good rooms have been added, and all the comforts of a good hotel can be found, and Charley Watson, celebrated for his skill in handling the "ribbons," and who formerly "tooled" a coach and six over the mountains, the crack driver of the Pioneer Stage Company, is now the landlord. Everybody knows Charley Watson, who has now settled down in this snug harbor, and proves that he is just the man that can keep a hotel.

As I descended from the coach the cheerful blaze of the pine logs was a comfortable welcome after a ride over the summit, in the chilly evening air, and Charley stood in the door, smoking a long nine, and greeted me cordially. It would have been a high bid that could have induced me to leave such comfortable quarters. I was bound to cast my fly on the ripples of the American River on the morrow, and try my skill upon the speckled denizens of its foaming eddies. After supper we gathered around the social hearth, and as we smoked and listened to the yarns of the Judge, the hours whiled pleasantly away until bed time. The Judge is a character in his way, and a long residence in the mountains has made him familiar with every creek, and favorite haunts of the grouse and mountain quail—an ardent lover of the gun and rod, he is always ready to pilot a friend and take a hand in the sport; and, as for stories, "wise saws and modern instances," he is unequalled. The Judge supports the dignity of the law, as well as a character as a keen sportsman, and although a little heavy on the scales, continues to bag as many birds, and bring in as many trout as "any other man."

Early next morning the Judge and myself, rod in hand, set out for the river, a hundred yards distant, and although not a favorable morning for the sport, the sun being out bright, we came in at noon with a hundred fine trout. Towards evening Charley and I tried another creek in the vicinity which turned out a first rate place for black flies and mosquitoes, but was no great shakes for trout; however, we made a fair average of it and supped sumptuously on our game.

The stage that came in at dark brought a party of enthusiastic gentlemen from Sacramento, who had come up to put themselves under the guidance of Charley Watson for a trip to Hope Valley for a day's fishing. They were evidently skeptical on the question of creature comforts in that region, for I noticed that several suspicious looking cases were exhumed from the boot of the stage, about which the elder gentleman of the party seemed quite solicitous.

The Sacramento Union was numerously represented in the party, and that ably represented journal must have "run itself" during their absence.

Having been invited to join the party, I mentally calculated upon the chances of being worsted in the piscatorial encounter to come off at Hope Valley, for I saw that they meant business; there was a bustling air and earnestness of manner, and the way they looked after the "tools," argued that they were fully determined on the question and had come there for no light purpose, and something had got to suffer, whether those cases or the fish, I was not then fully able to determine. It was evidently a great relief to get out of Sacramento; it generally is to most people about these days—not that I would insinuate that it is hot there, not at all.

Before separating for the night it was duly arranged that the morrow's sun should rise upon us on the mountain top, which proposition, I noticed, was not received with any great enthusiasm by one or two members of the party, but Charley Watson being the leading spirit, and installed as chief, no voice was raised in expostulation; it was carried that we were to be up early, get our coffee and be off at 5 o'clock; and strange as it may appear, we did get away at 6. The morning was rather misty, and the mountain air bracing, as we rattled over the bridge across the river and wound our way up the grade towards the summit. It was a jolly party, for all felt a sense of relief and freedom from the confinement and restraints of city life. The Judge, from natural exuberance of spirits, was lively, and before we reached the summit he had told more good stories than the note book of the gentleman who took the notes for the Union could contain. Some of them were rather too large sized for the book, but the pencil was busy. About 8 o'clock we reached the summit and halted in front of a modest looking way-side inn; before reaching which, I observed Charley to run his fingers through his hair and settle his cravat with one hand, while the Judge buttoned his vest and shook himself generally. The mystery of this "slicking up" was soon solved, and resolved itself into the comely appearance of a young woman at the front door, broom in hand, who greeted Charley and the Judge cordially, with a bright face and smile of welcome. Charley was a very long time watering his horses, and the Judge had to get out and stretch his legs while the Union Corps, almost to a man, were seized with a desire to smoke and got out to get a light, ignoring the fact that everyone had a pocket full of matches. There was a good deal of "chaffing" between the Judge and the young lady, and some allusions were made to certain young gentlemen which brought the color to her cheeks. After a while we got off, and I proceeded to cross-question the Judge as to who she was. He said her name was Ida, and she was widely known as the Mountain Belle. She was the sole support of her old parents and younger brothers and sisters; was an universal favorite with travellers on the route, and that there was not a teamster on the road who would not doff his coat and fight in her cause. No man would dare utter a word to her discredit; in fact, he could not, for her conduct and life are so perfectly exemplary, as her face would imply. At the dance she is the center of attraction, and as the Judge remarked, "mighty hard to tucker out." Charley, with apparent reluctance, having resumed his reins, cracked his whip and we rattled away. As we did, so I caught the Judge kissing his hand to the lady, which salutation, she acknowledged by a significant wave of her broom, which, fortunately, was too short in the handle to reach the Judge's head. I noticed, however, that he "ducked" at the motion, just as if he was familiar with the uses of that fememinine weapon.

Turning sharply to the right, we struck off through the shady woods, winding about the bases of huge mountain pines, and under leafy bowers of branching oaks, screening us from the sun, which by this time was warming up considerably.

We soon arrived at the edge of the mountain, from which we had a splendid view of Lake Valley, and commenced the descent of the old original grade, over which Hank Monk rattled Mr. Greeley so merrily, and by the same token scared that respectable gentleman ont of several years' growth, or would, had he not already attained his altitude before coming to California. The road is very narrow, barely wide enough for one wagon. On the upper side, huge rocks seem, as it were, poised above your head, ready to drop on to the wagon; the other, steep down, down, beyond any possibility of calculation, as any gentleman rolling down it would cease any arithmetical ones before he had gone a fraction of the distance. Charley rather luxuriated, I thought, in this break-neck drive; and the way we rattled down that steep, rough, and narrow grade was a caution to the party. The Judge had hinted at walking down, but did not like to propose it; and Charley winked at me as he put his head around and looked inside, and observed the Judge, with his hat smashed down on his head, holding on with both hands to the bows either side, feet braced, and face wearing a troubled and pained expression—the troubled countenance indicating slight suspicions on his part that he had rather "go slow," and the bumps, jumps, and "jounces" of the wagon accounted for the balance. The Union was very quiet, scarcely a word being said, except an occasional Oh! when a severer bump than usual brought out this evidence of Jordan's being a hard road to travel. We were not long in going down, and soon our smoking horses brought up at a bridge across a creek of sparkling cold water, just from the snow-clad summits. Here the Union all got down, and recourse was had to the suspicious-looking case in front, and some mysterious rites were performed, indicative, I presume, of gratitude for safe deliverance from Charley Watson's driving and the Greeley grade.

The Judge must have been badly frightened, judging from the fervor with which he rendered his thanks. His attitude was decidedly devotional, head thrown back, eyes turned towards heaven, and the largest end of a black bottle pointing the same way. There was a perceptible vibration in his throat at the same time, and a short clicking sound like the working valves of the hydraulic ram. It looked and sounded very much like drinking, but I won't say so.

On again, and a long mountain road to climb, which, out of compassion to the horses, we walked. Once on the summit of the second range we mounted again, and thenceforth it was all down hill, and the Judge had to hold on again hard, as Charley's blood was up and he fancied himself on the coach with six in hand again. We went down at a break-neck pace—I may say, a very lively gait, and as we descended the last slope Hope Valley lay spread out before us, and the headwaters of the Carson wound its tortuous way through it like a silver thread. Whooray for Hope Valley trout! And while the enthusiasm was at its height we dashed up to the door of a house, and as Charley threw down the reins, sung out, "Hello there, Jim Green!" The individual so addressed rose from the door-step, threw down the stick he was whittling, and answered. "Hello yourself!"

PODGERS.

THERE SEEMS TO BE a very general impression that Mark Twain's Sandwich Island letters to the Sacramento Union possess sufficient intrinsic interest and value to justify their publication in book form. If the writer could be persuaded to collect and revise them, he would have no difficulty in finding a publisher; and we are satisfied that the book would prove both a literary and a pecuniary success.

THE STORY OF THE BURNING SHIP.

WELL, 't is n't a very pleasant life, in the steerage of an emigrant ship bonnd for New Zealand, 'specially if the weather's a bit rongh ; and so we fonnd it. For the next morning, when I went on deck, there was a stiff breeze blowing, the ship heeling over ; and as I thought the night before, so it was—there was nothing in sight but waves all round. One sailor did point to something which he said was home, but it might have been a cloud.

The fonrth night had come, and as I lay in my berth listening to the "wash wash" of the water past the side of the ship, the creaking and groaning of the timbers, and every now and then the heavy bump of a wave against the side, I couldn't help thinking what a little there was between us and death ; and somehow or other the serions thoughts that came kept me wide awake.

It was two bells, I think they call it, for they don't connt time as we do ashore, when all at once I could hear as there was a great bnstle up on deck, where all throngh the watches of the night everything's mostly very quiet. Then there came a good deal of tramping about and running to and fro ; so I gets out of my berth, slips on one or two things, and goes cantionsly np the ladder and gets my head above the hatchway, and then in a moment I saw what was np, and it gave me snch a shock that I nearly let go my hold and fell back into the steerage. There was a thick cloud of smoke issuing out from between the hatches, right in the centre of the ship ; and almost before I conld thoroughly realize it all, or make myself believe as it was true, a woman ran shrieking along the deck in her night-dress, and calling ont those fearful words on board ship—

"Fire! fire! fire!"

Hnndreds of miles from land, standing on a few nailed-together pieces of wood, and them burning beneath your feet.

I couldn't help it : all my bitter feelings of being ill nsed came back, and I says to myself—

"Yonr usual lnck, mate ; wonldn't be you if yon weren't unfortnnate. Bnt never mind ; you have your choice, fire or water." And then I thought of the danger, and I ketches myself snch a thump in the chest, and rolls np my sleeves, and goes up to the captain as was busy giving his orders.

"What shall I do ?" I says.

"Pump !" he shonts ; "and fetch a dozen more np."

Lord bless you ! I had 'em np in no time from amongst the crying women ; and I found time, too, to get the women and children up on deck in the poop, which was farthest from the hatches, where the smoke kept pouring out, besides which the wind took it away from them.

There was plenty of shricking and screaming at first ; bnt they had got the right man in the right place when they chose that captain, for he runs to the poop, where all the shivering things was a-standing, and with a few words he quiets them. Then he runs to the men as was scuffling about, here, there, and everywhere, and gets them all together ; and then at last he gets a line of fellows with bnckets, a lot more at the pumps, and some more at the little engine as was there ; and then when all was ready, and every man standing still at his post, he goes with some more to the hatches and drags up a couple, when up rose a regnlar pillar of fire and smoke, with a snaky, qniet movement, and in a moment every face was lit up, and there was quite a glare spreading far out to sea. Sails, cordage, masts, everything seemed turned into gold. For a moment I couldn't help forgetting the danger, and thinking what a beautiful sight it was ; when directly after there was a regular ringing cheer, the engine and pumps went "clang-clang," and the water was teemed into the burning hold from bucket and engine-nozzle.

How the water hissed and spnttered ! while volumes of smoke and steam rnshed up where it had been all flame but a moment before, and as we saw this we cheered ; but we'd nothing to cheer for ; it was only the fire gathering strength ; and then, as though laughing at the water we poured in, it came dashing, and crawliug, and running up, licking the edges of the hatchway, and setting on fire the tarpaulins at the sides, and then it began to shoot and leap up as if to catch at the cordage and sails.

"Pour it in, my lads," shonted the captain. "Don't be afraid ; we shan't run short of water, like they do at your London fires."

"No," says a chap on my side ; "and there ain't no running away into the next street."

Then I saw the captain run to the man at the wheel, and he changed the course of the ship, so that all the smoke and flame went over the side ; and then at it we went, sending in the water at a tremendous rate, but to all appearance it did no good—not a bit.

"Now, my lads," says the captain, "with a will ;" and then we cheered again ; and that noble fellow stood with the engine-nozzle in his hand, leaning right over the fiery hole, where the flames darted out, scorching him, and there he stood battling with them, and aiming the water where he thought best.

You see I stood close aside him, so that I could see all that he did—a brave fellow—and it was hot, too. You know I was taking the buckets as they were passed to me, and sending the water in with a regular splash as far as I could every time ; and the captain nodded at me every now and then, and, "Well done !" he says, when it was him as ought to have had the praise.

It was like looking down into the mouth of a furnace ; and, as far as I could see, we might just as well have been playing with a couple of boy's sqnirts ; but I knew enough of duty to feel what I ought to do ; and thongh I'd have liked to have been aside the wife to comfort her, my dnty was to stand there a pouring in what there water till I couldn't do it no longer ; and the more it didn't seem no good, the more I warmed up —obstinate like—and meant to try, for I didn't see any fun in being beaten off by a few flames and sparks, while the look as I got now and then from the captain went right through me, and in went the water.

All at once a lot of the sailors stops pumping, and one shouts out—

"'Tain't no good, mates. Boats ont !"

But he hadn't hardly said it, before I saw the captain dart back ; and then there was a bright light as the copper branch of the hose-pipe flashed through the air, and then down came the sailor on the deck.

"Back to your work, men," sang out the captain ; "and let a man go to the boats if he dares !" And then they stood hanging about, muttering, and one Dntch chap pulls out a knife. Just at the same minute, too, a couple of the sailors as had been handing me the buckets strikes work too, a-saying they'd be hanged if they'd stop there and be frizzled.

I felt that if the men did as they liked, it would be all over with us : and that meant a regular rush to the boats, while the poor women and children were left to burn ; so what did I do but I ups with the leather bucket I had in my hand—I've often laughed since—and brings it down like a 'stinguisher right on the top of number one's head ; as to t'other—he was a little chap, and I'm six foot and pretty strong—I gets hold of him by the scruff of the neck and strap of his trousers. and afore he knew where he was, I had him up in the air, and over the hole where the flames were pouring up, and so close, too, that he could feel the scorching ; and then— I ain't much given to swearing, but I rapped out something fierce, that if he didn't work I'd hurl him in.

Lord, you should have heard what a shriek there was as the fellow twisted about like an eel to get away, and then I put him a little nearer ; when he begged and prayed to be put down, and he'd work till he dropped ; and then up comes the captain, for he'd bolted off into the cabin, but now rushed out again with a revolver in each hand.

"Well done, my man," he shouts to me, for he saw what I did ; and then he gives me one of the pistols, and sworc he'd shoot the first man as disobeyed, and I'm blessed if I didn't believe he would, if they'd have tried it on ; but they didn't, but began pumping away like mad again, and we two went to work pouring in the water, while I'm sure I heard a regular groan from the captain, though his face was like a bit o' wood.

This didn't take above five minutes ; but I believe it lost ns the ship, though we had seemed to make such a little impression when we turned on the water. But five minutes at such a time was ruin ; the flame rose higher and higher, and the heat was awful ; so that, do what we would, we were beat back, and instead of a quiet crawling flame now, there was a regular roar, and the wind set towards the great fiery tongues in a fierce draught.

"Stick to it, my man," says the captain, in a low voice. "It's our only chance."

"And I wouldn't give much for it, sir," I says, in the same tone.

"Hush !" he says ; and then to the men, "Pump away, my lads !"

They pumped away hearty enough, and kept trying on a cheer ; but it soon could be seen with half an eye that the ship must go, for the flames darted up, and, almost before you knew it, the rigging was on fire, and the tongues like leaping from rope to rope, till the tarry things blazed furiously, right up to the mainmast head, and little fiery drops of burning tar kept falling on to the deck, or cissing into the sea ; while for far enough off, out into the dark night, the great flaky sparks went flying along for all the world like a beautiful golden snow-storm.

"There," says the captain, throwing down the copper branch with which he had played on the fire, and shaking his fist right in the flames, so that they must have burnt it—"there," he says, savagely, "I've fought it out with you, and you've beat ! Now for life saving !"

And then, quietly and coolly, he had one boat lowered down, with the first mate in and a crew of sailors, and the shrieking women and children lowered in, while the quiet ones he kept back. Then there was a water-cask and a lot of biscuit-bags thrown in, and that boat, well loaded, pnshed off on the calm sea, and lay to, watching us. Then the second mate was ordered into the second boat, with a crew of sailors ; water and bags of biscuit were thrust in ; and then, well loaded with women and children, and one or two of the men passengers, that was carefully lowered down, unhooked and pushed off.

The other two boats were not swnng over the sides, but lay between the masts of the ship, right in the middle of the deck, and were full of stores and odd things put there to be ont of the way ; but the captain and men left soon had tackling fastened to the boat that was right in front of the fire, and it was hauled up, swung clear, and lowered down, with a couple of men in, and they rowed it back to the hinder part of the ship, while we who had been launching it had to make a regular dash through the flames, which now extended nearly across the deck. One man, however, did not dare come through, but plunged overboard and swam after the boat till he was took in.

"Now, then," said the captain ; and the rest of the women were slung down.

I did not mean to go as long as I could help the captain ; and then half a dozen of the men passengers were lowered down, and they were just going to shove off, when I shouts out—

"Stop !" and the captain turns round angrily to me ; and I says, "No water !"

Sure enough they had none, and a little cask that stood on the deck was slung down, and they were going to shove off again, when I heard a shriek as went through and through me, and saw a bright glare ; the man at the rudder leaned over, while at the same moment there was a roar and a rush of fearful light, and the great mainmast blazing from top to bottom, and covered with burning rope and canvas, toppled over towards where the boat lay, for the fire had been eating into it below deck for long enough. It was all in a moment, and like the flashing of some great sheet of lightning, as in the midst of a wild and fearful cry it fell right towards the boat.

That was a fearful moment, that was, and we held our breath with terror ; and I—I could not help it—I covered my face with my hands and dared not look, till I heard a loud cheer, and saw the boat safely floating within a very few yards of the half-extinct mast, which had narrowly missed falling upon the little haven of safety.

And now they were going to get the last boat out, and the three others lay off at a little distance, while above the hoarse orders of the captain there was the crackling and roar of the flames, now leaping up at a fearful rate. And yet it was a splendid sight, in spite of the horror ; for every now and then pieces of the copper wire rope used in the rigging regularly caught fire, and burned with a most beautiful blue light, brighter than in any firework I ever saw ; while now the foremast had taken fire, and the flames were tearing along the rigging till the ropes seemed illuminated with little beads and tongues of fire. The heat grew awful, and every now and then pieces of blazing ropes, spars and blocks, fell, red-hot and glowing, into the sea, to send up little columns of hissing steam. The whole of the centre of the ship was now on fire, and the flames rose prodigiously, floating off, and flashing amidst the clouds of smoke ; while far away, still lightly flitted and spun about the golden flaky snow, eddying amongst the smoke, and darting far on high, in the most beautiful way imaginable.

I think I said before how the tremendous heat caused a regular draught to set towards the fire, so that as you were almost scorched before, the wind came with quite a cold rush behind ; but then, how it made the flames roar again, and burn more fiercely than ever ! It was a sickening sight ; for every now and then the cruel forky tongues seemed to keep lapping at and threatening us ; then dancing and licking everything up, as if in devilish joy at the prospect of soon devouring us poor sinners.

It was a horrible sight, and though I didn't show it, yet I could feel my heart sink every time I was idle for a few moments, when I went at it again like a savage. I didn't go down on my knees to pray ; but—I don't know—I think I prayed earnestly in my heart then, and though I would gladly have been with the wife safe in the other boat, yet I couldn't feel as it was suited with a fellow's duty to leave such a man as that captain had showed himself all in the lurch ; so I says to myself, "Be a man, too, Phil ;" and I did try to, anyhow.

All at once the flames seemed to veer round, and began blowing towards us, while the position of the boats was changed ; and I couldn't understand it, till I saw the captain run from helping to get the last boat—the one as was on the deck close to the mizzen-mast—over the side ; and then I found it was the man had left the steering wheel, and had run up towards the boat.

"Back !" I heard the captain say ; "back, or I'll fire !"

"Fire away, cap," says the man, sulkily ; "one may just as well die by fire one way as another, and I won't stand there and be burnt." And then the captain's hand—the one as held the pistol—fell down by his side, and he looked regularly done.

"What's up ?" I says. "Can I do ?" and I followed the captain to the wheel, which he turned so as to put the head of the ship right once more ; and as he did it, she just changed round again ; but while all this had been going on, the mizzen or third mast took fire, and now was blazing away fiercely.

"Hold on here, my man," says the captain, "and keep the wheel just as it is. That's right: hold the spokes firm; and if her head swings round, call to me to come and help you."

"All right," I says; "but mind, I don't understand it a bit." And now my troubles seemed to begin; for though it was bad enough to be bustling about fancying that the ship would either go down or you'd be burnt every moment, yet to stand stock-still holding on to the spokes of that wheel was awful, and do what I would to stop it, a regular tremble came all over me, and my knees kept on shake, shake, shake.

They got the boat over the side, and then the men rushed over one another to get in, and it was only by stamping about and hitting at them that the captain got the poor chaps to take in the things they wanted; such as food, which he fetched out of the cabin himself; and water, which they did sling in, but dropped one little cask overboard. But, one way or another, he got them at last to take in a good many things such as they'd want, and a compass; and then, with three more men, he rushed down to the cabin again for more food—biscuit-bags—saying as the other boats would want more, and that we must supply 'em. And then up they came staggering and shaking, one man with a little water-keg, and the captain with a side o' bacon, and two men with bags o' biscuit; and they goes to the side, and I wished my job was done as I saw 'em go.

All at once one of the men gives a yell, throws down his bag, and leaps bang overboard, and the others, running after him, did so too; and then I could see that the cowardly beggars had pushed off--for they lay close under the side, were I couldn't see 'em before, and now they were rowing hard to get away, and I could see that the boat was so full that the least thing must make her fill and sink.

It was pitiful to hear the shrieks of those poor fellows as we left behind, as they swam with all their might to get up to the boat, and it was pitiful to see, for it was as light as day, and the waves that gently rose and fell seemed waves of blood --glowing blood--with golden crests as they softly broke. But though one man swam so fast that he got up the boat, they pushed him off with the oars; and then I saw him cling to them, and one man pulled out a knife to stab at him if he came nearer; while just then I saw the boat-hook rise up and fall with a heavy thud on the poor chap's head, and he went under, and I said, "God help him!" for he came up no more.

There were two more swimming after them, and when the next saw all this, he just turned round, and looked back at the ship, and paddled with his hands a bit, and then stretching them straight up towards the sky, he gave one wild, bitter shriek, and he went under; and this time I tried to say, "God help him!" but it was only my lips that moved.

There was the other, though, a fine lusty young fellow, and as soon as he saw what took place he turned off to the left and tried to reach the nearest boat of the other three; and manfully he swam for it, raising himself well up in the water at every stroke, and gradually lessening the distance till he got close up to the stern, where I could see quite plain some one holding out his hands to him, and he was took aboard the boat.

Now, all this took place in a very few minutes; and, in spite of the danger, we, the two last on board, could not help stopping to gaze at the terrible incident; but now the captain comes up and takes my hand, and says—

"Brother, it was a cowardly, cruel, selfish action: and I don't know but what I'd rather die with a brave man than live with curs."

I know my hand shook, but I don't think my voice did, though I thought of life being sweet, as I said to him—

"Is it very hard to die, captain?"

"Yes," he says, "I believe it is, to a strong man; and as God gave us life, and we've done our duty so far, why we must finish it by trying to save two more."

"But how?" I says, getting hold of him.

"Don't leave the wheel," he says; and then, again, "But it don't matter—she makes no way. Lend a hand here."

And I helped him, and together, roasting almost, we dragged three great fowl-coops and a grating to the side, and he tied them together—lashed them, he called it—in no time; then we shoved them overboard; and as the vessel slowly swung round, we were out o' sight o' the boats, which were about a quarter of a mile off. He had a rope to the coops so that they could not float off, and as he told me, I slid down on to them and squatted there trembling, while he lowered down to me the little water-keg, some rope, the bacon, and two of the biscuit-bags. Then he pitched some loose pieces of wood-work and the cover of the cabin stairs and a hatch thing and tarpaulin into the water by me; slid down the rope, and was by my side in a few minutes; with the coops sinking about, so that I was glad to lower myself into the water and hold on.

"That's right," he says, opening his knife with his teeth and cutting the rope, and then getting the tarpaulin and bits of wood and things in the centre in the handiest way possible —same as only a sailor could do. He tells me to hold on tight, and then lowering himself into the water he pushes off from the burning ship and begins swimming and guiding our bit of raft away very slowly, but still farther and farther off.

"I'll lash the coops and the grating together," he says, "as soon as we're out of danger."

"Out of danger!" I says; "and when will that be?"

"Well," he says, "I mean when we are out of reach of being sucked down when she sinks."

"Will she sink?" I says.

"Yes," he says, "and before long now;" and then he went on swimming hard, while I could do nothing but watch first the boats and then the burning ship.

It was grand, though awful, to see the noble vessel standing there like a pyramid of fire whose heat we could yet feel on our scorched faces. From every part now the flames were rushing, even from the cabin windows beneath where I had so lately been standing, and I could hardly keep from shuddering as I thought of the awful danger.

It was hard work forcing the raft through the water on account of the breeze which set toward the ship; but we got farther and farther away, and were some distance off when the mizzen-mast went blazing over the side; but still the captain said we were not safe, and swam on till we could not feel the breeze; and at length, panting and exhausted, he hung on motionless, and said we must risk it now.

Then we were both silent, and watched the boats now farther away from us, and the blazing ship seemed to be the centre of a glorious ring of light, on the outside of which, like sparks, we all lay waiting for the end we knew was soon to come. Everywhere else was dark as pitch, not even a star to be seen, while the waves just rose and curled a little over as they washed against our our raft; excepting the dull roar and crackle of the flames, everything was as still as death.

All at once I started, for the captain spoke sadly as he looked at his vessel; and out of the silence his voice sounded wild and strange—

"If I'd had a crew like you, my man, I think we could have saved her;" and then he spoke no more, for just then, from being quite still, the good ship seemed to roll a little towards us, and then to the other side, slowly, and as if just bending to the breeze; and then we could almost see the water creeping up her burning sides as clouds of steam arose; and with one calm, steady dip forward she seemed to plunge right down beneath the golden waters. Then there was a rising and a falling of the sea, and a deep, dense darkness, out of which close by me came one of the bitterest, heart-tearing sobs I ever heard from the breast of man; and I did not speak, for I felt that it was the captain sorrowing for the loss of his good ship.

For a good piece the silence was as deep as the darkness, and then the captain was the first to break it in quite a cheerful voice—

"Can you lay your hand on the rope?" he says; and I passed it to him, and then I could hear him in the dark busily at work tying and fastening; and at last he says, "Now crawl on again; it will bear you better;" and faint and wearily I managed to crawl on, and lay with my legs in the water and my head on the bag of biscuit; and directly after I felt him crawl on too, and we took hold of hands and lay there in the deep darkness while he said that prayer out loud in such a soft, deep voice—that prayer as we first learnt kneeling down years ago by our mother's knee. When he came to "Delivor us from evil," he stopped short; and soon, worn out there in the great ocean, floating on a few pieces of wood, we both felt in Whose hands we were, and slept till the warm, bright sun shone upon us and told us that another day was here.

The first thing the captain did was to stand up and look round, and then he said he could see only one boat; but he hoisted up one of the pieces of wood, and wedged it in the coop, with a handkerchief flying at the top, after which we made a hearty meal of the biscuit, raw bacon, and water. After this the captain got one of the coops on the other, and by binding and lashing he made a much higher and better raft, so that we could keep our biscuit and bacon out of the water, and sit dry ourselves.

And so we lay all that day till towards evening, when we found that the boat was coming towards us, and just at dusk it was within hail; and if ever I'd felt hopeful or joyful before in my life, it was then. They had no room for us, but they took us in tow, and the weather keeping calm, we all rowed and worked in turns, steering according to the captain's direction for the nearest land; for when our turn came we two went into the boat, and two others came out on to the raft, and so we toiled on for days, when one morning there was a joyful cry—

"A sail! a sail!"

And it was, too, within a mile of us, plainer and plainer as that glorious sun rose; and then some laughed, some cried, and one or two seemed half mad with joy, as after a while she ran down towards us, picked us up, and proved to be a British-man-of-war, homeward bound.

In another week I was back in the port I left, without clothes, without money, but with as good and true a friend in Captain Ellis as ever walked. I had life, and with it came hope; and somehow, since then, things have prospered with me in the old country—the old home that I once left to go far at sea.

AN ANCIENT AMERICAN PYRAMID.

In the great American desert, which lies principally on the west bank of the Colorado, and between that river and the California range of mountains, ancient ruins exist in different localities. Baron Von Humboldt, during his researches on the American continent, discovered abundant evidence of the existence, at some greatly remote period, of a race of people entirely unlike, and apparently superior to, those inhabiting the continent at the time of its discovery by Europeans.

These evidences are becoming every day more and more conclusive, as the energy and love of travel of the American people lead them over its most forbidden, sterile and inhospitable wastes.

Recently a party of five young men, from one of the Western States, ascended the Colorado for nearly two hundred miles above the mouth of the Gila, their object being to discover if possible, some large tributary from the west, by which they might make the passage of the desert, and enter California by a new, more direct, and easier route, as numerous small streams were known to exist on the eastern slope of the mountains, that were either lost in the sands of the desert or united with the Colorado through tributaries that were unknown.

They found the country on both sides of the Colorado barren of every vegetable product, and very level and monotonous, but after passing on a considerable distance without any change, an object appeared on the plain to the west, which has so much the appearance of a work of art, from the regularity of its outline and its isolated position, that they determined to visit it.

They passed the distance of five miles over a barren, sandy plain, when they reached the base of one of the most wonderful objects, considering its location, which was the very home of desolation, that the mind can possibly conceive of; nothing less than an immense stone pyramid, composed of layers or courses of from eighteen inches to nearly three feet in thickness, and from five to eight feet in length. It had a level top of more than fifty feet square, though it was evident that it had been completed, and that some great convulsion of nature had displaced its entire top, as it was evidently lying on one of its sides, a huge and broken mass nearly covered by the sands.

This pyramid differs in some respects from the Egyptian pyramid. It is, or was, more slender or pointed; and while those of Egypt are composed of steps or layers, receding as they rise, this American pyramid was, undoubtedly, a more finished structure. The outer surface of the blocks was evidently cut to an angle, that gave the structure, when new and complete, a smoothe or regular surface from top to bottom.

From the present level of the sands that surround it there are fifty-two distinct layers of stone, that will average at least two feet each; this gives its present height one hundred and four feet, so that before its top was displaced it must have been at least twenty feet higher than at present. How far it extends beneath the sands could not be easily determined.

Such is the age of this immense structure, that the perpendicular joints between the blocks are worn away from five to ten inches at the bottom of each joint, and the entire pyramid is so much worn by the storms, the vicissitudes, and the corrodings of centuries, as to make it easy of ascent.

By whom, at what age of the world, or for what purpose this pyramid was erected, will probably forever remain a hidden mystery.

Other evidences were discovered of a nature that would seem to make it certain that this portion of country, now the most barren, was once the garden and granary of the continent, and the abode of millions of our race. Though the party were unsuccessful in being able to cross the desert at this point, yet they came to the conclusion that, at some greatly remote period, this desert was occupied by a people of whom all existing history is silent.

Flowers in Prison.—In one of the prison yards of Millbank, England, there grow very common daisies; occasionally one of the convicts, eluding for an instant the eye of the matron, will snatch one of these and hide it as if it were a priceless gem; sometimes she will lend it, and instances have been known of its passing from hand to hand on many short visits; oftener its possession is made the subject of quarrel, which results only in betraying the presence of the contraband article. Some years ago, a matron, making her round of inspection, saw one of the rudest and most repulsive of her charges sitting with her elbows on the table, staring at one of these common flowers. The woman was not conscious that any one saw her, and was for a time herself—her old self of years ago, when she played among the daisies and laughed with the sunshine. She looked long at the flower with a wistful gaze, then dropped her head on the table before her, and wept till the tears forced themselves through her interlocked fingers. The daisy had spoken to the woman's heart. Six months afterward the same matron found it carefully pressed between two leaves of her prison Bible, and when the doors opened for the poor creature's release, her daisy went with her, her choicest, almost her only treasure.

"MARK TWAIN" ON HIS TRAVELS.

AT SEA AGAIN.

BOUND for Hawaii, to visit the great volcano and behold the other notable things which distinguish this island above the remainder of the group, we sailed from Honolulu on a certain Saturday afternoon, in the good schooner Boomerang.

The Boomerang was about as long as two street cars, and about as wide as one. She was so small (though she was larger than the majority of the inter-island coasters) that when I stood on her deck I felt but little smaller than the Colossus of Rhodes must have felt when he had a man-of-war under him.

The little low-ceiled cabin below was rather larger than a hearse, and as dark as a vault. It had two coffins on each side—I mean two bunks—though Mr. Brown, with that spirit of irreverence which is so sad a feature of his nature, preferred to call the bunk he was allotted his shelf. A small table, capable of accommodating three persons at dinner, stood against the forward bulkhead, and over it hung the dingiest whale-oil lantern that ever peopled the obscurity of a dungeon with grim and ghostly shapes. The floor room unoccupied was not extensive. One might swing a cat in it, perhaps, but then it would be fatal to the cat to do it. The hold forward of the bulkhead had but little freight in it, and from morning till night a villainous old rooster, with a voice like Baalam's ass, and the same disposition to use it, strutted up and down in that part of the vessel and crowed. He usually took dinner at 6 o'clock, and then, after an hour devoted to meditation, he mounted a barrel and crowed a good part of the night. He got hoarser and hoarser all the time, but he scorned to allow any personal consideration to interfere with his duty, and kept up his labors in defiance of threatened diphtheria.

Sleeping was out of the question when he was on watch. He was a source of genuine aggravation and annoyance to me. It was worse than useless to shout at him or apply offensive epithets to him—he only took these things for applause, and strained himself to make more noise. Occasionally, during the day, I threw potatoes at him through an aperture in the bulkhead, but he simply dodged them and went on crowing.

The first night, as I lay in my coffin, idly watching the dim lamp swinging to the rolling of the ship, and snuffing the nauseous odors of bilge water, I felt something gallop over me. Lazarus did not come out of his sepulchre with a more cheerful alacrity than I did out of mine. However, I turned in again when I found it was only a rat. Presently something galloped over me once more. I knew it was not a rat this time, and I thought it might be a centipede, because the Captain had killed one on deck in the afternoon. I turned out. The first glance at the pillow showed me a repulsive sentinel perched upon each end of it—cockroaches as large as peach leaves—fellows with long, quivering antennæ and fiery, malignant eyes. I made a bed on the floor and lay down.

In a few moments the rooster was crowing with uncommon spirit, a procession of cockroaches had arrived and camped in my hair, and a party of fleas were throwing double summersets about my person in the wildest disorder, and taking a bite every time they struck. I was beginning to feel really annoyed. I got up and put my clothes on and went on deck.

"ROLL ON, SILVER MOON."

It was compensation for all my sufferings to come unexpectedly upon so beautiful a scene as met my eye—to step suddenly out of the sepulchral gloom of the cabin and stand under the strong light of the moon—in the center, as it were, of a glittering sea of liquid silver—to see the broad sails straining in the gale, the vessel keeled over on her side, the angry foam hissing past her lee bulwarks, and sparkling sheets of spray dashing high over her bows and raining upon her decks; to brace myself and hang fast to the first object that presented itself, with hat jammed down and coat tails whipping in the breeze, and feel that exhileration that thrills in one's hair and quivers down his back-bone when he knows that every inch of canvas is drawing and the vessel cleaving through the billows at her utmost speed. There was no darkness, no dimness, no obscurity there. All was brightness, every object was vividly defined. Every prostrate Kanaka; every coil of rope; every calabash of poi; every puppy; every seam in the flooring; every bolthead; every object, however minute, showed sharp and distinct in its every outline; and the shadow of the broad mainsail lay black as a pall upon the deck, leaving Brown's white upturned face glorified and his body in a total eclipse.

I ENDEAVOR TO ENTERTAIN THE SEASICK MAN.

I turned to look down upon the sparkling animalculæ of the South Seas and watch the train of jeweled fire they made in the wake of the vessel. I——

"Oh, me!"

"What is the matter, Brown?"

"Oh, me!"

"You said that before, Brown. Such tautology——"

"Tautology be hanged! This is no time to talk to a man about tautology when he is sick—so sick—oh, my! and has vomited up his heart and—ah, me—oh hand me that soup dish, and don't stand there hanging to that bulkhead looking like a fool!"

I sat down by him to talk to him and so cause the tedious hours to pass less wearily and monotonous, if possible. I talked to him for some time, but strangely enough, pathetic narratives did not move his emotions, eloquent declamation did not inspirit him, and the most humorous anecdotes failed to make him even smile. He seemed as distressed and restless, at intervals—albeit the rule of his present case was to seem to look like an allegory of unconditional surrender—hopeless, helpless and indifferent—he seemed as distressed and restless as if my conversation and my anecdotes were irksome to him. It was because of this that at last I dropped into poetry. I said I had been writting a poem—or rather, been paraphrasing a passage in Shakspeare—a passage full of wisdom, which I thought I might remember easier if I reduced it to rhyme—hoped it would be pleasant to him—said I had taken but few liberties with the original; had preserved its brevity and terseness, its language as nearly as possible, and its ideas in their regular sequence—and proceeded to read it to him, as follows:

POLONIUS' ADVICE TO HIS SON—PARAPHRASED FROM HAMLET.

BEWARE of the spoken word! Be wise;
Bury thy thoughts in thy breast;
Nor let thoughts that are unmatured
Be ever in acts expressed.

Be thou courteous and kindly toward all—
Be familiar and vulgar with none;
But the friends thou hast proved in thy need,
Hold thou fast till life's mission is done!

Shake not thy faith by confiding
In every new-begot friend.
Beware thou of quarrels—but, in them,
Fight them out to the bitter end.

Give thine ear unto all that would seek it,
But to few thy voice impart;
Receive and consider all censure,
But thy judgment seal in thy heart.

Let thy habit be ever as costly
As thy purse is able to span;
Never gaudy, but rich—for the raiment
Full often proclaimeth the man.

Neither borrow nor lend—oft a loan
Both lose h itself and a friend,
And to borrow relaxeth the thrift
Whereby husbandry gaineth its end

But lo! above all set this law:
UNTO THYSELF BE THOU TRUE!
Then never toward any canst thou
The deed of a false heart do.

As I finished, Brown's stomach cast up its contents, and in a minute or two he felt entirely relieved and comfortable. He then said that the anecdotes and the eloquence were "no good," but if he got seasick again he would like some more poetry.

THE ZONES OF THE EARTH CONCENTRATED.

Monday morning we were close to the island of Hawaii. Two of its high mountains were in view—Mauna Loa and Hualalai. The latter is an imposing peak, but being only ten thousand feet high is seldom mentioned or heard of. Mauna Loa is fourteen thousand feet high. The rays of glittering snow and ice, that clasped its summit like a claw, looked refreshing when viewed from the blistering climate we were in. One could stand on that mountain (wrapped up in blankets and furs to keep warm), and while he nibbled a snow-ball or an icicle to quench his thirst he could look down the long sweep of its sides and see spots where plants are growing that grow only where the bitter cold of Winter prevails; lower down he could see sections devoted to productions that thrive in the temperate zone alone; and at the bottom of the mountain he could see the home of the tufted cocoa palms and other species of vegetation that grow only in the sultry atmosphere of eternal Summer. He could see all the climes of the world at a single glance of the eye, and that glance would only pass over a distance of eight or ten miles as the bird flies.

THE REFUGE FOR THE WEARY.

We landed at Kailua (pronounced Ki-loo-ah,) a little collection of native grass houses reposing under tall cocoanut trees—the sleepiest, quietest, Sundayest looking place you can imagine. Ye weary ones that are sick of the labor and care, and the bewildering turmoil of the great world, and sigh for a land where ye may fold your tired hands and slumber your lives peacefully away, pack up your carpet-sacks and go to Kailua! A week there ought to cure the saddest of you all.

THE FAMOUS ORANGE AND COFFEE REGION.

It was only about fifteen miles from Kailua to Kealakekua Bay, either by sea or land, but by the former route there was a point to be weathered where the vessel would be the sport of contrary winds for hours, and she would probably occupy the entire day in making the trip, whereas we could do it on horseback in a little while and have the cheering benefit of a respite from the discomforts we had been experiencing on the vessel. We hired horses from the Kanakas, and miserable affairs they were, too. They had lived on meditation all their lives, no doubt, for Kailua is fruitful in nothing else. I will mention, in this place, that horses are plenty everywhere in the Sandwich Islands—no Kanaka is without one or more—but when you travel from one island to another, it is necessary to take your own saddle and bridle, for these articles are scarce. It is singular baggage for a sea voyage, but it will not do to go without it.

The ride through the district of Kona to Kealakekua Bay took us through the famous coffee and orange section. I think the Kona coffee has a richer flavor than any other, be it grown where it may and call it by what name you please.

There are no finer oranges in the world than those produced in the district of Kona; when new and fresh they are delicious. The principal market for them is California, but of course they lose much of their excellence by so long a voyage. About 500,000 oranges were exported last year against 15,000 in 1852. The orange culture is safe and sure, and is being more and more extensively engaged in every year. We passed one orchard that contained ten thousand orange trees.

There are many species of beautiful trees in Kona—noble forests of them—and we had numberless opportunities of contrasting the orange with them. The verdict rested with the orange. Among the varied and handsome foliage of the Ko, Koa, Kukui, bread-fruit, mango, guava, peach, citron, ohia, and other fine trees, its dark, rich green cone was sure to arrest the eye and compel constant exclamations of admiration. So dark a green is its foliage, that at a distance of a quarter of a mile the orange tree looks almost black.

WOODLAND SCENERY.

The ride from Kailua to Kealakekua Bay is worth taking. It passes along on high ground—say a thousand feet above sea level—and usually about a mile distant from the ocean, which is always in sight, save that occasionally you find yourself buried in the forest in the midst of a rank, tropical vegetation and a dense growth of trees, whose great boughs overarch the road and shut out sun and sea and everything, and leave you in a dim, shady tunnel, haunted with invisible singing birds and fragrant with the odor of flowers. It was pleasant to ride occasionally in the warm sun, and feast the eye upon the ever-changing panorama of the forest (beyond and below us,) with its many tints, its softened lights and shadows, its billowy undulations sweeping gently down from the mountain to the sea. It was pleasant also, at intervals, to leave the sultry sun and pass into the cool, green depths of this forest and indulge in sentimental reflections under the inspiration of its brooding twilight and its whispering foliage. The jaunt through Kona will always be to me a happy memory.—"Mark Twain," in the Sacramento Union.

"EVER OF THEE."—A sad story is connected with the name of the beautiful song, "Ever of Thee," which has been sung and admired by so many in this country and in Europe. Foley Hall was a gentleman by birth and education. Wealthy in his own right, with large expectations, he led a heedless life, not choosing his associates, but allowing himself to be drawn into the society of the vicious. His property soon disappeared, and he was left without resources sufficient to buy his daily bread. His musical talents had been highly cultivated, but, as he never heeded them, he scarcely knew to what degree they could be made available. In his distress, however, he wrote the charming song, "Ever of Thee." A London publisher gave him one hundred dollars for it, but that amount with such a spendthrift would not last long. He wrote other songs, but the money not coming in as fast as he wished, in a weak moment he forged the name of his publisher, and although every effort was made (even by the publisher) to save him, it was all to no use, and poor Foley Hall went to Newgate, and died broken hearted before his trial came on.

A STRANGE CUSTOM.—A correspondent writing from Vienna, the capital of Austria, relates the following concerning the burial customs of the Imperial family:

We had stepped into one of the churches to see the splendid tomb erected by Canova over the remains of Queen Christina, of Sweden, when we were told that in an adjoining chapel was to be seen the hearts of all the deceased members of the royal family. So following our guide through a dark passage, down a pair of stairs, into what was called the Lorette chapel, we were permitted to look through an iron grating into a circular cell, where, on two shelves, were ranged fifty-four hearts, each contained in a silver vase or urn, and arranged in the order of decease. The urns were of different sizes, the one containing the heart of Maria Therese being nearly twice as large as any of the others. We were told that when any one of the reigning sovereigns dies, the heart is put with this curious collection in the cell under the church, and the bodies committed to another church in the city, and the intestines to another.

[For the Californian.]

ITALIAN OPERA IN LONDON.

WE give below an extract from a private letter received from a gentleman of this city now travelling in Europe and enjoying the opportunity of hearing large orchestras and celebrated singers for the first time. It will be remembered that prices of admission to the opera in London are enormously high compared with those here, and that the ordinary expenses of management (leaving out the salaries of artists) are comparatively low:

LONDON, June 28, 1866.

* * * * * * * * * * *

"It is now forty-two days since my arrival in London, during which time I have seen a great deal of the town and adjacent country, and been very much pleased with both. The only difficulty, is to make a choice of amusements and not remain in the position of the starving donkey between several stacks of hay.

"To begin with the highest on the list of enjoyments, I must speak of the Opera, which is now given in grand style at two houses—Patti being the chief attraction at Covent Garden, and Titiens at "Her Majesty's." The first opera I heard was Don Giovanni at Covent Garden, with Patti as "Zerlina," Tricci as "Dona Anna," Sherrington as "Elvira," and Monsieur Faure as the "Don." The latter's singing was fine, but his acting, to my mind, was too quiet—not so good, I thought, as Morelli's. The "Ottavio" was Brignoli, a stick in acting, and not well up in his part. The other characters were taken in perfection; and the orchestra, of about a hundred, the scenery and the mounting of the opera, were magnificent. The ball-room scene was given as Mozart intended it should be; the stage crowded with peasants, ladies and gentlemen; the dresses beautiful, rich and characteristic; the furniture superb, the gardens seen through the windows at the back; the balconies on each side filled with real musicians playing on real instruments, and striking up as the successive dances commenced in different parts of the hall, and finally the three bands playing all together—yet each in different measure. All this made the scene most wonderful and effective. Patti was of course charming in her role, but had a much better opportunity for the display of her vocal powers in "Lucia," which I heard a few nights afterwards. I never enjoyed singing so much before. The flexibility, sweetness and compass of her voice, are simply amazing; and, joined with her exquisite acting, fully justify her popularity all over Europe. Her intonation, too, is faultless, and she skips the longest intervals with the precision of any instrument you can name; I believe she could sing all your flute fantasias without giving herself much trouble. I heard her next in Il Barbiere with Ronconi, Ciampi, Tagliafico and Mario, and for the first time saw what I considered an absolutely perfect operatic performance. Mario is getting a little old now, but sang and acted his part of the "Count Almaviva" like an artist and a thorough gentleman. In the music lesson scene Patti sang "Home, Sweet Home," and the Bolero from "I Vespri Sicilienne," and at the end of the Opera the whole troupe united in "God Save the Queen," it being her birthday. Every one in the house rose, including the orchestra, who played standing. The effect was very fine; and, indeed, the sight of the house itself and the brilliant audience, wouldn't have been a bad evening's entertainment.

"The only other opera I have yet seen here, is L'Africaine, in which Lucca takes the most prominent female part. I wasn't much pleased with the music—the best things in it being a bass chorus of inquisitors, and a soprano song with accompaniment of six harps. As a spectacle, however, it is gorgeous. The ballet in the last act is the finest thing of the kind I ever saw or heard of. Before a temple with magnificent surroundings of gardens and natural scenery (which you can look at through a glass without destroying the illusion) there come forward, in succession, about a dozen different troops of warriors, priests, attendants, bayaderes, flower girls, etc., each performing a march, or barbaric dance; that is, the warriors, etc., dance in that way, but the women dance like houris, and are mostly very pretty; and the eye is perfectly bewildered with the beauty and magnificence of the scene, which you think of afterwards as a reality.

"Little trips to the country and engagements of various kinds have prevented my going more frequently to Covent Garden, or to the other opera houses at all, but I intend now to make up for lost time, and expect to hear Robert tomorrow.

"I send you programmes of several of the concerts I have attended, and specimens of the explanatory and critical pamphlets they sell at some of them, which will give a better idea of their character than my descriptions could.

"Among them I have heard almost all the musical celebrities now in London: Titiens, Vilda, Sinico, Ilma di, Murska, Trebelli, Bettini, and a host of others from the two opera houses. Parepa (who sings like a bird) and many other fine singers who appear only in concerts, besides a number of distinguished solo players, such as Wienawski, the violinist, Chas. Hallé, the pianist, etc., about all of whom I hope to talk to you some day, but can't write much at present that would be interesting. A few dozen notes of admiration sprinkled through the list of names would very fairly express my sentiments. I have marked on the programmes the performances which pleased me most; but in the first-class concerts here, (notwithstanding their prodigious length when matinees), the excellence is almost uniform. You will notice Grisi's name in one or two of them; people still go to hear her as a matter of curiosity, and some applaud for the sake of what she once was, but her voice is gone. She re-appeared in opera this spring, failed, and is now trying, with a strange infatuation, to re-establish a reputation. "Superfluous lags the veteran on the stage," etc * * * *

BUMMERS.

SOME say that bummers are born, not made. I contend that, generally speaking, they are made. Hope disappointed, with regard to political elevation or wealth, turns out a great many.

Ambitious schoolmarms, reminding their pupils that some day they may become the President of these United States, also lay many a bummerial foundation.

So do fond parents when they advise their only son to emulate the example of a Girard or an Astor.

Contentment with a moderate share of the good things of this world is a principle but little recognized in American education. Emulation, elevation, and a universal scramble over each other's heads for the highest point, is the main thing instilled in the youthful American mind.

"Sam Brown, how came you to be a bummer?" I asked of that individual one day, as he stood at his usual 11 o'clock post on the corner. He had upon him the bummerial regular uniform, a shiny, greasy, black coat, bosom modestly covered with a black cravat, a brown collar, well worn pants, badly frayed at the heels, and easy shoes with heels which had once been heels. "A quarter," he remarked, "judiciously expended for whiskey with an accompanying lunch, would much more incline me to conversation. I have had no breakfast yet this morning."

Sam Brown's request was gratified, and, after swallowing food and drink, he commenced:

"I acknowledge myself," said Sam Brown, "to be a bummer. I shall probably always be a bummer, unless something turns up, and the chances of something turning up seem to lessen as year after year of my life is turned down. 'Aim high and you will succeed,' was ever the admonition of my fond parents. I did aim high, and did not succeed. When young, I was termed 'very smart.' While others were spanked through the alphabet, an ambitious schoolmarm who, through the agency of my retentive memory, was desirous of shining as an educatress of youth, crammed my infantile brain with 'isms' and 'ologies.'

"I parrotted through geography, philosophy, chemistry, grammar, with all their divisions and subdivisions, before my ninth year. I ascended into Latin, Greek, and metaphysics ere my twelfth.

"The biggest numskull in the school was daily told that he might be a Governor, a member of Congress, or even President of these United States, providing he learned his spelling lesson in words of two syllables.

"Of course, with my greater degree of advancement, I felt quite sure of obtaining one of these high positions.

"My teachers and parents were to me the highest authority in the world. Is it any wonder, then, that I received implicitly their prophecies of my future elevation to the Presidency? Of course not. At nineteen I had graduated at college. My valedictory, on 'Greatness the Privilege of American Youth,' was pronounced a masterpiece.

"I heard on all sides the remarks: 'Fine young man! charming young man! rising young man! self rising young man! We shall hear of him yet in the halls of Congress!'

"I left college and went out in the world with the impression that my elevation to the Presidency would be as sure, regular, and certain as the upward course of a balloon on a calm day.

"That is an apt simile, sir, between me and the balloon.

"I went forth into the world filled with a mental gas composed of equal parts of ignorance, self-conceit, and high hopes, instilled by pedagogues and fond parents.

"After several years' snubbing and experience, I discovered that there were several hundred thousand other people in the United States, many of them more talented, learned, and far beyond me in worldly knowledge. I discovered that they, too, were all competitors for the Presidency, and that I was about the last in the line.

"Then, sir, the sharp point of truth pricked the balloon inflated for so many years; the gas escaping, it collapsed, and here I am, a bummer.

THE UNION STATE COMMITTEE of California have passed a resolution requesting Senator Conness, together with representatives McRuer, Cole, Bidwell and Higby, to attend the "Southern Union Convention" at Philadelphia, and assure the members that they have the sympathies of the loyal men of this State.

SORROWS OF A LECTURER.

FOR the benefit of a numerous class of ambitions men who aspire to become popular lecturers, I send you a few items of my experience. I went to Southern Illinois to get started as a popular lecturer. I was advertised under the nom de plume of the "Fat Contributor." My audience was small, owing to the public being suddenly and severely indisposed--they were indisposed to come to the lecture. My audience, in fact, consisted but of one people. He was a gentleman. I began my discourse, "Gentlemen and ladies," but changed it quickly to "Respected Sir!" Before I could proceed any further, my audience arose indignantly to its feet, as one man. I inquired the cause of the interruption.

"Sir," said he, "the audience is disappointed in the size of the lecturer."

"Well, my dear sir," said I, "the lecturer is disappointed in the size of the audience, and if you will not say anything about size, I won't.

He allowed me to proceed, and at the conclusion was so well pleased that he urged me to stay another night, when he promised a much larger audience. He would not come himself, but would send his wife, who weighed two hundred and sixty-five pounds. I didn't stay.

I have had a good deal of money in the house at one time and another, generally in the pockets of some wealthy man in the audience. I always come home with money, however; I borrow a little to come home with.

I have had some large houses. The largest house I had was at Louisville, Kentucky. That house must have been two hundred feet long, and ninety feet wide, while in height it came pretty high--took all the proceeds to pay the rent. A Louisville editor said a good thing about me:—he said, "The 'Fat Contributor' lectured last night to a small house. His style resembles Artmus Ward's, but he has not the ease and grace of Artemus before an audience." As though a lecturer could be at ease before an audience, when the audience wouldn't pay expences. As grace accompanies meat, and there wasn't profit enough in the house to buy meat, where's my grace?

The fullest house I have had was at Pithole City, in the Oil Regions. Every man was full of beer. The lecture went off very well, notwithstanding. It didn't go off as well as my doorkeeper did—he went off with the receipts.

I gave two consecutive lectures at Oil City. At the conclusion of the second lecture, one of the first citizens (the second edition had not yet arrived) arose and assured me that I had delighted them greatly. He said, they hadn't enjoyed themselves so much since the Thayer's were hung. He added, that it was the request of the audience, en masse—there were five en masses altogether--that I should stay another night. The landlord of the inn where I was stopping arose somewhat hastily, and stated that I couldn't stay another night with him unless my bill was guaranteed. Such is oftentimes the encouragement that genius receives at the hands of the mercenary.

A little town on the Allegheny turned out well. The principal occupation of the inhabitants was to haul oil. That being the only hall they had, I lectured in a grocery shop. The people turned out in a most unexpected manner; they turned out the lights—then they turned out the lecturer--because he wasn't fat enough. They gave me twenty minutes to leave the town. I told them if they'd make it twenty dollars, I'd go!

At the termination of the twenty minutes I felt something come against me very rapidly from behind. My first impression was, that it was an old-fashioned leather valise. Subsequent reflection has convinced me that it was a boot. I shook hands with them all with much feeling. I told them they must excuse me, for I felt that I had got to go! Leaving somewhat hastily, I caught the sound of cherub voices in that grocery shop, singing, in tones of the most pathetic inquiry—

"Shall I never more behold thee, Never hear that winning voice again?"

I yelled back that they wouldn't—not if I could help it. That "winning voice" didn't seem to win in the neighborhood.

I have tried many agents. They proved unsatisfactory, with one exception. He never asked for money. He never alluded to money but once. Said he to me one day: "You don't care for money, do you?" "No, indeed," said I. "I thought not," said he. "I never saw you have a penny." I humor him in those harmless flights of wit.

THE "CAPE HORN" OF CALIFORNIA.--A correspondent in describing this end of the Pacific railroad, says:

Two miles above Colfax you pass around a precipitous mountain in a notch blasted in the rock. The view is terrific. You look down almost perpendicularly thousands of feet. The north fork of the American is far below, looking like a yellow thread. The road from Illinoistown is seen winding down to the river, and on up the other side to Iowa Hill. It is a fearful view. Should a train of cars ever run off in passing round "Cape Horn," death to every living thing on board, and complete destruction must inevitably result.

"JUBILATE."

"GRAY distance hid each shining sail,
By ruthless breezes borne from me:
And lessening, fading, faint and pale,
My ships went forth to sea.

"Where misty breakers rose and fell
I stood and sorrowed helplessly;
For every wave had tales to tell
Of wrecks far out at sea.

"To-day, a song is on my lips;
Earth seems a Paradise to me;
For God is good, and lo! my ships
Are coming home from sea."

BOGGS' STORY OF WESTERN STYLE.

"ONCE," said Boggs, "I lived on the prairie in Illinois. I tell you, that was the country for sparking. When you went to see a girl there you were expected, as a matter of course, to sit up with her till near morning.

When I had been with my cousin, who was a farmer, a few weeks, there was a Fourth of July celebration at Paw Paw, a few miles distant. The people gathered in from every direction for twenty miles around. There was a Hoosier oration, and a Hoosier dinner, and a Hoosier ball. The Hoosier ball commenced at five o'clock in the afternoon, and they just 'hoed it down' until five o'clock next morning. Well, I was introdnced, at an early stage of the performance, to my cousin's wife's cousin, and she was a stunner, too, I tell you. That girl could talk. She had just come from boarding-school somewhere East. She knew Eastern ways and Western ways, and somehow she seemed to know just how to strike the right balance between them. I was afraid of her at first. She was what your novelists call 'regal, self-possessed, queen-like.' But soon she put me at my ease. She liked fun, too. She had a beau with her, but she threw him off as naturally as possible to flirt with me. Then he went off and got drunk, and about an hour afterward there was a drunken horse and buggy with Popper inside of it, tearing through the single main street of Paw Paw. Well, the buggy hit a post and turned over, and out went Popper, and when he was picked up his sense was all knocked out of him. Then they carried him into the hotel and laid him on the bed, and all the girls and fellows came in and stood around him, and my regal beanty bathed his head with cologne and cried over him. Popper was not long in coming to, but he didn't let on when he did come to. He just laid there and let that girl bend over him and cry and slop his head with spirits of camphor. I saw it all. He had a good thing just then. I'd a taken all his runaway chances for a similar consideration. However, it was soon found out that nothing very bad was the matter with Popper, and then the crying corn-fed beauties quickly dried their tears and put for the ball-room. I had a slight hand in that matter, you see, for I just gave my cousin a hint of the real state of things, and he hinted to his wife, and his wife to Car—(that was her name,) and she came back to her normal condition, and things went on straight again. I felt sorry for Popper, too. He had to lay abed, you see, just to keep up the delusion that he was hurt. I had, for the time, the inside track of him. It's very nice to have the inside track in these matters, especially when you've been standing a long time on the outside. Well, we danced and sung and made love till near morning. They do all these things at Hoosier balls on the prairie. And about three o'clock I parted from my regal, corn-fed beauty, got on the wagon with my cousin and his wife, and as we took our way home I was a thousand miles in love. I never expected to see her again. I went to bed, little thinking that I should see her before I arose from my necessarily virtuous couch. There were just two rooms in my cousin's log-house—the front room and back room. The front room was about the whole house, in fact, and was kitchen, parlor, bed-room and everything. As the guest of the family, I slept in the front room. All of us slept late that morning. The sun was high in the heavens when I awoke. I thought a moment of the Paradise I had been in the night before, when I heard a buggy drive up to the front gate, and then voices, then a voice. Good gracious! It was that of the regal Caroline. I saw it all. Words indicative of a forthcoming visit had fallen on my ear the day before. But I had no idea it was to be so soon. And there I was in bed, and the front door of the house was the front door of the room, and when it opened it would disclose me, a bashful, shrinking youth of eighteen in bed. She was coming up the walk. Now, the fact is, Western style just in that neighborhood was not a bit shocked at seeing a male person in bed. But I was just from the East, where such a spectacle was supposed to knock a single woman down, or worse. I made a lightning-calculation as to the time it would take for me to get out and get on my pants. Could I but get on those pants things would not bear so bad an aspect. 'Twouldn't be quite so embarrassing. Yes, I'd make the venture. I acted on the resolve. I thrust out one bashful limb. Her hand was on the latch. Just time enough had I to snake that leg back again when in she came, looking as blooming and smiling as one of the dew-covered prairie flowers over which she had just passed. And do you think she made any fuss, or called up any extra blushes, or tried to caterpillar, or anything of that sort? Not a bit of it. When she saw me she just took things as easily and quietly as if she had been in the habit every morning of popping in on single gentlemen abed. As for me, I was subjugated. I had nothing to do but to lay still and take things as they came. I did try to make a sort of a bow as she entered, but you can't make a graceful bow when you're almost all horizontal. And then don't you think she walked up to that bed as coolly as if her own sister lay there. and set down on the side of it, and commenced talking about the ball the night before. She seemed to be entirely at ease—but I wasn't. I concluded it must be Western fashion, but it required some little time to get broken in. It was my first experience in that line. I rather liked it, but it was rather too much to come at once. I wanted her to stay, and I wanted her to go away. Well, she stopped there on that beside and talked for half an hour. And then she went into the apartment where the married couple reposed, and there wasn't much time lost on my part in getting on one pair of pants. I soon got broken in to Western style after that. It's a great country for sparking. I shall never see another like it.

A CHARACTER.—Company — had enrolled on its muster-rolls a young man who was nicknamed by his comrades, for some peculiarity, "Puss." Now "Puss" was a tough one. In camp he was a great shirker, and many were the reprimands and punishments he received for neglect of duty; but on the march, the bivouac, or the battle-field "Puss" was a gay and gallant soldier, and many weary miles of marching were made shorter by his lively songs and happy hits at persons and their peculiarities. And better still, "Puss" never shirked a fight. At South Mountain the Second, with the other gallant regiments composing the "Iron Brigade," was assigned the duty of carrying the pass at the point where the main road that passes through Frederick City and Middletown crosses the mountain. Company — was one of the companies selected for the skirmish-line. At first no trouble was experienced in driving back the rebel skirmishers, but finally they came to a halt. Thus matters stood for some five minutes, our boys giving the rebs leaden invitations to vamose, and the rebs giving, in the same style, their objections to any further retrograde movement "Puss" had been doing his best with his "Springfield," but all at once he stopped firing, slammed the butt of his musket to the ground, and with all the vim his lungs would allow, yelled out to the rebs: "Well, you rascally rebel cut-throats! if you are going to run, why don't you git up and skedaddle? Now git!" Whether the invitation to "git" had any effect or not we can't say; but this is certain, a short time afterward rebs were scarce in that neighborhood.

THE DULLNESS OF GREAT MEN.—Descartes, the famous mathematician and philosopher; Le Fontaine, celebrated for his fables; Buffon, the great naturalist, were all singularly deficient in the powers of conversation. Marmontel, the novelist, was so dull in society that his friend said of him, after an interview, "I must go and read his tales to recompense myself for the weariness of hearing him." As to Corneille, the grandest dramatist of France, he was completely lost in society—so absent and embarrassed that he wrote of himself a witty couplet, importing that he was never intelligible but through the mouth of another. Wit, on paper, seems to be something widely different from that play of words in conversation, which, while it sparkles, dies; for Charles II., the wittiest monarch that ever sat on the English throne, was so charmed with the humor of "Hudibras," that he caused himself to be introduced in the character of a private gentleman, to Butler, its author. The witty king found the author a very dull companion, and was of opinion, with many others, that so stupid a fellow could never have written so clever a book. Addison, whose classic elegance has long been considered the model of style, was shy and absent in society, preserving, even before a single stranger, stiff and dignified silence. In conversation, Dante was taciturn and satirical. Rousseau was remarkably trite in conversation—not a word of fancy or eloquence warmed him. Milton was unsocial, and even irritable when much pressed by talk of others.

PUNCH THAT MAN!—One evening at the theatre, John Phœnix observed a man sitting three seats in front, whom he thought he knew; he requested the person sitting next to him to punch the other individual with his cane. The polite stranger did so, and the disturbed person turning his head a little, he discovered his mistake—that he was not the person he took him for. Fixing his attention steadfastly on the play, and affecting his unconsciousness of the whole affair, he left the man with the cane to settle with the other for the disturbance, who, being wholly without an excuse, there was of course a ludicrous and embarrassing scene, during all of which Phœnix was profoundly interested in the play. At last the man with the cane, asked, rather indignantly, "Didn't you tell me to punch the man with my stick?" "Yes." "And what did you want?" "I wanted to see whether you would punch him or not."

CAPACITY OF THE HUMAN BODY TO ENDURE INTENSE HEAT. About the year 1809, one Lionetto, a Spaniard, astonished not only the ignorant, but chemists and other men of science in France, Germany, Italy, and England, by his insensibility to the power of fire. He handled with impunity red hot iron and molten lead, drank boiling oil, and performed other feats equally miraculous. While he was at Naples, he attracted the notice of Prof. Sementini, who narrowly watched all his operations, and endeavored to discover his secret. He observed, in the first place, that when Lionetto applied a piece of red hot iron to his hair, dense fumes immediately rose from it; that when he touched his foot with the iron, similar vapors ascended, which affected both the organs of sight and smell. He also saw him place a red hot iron, nearly red hot, between his teeth, without burning himself; drink the third of a tablespoonful of burning oil; and taking up molten lead with his fingers, place it on his tongue without apparent inconvenience.

Anxious to discover the means used by Lionetto to render himself capable of thus enduring the application of heat, Sementini performed several experiments upon himself, and made several important discoveries. He found that by friction with sulphuric acid, diluted with water, the skin might be made insensible to the action of the heat of red hot iron; a solution of alum evaporated until it become spongy, appeared to be more effectual in these frictions. After having rubbed the parts, which were thus rendered in some degree incombustible, with hard soap, he discovered, on the application of hot iron, that their insensibility was increased. He then determined on again rubbing the parts with soap, and after this, found that the hot iron not only occasioned no pain, but that it actually did not burn the hair. Being thus far satisfied, the Professor applied hard soap to his tongue, until it became insensible to the heat of the iron; and after having placed an ointment composed of soap mixed with a solution of alum upon it, boiling oil did not burn it; while the oil remained on the tongue a slight hissing was heard, similar to that of hot iron, when thrust into water; the oil soon cooled, and might then be swallowed without danger.

A FROG STORY.—About a year and a half ago an army officer arrived at Louisville, and put up at one of the leading hotels. After a few days' stay, he disappeared, leaving his trunk behind him and an unpaid bill. The trunk was stored away among the collections of uncalled for baggage, and remained there undisturbed until a few days since, when the pile was examined.

In this trunk was found a quantity of ammunition, some caps, bullets, a few books and other articles. A singular tin box was also discovered, which was punched full of small holes. This was opened, and revealed to the astonished observers a horned Mexican toad, as lively and cheerful, apparently, as when he was first put into the box.

There he had been in that box, confined in that trunk for a year and a half to the certain knowledge of the proprietors of the house, and how much longer they did not know. His toadship refused all food, and does not seem anxious to feed after his long fast. He has been an economical boarder, for one that has resided a year and a half in one of the best hotels.

THE FITNESS OF ALL THINGS.—Nature is still gracious to all her children who cheerfully obey her laws. We must obey all the changes silently going on within us, that, by acquiescence with them all, we may continue, throughout life, to be dutiful to our great parent, and, in duty, find that enjoyment is provided in all the metamorphoses which our physical, moral, and intellectual being is perpetually undergoing—assured that, if not unwisely and vainly withstood, they are all for good. The child, the boy, the youth, the man, the old man, may each, during his own season, be happy, if, according to Nature's mandate, each be "like the season:" the one thing needful being contentment. Old Age! a brother greybeard counsels thee—never repine. Thus, though dull thy hearing, shall music, nevertheless, find its way into thy spirit; though dim thy sight, its inner regious shall be lustrous; and thy present, which to those who know thee not may appear almost pitiful, solaced by the past, and strengthened by thy future, may be piously felt by thee to be the best, because the holiest, of all the seasons of thy life.

DISCIPLINE.—During the drill of the Highland Cadets on the Boston Common, recently, at a moment of rest one of the lads received a ten-dollar bill from a friend, which he held in his hand when "Attention" was called. To put the bill in his pocket would disturb the line, to hold it and execute the required movement were impossible, and so he dropped it and saved his reputation as a soldier—a ten spot out.

PARKS.—The New York Central Park is more than twice as large as Hyde Park or Regent's Park in London, ten times as large as St. James's Park, less than a quarter as big as the great park at Windsor, one-third of the size of the Richmond Park, rather more than a quarter as big as the Gardens of Versailles, and half the size of the Phœnix Park in Dublin.

EYES AND NOSES.

WHEN I had pondered Lavater, and surveyed antiquities in stone and bronze, frescoes and vases, I looked into the collections of portraits of distinguished men, looking especially, as we always do, and must look, at the most prominent feature. What wonderful noses they have! There was not such a nose in all Europe, in his time, as that worn upon the face of the Emperor Charles V.; and those of Henry IV., Pope Alexander VII., Charles XII., of Sweden, and Frederick II., of Prussia, were scarcely less remarkable. The fierce nose of the youthful Napoleon, compacted into the massive one of the Emperor; and then, for a soldierly and heroic nose, where would you look for a finer one than that which marked, among a million, the striking face of Wellington? All that was great in firmness, patience, and heroism in the character of Washington is stamped on his prominent and handsome nose.

Look now at the beautiful noses of the poets. Tasso, Dante, Petrarch, have noses like the gods of immortal verse. Our own bards are in no way deficient. Study the portraits of Chaucer, Shakspeare, Milton, Dryden, Pope, and so down to the present laureate, Tennysou. See also Molliere, Voltaire, Erasmus, Pascal, and Schiller—all men of genius, but how varied! But there is not a greater variety in character than in that feature which the ancients called "honestamentum faciei;" and which is all that and something more. Could Schiller's bust change noses with Voltaire's? Try the experiment, and if it proves satisfactory, I will abandon the whole theory, and call science a cheat, and nature an imposter, and Lavater a dupe and a donkey. Show me a thief with the nose of Algernou Sydney; show me an empty fop, if there be any yet extant, with the nose of Lord Bacon; or some soft poltroon with the profile of Philip the Bold, or Elliot, the hero of Gibraltar; find me, in a group of costermongers and potboys the noses of Cato and Cicero, Locke and Johnson, Loyola, Titian, Michael Angelo, or Lord Brougham, and you may have my head for a foot-ball, and do what you like with its special honestamentum.

Large eyes have always been admired, especially in women, and may be considered essential to the highest order of beauty, in almost every description of which, from Helen of Troy to Lola Montes, they hold a prominent place. We read of "large spiritual eyes," and Eyes loving large, and of "little, sparkling, beady eyes," to which the epithets "spiritual" and "loving" are never applied.

An Arab expresses his idea of the beauty of a woman by saying that she has the eye of a gazelle. This is the burden of his song. The timidity, gentleness, and innocent fear in the eye of the "deer" tribe are compared with the modesty of the young girl: "Let her be as the loving hind and the pleasant roe."

Persons with large eyes give us the impression of being "wide-awake," and ready for action, while small-eyed people have more geuerally "a sleepy look," and a sluggish temperament or habit of body. Dr. Redfield observes, that "persons with large eyes have very lively emotions, think very rapidly and speak fast, unless there be a predominance of the phlegmatic temperament. Of persons with small eyes the reverse is true. The former are quick and spontaneous in their feelings and in the expression of them, and are, therefore, simple, like the Scotch. Swiss, and all who inhabit mountainous regions. The latter are slow and calculating, and, therefore, artful, like the gypsies, a people who generally inhabit level countries. There is a connection between activity and the ascending and descending acclivities, a fact which we evince in running up and down stairs, and which an active horse exhibits when he comes to a hill; and hence the Scotch Highlanders, as well as the sheep, goat, chamois, etc., have large eyes and very great activity."

EARLY DAYS OF JENNY LIND.—In 1837 Miss Agatha Bremer came to Stockholm in the autumn, and was present at a performance by the pupils of the theatre. On her return she related how much she was struck and bewitched by the acting of a little girl as a beggar child. The were wit and genius in every movement. She threw herself heart and soul into the character, and put in droll inventions of her own which were inimitable. There never was such an ingenious, saucy, fascinating little beggar! Miss Agatha, who had a quick, native perception of what was truly good, prophesied a great success for her. The following year her prophecy was fulfilled. The same young girl, Jenny Lind, appeared in the character of Agatha, in the "Hunter's Bride," and won such immense admiration that the very orchestra, forgetting themselves, paused to listen to her heavenly soprano. It is not, however, her enchanting vocal powers, but her thorough womanliness, her Christian love, her faithful and kindly remembrance of her native land, which make Mme. Goldschmidt so beloved here.—Margaret Howitt's Twelve Months with Fredrika Bremer in Sweden.

Mr. F. T. Palgrave is writing a new Life of Sir Walter Scott, which is soon to appear.

PUBLIC MARRIAGE.

POURING through the gilded gates of the Bois are voitures de remise, gay chariots, fashionable landaus, and cavaliers, mounted on splendid horses, which, while not being in speed equal to English thoroughbreds, are yet superior in gait and action. If you glance at either side of the broad and level drives and see the forest, you will hardly credit that in 1815 those trees were felled to make barricades against the approach of the allied armies, and that soon after this was a camping ground for the English hosts, led by the "Iron Duke."

But what right have we now to think of war when the 'Empire is Peace," and the grim realities of the Bois in fighting costume, with deep moats and naked walls have merged into shining lakes and pleasant waterfalls, where cofés and kiosks stand in place of tents, and the only belligerent-seeming is the guards of the wood, who dash up and down the level paths, picturesque but harmless. You can either proceed by the grand drives, or, if you follow my fancy, lose yourself in one of the tortuous paths which a sign board informs you is "Interdicted for Voitures." And what can be more charming? As far as the eye can reach there is a lovely arcade of trees, whose interlacing branches overhead hardly permit a glance at the cloudless sky. In the distance men and women on horseback dash across the paths for an instant, and then are lost to view. All at once a black-gowned priest, rapt in meditation, saunters toward St. Cloud, and, close behind him, follow a procession of school-boys, who chatter like magpies, their fresh young voices making you somehow lose yourself in the dreams of your own boyhood. But ere you can indulge in the dangerous task of retrospection your horse carries you forward to a point where broad paths intersect the bridle-ways, and the murmur of cascades remind you that you are near the Lac.

Like a picture is the fair sheet of water, from which the mists and smoke of the mimic torrent arise like incense up to Heaven; like a picture are the prettily painted kiosks and gilded boats; and, more than beautiful, the graceful swans who shake the diamond spray from their arched necks; but, to complete the charm, fair women promenade in the half-shaded allées in the dresses of brides; their robes are of white and the ever-beautiful orange blossoms droop over their long veils. I count one, two, three of these young girls, who are leaning upon the arms of their husbands, and am lost in surprise when I am told it is the custom among the middle and lower classes to be married in the morning at the Madelaine, St. Rock, or St. Eustache, and to spend the afternoon in the Bois with friends, returning in the evening, for dinner, to Paris. I would fain criticize this public display of marriage; it seems to me not fitting that the maiden should be looked upon by the world during these few sacred and solemn moments between the blessings of the priests and the first prayers from the woman's heart for strength, and love, and duty. Her ears should be shielded from the rude jests of the heedless crowd; blushing ever, because of love and joy, and never from embarrassment or shame.

NAPOLEON III. WHEN IN LONDON.—During Louis Napoleons' residence in London, he was an occasional of Lord Combermere. While quiet and reserved, he was quietly studying mankind in general, and the British nation in particular. London fine ladies and gentlemen termed him dull and uninteresting, little recognizing the tact and strength of will which was one day to conduct him to that imperial throne. Yet, notwitstanding his apparent indifference, he was always ready to discuss in an agreeable manner those social questions which interested him. The Emperor of the French would smile now, if he recalled how once, when the princely refugee was invited to dine with Lord Combermere, his non-appearance at the appointed time did not delay the dinner, for no one lady or gentleman was ever waited for at the old veteran's table. Therefore, soup and fish had been removed before the future sovereign arrived, apologising very courteously for an unpunctuality which was not his own fault. Louis Napoleon's love of art was an early passion, perhaps one of the many qualities that recommend him to his countrymen. At his residence in King street, St. James square, he had collected many artistic gems and family relics, which he highly prized, and a few days before his last departure for Paris, he had invited Lord and Lady Combermere to inspect them. For the latter, as well as for the Marchioness of Londonderry, he made sketches of decorations to ornament their stalls at the great military bazaar, for the benefit of the Irish, which was held at the Life Guards' barracks, in the Regent's Park. It was at one of these stalls that the late Duke of Devonshire, besides purchasing from the other ladies at fabulous prices, generously handed Lady Londonderry one hundred pounds in return for her glove, which, with chivalrous grace, he placed near his heart. The Empress, as Mlle Montijo, was, equally with her future husband, an occasional guest at Lord Combermere's house. She was known in London society as the Spanish beauty, but handsome as she then was, her loveliness had not then expanded into that full splendor which it afterwards attained.

EIGHT battle fields can be seen from the top of Lookout Mountain.

ITALIAN WOMEN.—A Florence correspondent speaks as follows of Italian women:

"I have at last, after several years' residence, seen one who may be called beautiful in the Italian sense of the word. Passing by a cofé a while ago, I saw a lady of twenty or so sitting in front chatting with some officers, and as she was quite striking in appearance and manners, I lingered, for it is unusual to see a handsome woman in Italy, and this one possessed only the mere symmetry of features. They were, however, really feminine, quite rare to see here, and her complexion was very clear, another unusual sight—almost transparent—but there was too much of marble; the eyes were bright, but wanted the fire of intellect. Intelligence was wanting. Italians, however, don't expect to see this in woman, as she is generally looked upon as an inferior, as with the Turks. This one reminded me of a beautiful face in alabaster—more fascinating, of course, than the lifeless matter—and yet her silly laugh almost dissipated the idea of fascination or attractiveness. Willis says beautiful women are scarce in Italy, but when you see one, she is splendid. Of course that is so, and simply because a beautiful woman is splendid anywhere. Perhaps he means merely comparatively, when compared with the sex generally in Italy. A very prominent and revolting feature of the fair sex is their nose, which Hilliard or some other author speaks of as vulgar. I have often observed this, especially in the middle and better classes. It does seem as though all their ugliness and vulgarity were concentrated in their nasal organ; it is often so large and unsightly and unshapely, often discolored and blotched, reminding me of an old toper's sign-board. This may be pointed language, but facts are stubborn, find them where you will. In the mass all their features lack beauty and expression; their lips thick, their cheeks puffed, their countenances dark and heavy, without any intellectual character, and then many look so sad, as though hope had forever fled from their breasts; they seem real terra cotta, without the spirit often imparted to the mere clayey form.

"I attended, in 1863, an entertainment at the Royal Palace in Naples, where were present fifteen hundred to two thousand persons of the upper classes, and among all the hundreds of splendidly dressed ladies I did not see one who would be called even handsome in New York or Baltimore. I can, perhaps, account for all this: the want of education. Centuries of degradation and ignorance have done their work. I have heard of rich fathers neglecting to educate their daughters through the influence of priests, who say to them, "Why educate your daughters? What use is it? Keep your money for other purposes." A new light has begun to shine in this kingdom and every commune has its schools. There are hopes of the rising generation, at all events. On the other hand, the male sex, as a body, are a fine looking race."

WOMAN RULING THROUGH TACT.—Men are very fond of conceding tact to women, and almost all women claim it for themselves, till between the consensus and the assumption of a very doubtful assertion has become almost an established fact. Half womanhood are doubtful of their ability to govern, but no woman at heart disbelieves her ability to "manage," to rule husbands and children, and servants, without recourse to authority, or lapse into fretful bickering. Sometimes the belief is well founded. In the cases where an able woman marries an able husband it is almost always so, for they choose separate domains, and little frictions can be avoided by that self-restraint that is not strictly tact, but has all its value. In cases where the husband knows his inferiority, or thinks he knows it—a wonderfully common alternative, though repudiated by both sexes—the conviction is also well founded. There is but one authority in the end, and the consciousness that there is but one gives the claim which is the very essence of tact. But apart from these two cases, in each of which the woman is assumed to be able, we question whether the palm of tact belongs to the weaker sex. Average women are quicker to perceive than men, but the quickness is compensated by many disadvantages fatal to the development of tact. Few women are quite as good tempered as men. They are constitutionally more irritable, lead unhealthier lives, and from a paucity of interests, exaggerate more the importance of domestic topics. The little meanness of women which men so dislike—though without them every house would be an annexe to the Bankruptcy Court—all spring from a want of perspective very injurious to tact. Women are not really mean, but the household allowance is to them the income, and they think on a false scale. The little thing is treated in such a large way, so often, and at such length, that the man is irritated at the visible disproportion. He will stand being told that he has acted "so like a man" in losing his umbrella, or playing whist a little too high, or taking a second tumbler, and will think the implied rebuke has its justification, but a whole lecture irritates.

MOTHERLY ATTACHMENT.—A German newspaper states that a young man recently married a widow twice his age, and he ascertained subsequently that his wife had once been his wet nurse.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS. } Publishers.
C. H. WEBB. }

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, AUGUST 25. 1866.

FULL volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

TRAVELLING AGENT.—MR. O. P. TRUESDELL is our authorized Agent to receive subscriptions, and appoint agencies for THE CALIFORNIAN.

A "DISGUSTED" LITERARY JOURNAL.

THE New York Round Table seems inclined to set up an alarmingly lofty standard of literary excellence; and with reference more especially to "American literature," to be animated by what Carlyle calls "a sublime spirit of discontent." "As publishers of the Round Table"—we quote from a recent leader in that journal, entitled "Wanted Writers"—"As publishers of the Round Table, disgusted with the recent puerile efforts of American writers, and anxious for a literature which shall have more nerve and muscle, we put forth our plea for writers." Cooper, Prescott, Bancroft, Motley, Longfellow, Irving, and Hawthorne, it seems, do not at all come up to the mark. Something absolutely stunning must be done at once, or the Round Table will be inconsolable. It is not mere "writers" who are wanted, so much as literary meteors. "The demand of the hour," we are assured, "is for vigorous, original, powerful writing; the day is past for weakness, finical nicety, and long drawn platitudes. The style of ten years ago, is not the style for to-day. The thought and imagination of Americans have grown stronger and more active. On this account we look to see young men coming forward who shall inaugurate a better literature, and more characteristic of the nation than that which has been already honored by the names of Irving and Everett."

Now there may be something very admirable in this hortatory strain, but to us it has the ring of brass rather than of pure metal. If the complaint is well founded, can the want be remedied by old womanish scolding and lamentation? Will even the most vehement bawling for "more nerve and muscle" produce those qualities? Will it not rather, if it has any effect whatever, produce something forced, false, and spasmodic? As to the discrimination or good sense evinced in this odd coupling of the names of Irving and Everett, we acknowledge that we are quite at a loss to perceive it. Everett was an accomplished orator, of the courtly and classic school, and his reputation rests entirely upon his orations. If he has produced any works upon which a claim to citizenship in the republic of letters can be based, (unless the reference is to his contributions to Bonner's Ledger)—any works between which and the Sketch Book, or Bracebridge Hall, or the Life of Columbus, or of Washington, a comparison can be instituted—we have yet to make acquaintance with them. The fact is, as it seems to us, that the talent which the Round Table evinces for disparaging the genius of American standard writers, is enormously disproportionate to the talent which it evinces for itself producing anything especially worthy of admiration. If the literary ability which it displayed bore any reasonable proportion to the hardihood of its offensive yet ludicrous self assertion, one might experience less impatience at its enormous pretensions, and the shrewish objurgatory tone which is its most distinctive characteristic.

Meantime, it is highly probable that this urgent and passionate "plea for writers" will be enthusiastically responded to by that large class of youthful aspirants for literary distinction who, sharing the lofty contempt of the "publishers of the Round Table" for all that has heretofore been done by American authors, experience the delightful consciousness of an ability to achieve something infinitely more worthy.

DEMOCRATIC IDEAS seem to be making rapid progress in England. John Bright, the distinguished Parliamentary orator, says, in the course of a recent speech, that he has seen a letter from one of the largest cotton spinners and manufacturers in Lancashire, expressing the regret of the writer to find that among his workmen there was growing up a much greater interest in American politics, than in the politics of their own country. The Lancashire manufacturer afterwards informed Mr. Bright, in corroboration of the above statement, that in his mill there were nearly as many American as British newspapers to be found.

"THE INTELLECTUAL DEGENERACY OF THE CLERGY."

IT seems to us that those of our contemporaries who have of late been bewailing so pathetically the lack of intellectual prowess in the clergy, have permitted themselves to lose sight of the fact that the most important function of the ministry, is not to prepare discourses which shall satisfy the tastes of critical or dilettante hearers. Clergymen have a variety of serious work to do, quite apart from the preparation of sermons, work in regard to the nature and amount of which we suspect that the journalists making the complaints referred to, have none but the dimmest notions. They have to make parochial visits, advise with those of their congregations who are in trouble, console those who are in affliction, to officiate at christenings, marriages, and funerals; and also to give a share of their attention to keeping up social relations with a large portion of their congregations, the neglect to do which, would cause grave dissatisfaction, and materially interfere with their usefulness.

Yet thoughtless and captious persons speak of them as if their whole work consisted of preaching two sermons a week, and keeping abreast of the learning and scholarship of the day in all that relates to theology and religion. And these exacting critics are hugely disappointed if the sermons produced under such circumstances, are not characterized by striking originality, and philosophical depth of thought, forgetting, or perhaps never having reflected, that a clergyman who should frame his discourses with reference to an audience of philosophers and critics, would be guilty of neglecting the needs of those who ought to be his special care, in the attempt to gratify a personal ambition to be thought eloquent or intellectually brilliant. The first duty of a faithful pastor, is to minister to the wants of his flock, even the humblest of them, rather than to win the admiration of critics by splendid rhetoric or profound reasoning. It has been said that if every literary critic were compelled to write a book himself, he would be more likely to discharge his duties justly and considerately; we have no doubt whatever that a similar preparatory discipline, would tend greatly to soften the asperity of those persons who are disposed to exact so much from the clergy. After having taken charge of a parish for a month, they would have made the discovery that a pastor has but little scholarly leisure, and that he has many graver and more important duties than to write fine discourses, and read all the new books of polemics and theology.

THE FREE CHURCH MOVEMENT.

A WRITER in the California Leader, alluding to the attempt to establish a free church in this city, speaks of the "pew-selling system" as being a modern innovation, opposed to primitive Christian usage, and seems to think that it ought to be done away with altogether. Undoubtedly there is some force in the suggestion that strangers and others who do not hold pews and cannot afford to pay for them are often prevented from attending church by the feeling that they are in a certain sense intruders. So far as theory is concerned, it would be better that the free church system should prevail, and that there should be no individual and exclusive right to particular pews. But the practical question arises, how under this system church expenses are to be paid? Without a national church establishment there seems to be no method of maintaining religious worship, or at least none that has been found to work satisfactorily, except the one now generally adopted by all denominations throughout the United States. We understand that the free Church of St. James is trying the experiment of raising the means necessary for the support of the pastor, and for defraying the other expenses of the society, by voluntary contributions in the shape of regular monthly subscriptions. Yet, even by adopting this method, the objections which obtain against the pew-selling system are not entirely obviated since the same feeling which would prevent a person from attending a church where he did not hire a pew, would also prevent him from attending a so-called "free church," toward the expenses of which he was unable to contribute what he might consider his due proportion. In order to maintain a church organization there are certain necessary expenses that have to be met, and the practical question is, can the "free pew" system be carried out successfully where there is no national church establishment, and no ecclesiastical endowments.

THE CHOLERA appears to be still spreading, though the mortality attending it thus far, is small as compared with its ravages during former visitations. In the Atlantic cities, it has almost disappeared, but it seems to be steadily marching westward. A Chicago dispatch announces that a number of cases had occurred in that city at the date of the 16th inst. At St. Louis over one hundred cases are reported, including forty-eight that have proved fatal. Scattering cases are reported throughout the West. The disappearance of the disease in the Atlantic cities, and its comparatively limited fatality do not, however, warrant any neglect of precautionary measures on this coast.

EXHIBITION OF CALIFORNIA PRODUCTIONS IN WASHINGTON.

MR. Horace D. Dunn, of this city, who last year forwarded to the Agricultural Department at Washington a number of samples of the products of California, states, in a letter to the Bulletin, that they attracted great attention from visitors, and that a strong desire has been expressed by the Commissioner and other parties that a fuller and more perfect representation of the agricultural productions of California be made during the coming season. By so doing it is believed that great benefits will inure to the State by increased emigration during the coming year. The samples of grain, fruit, etc., when exhibited are proofs that admit of no contradiction, and earnest, practical men can compare them with the productions of the Eastern States and judge for themselves in regard to the soil and climate of California.

With a view to bring about this desired result, he proposes to receive samples of grain of all kinds, dried fruits, raisens, nuts, olives, chicory, flaxseed, canary, hemp, mustard and other seeds of commercial or domestic value; tobacco in the leaf, hops, cotton, flax, hemp, or any other textile fibre, rice, wines, brandies, and other articles that are not too perishable to bear transportation. The samples of grain, nuts, chicory should be in cotton bags holding not over two pounds each; the dried fruits and raisens in boxes of about same weight; the olives in say quart glass jars, wines and brandies in about pint bottles, two samples of each, so that one can be used for testing and the other for exhibition in the museum of the Department, and the tobacco leaf, hops, cotton, flax, hemp or other textile fibre, in well put up bundles of say two pounds weight each. The choicest samples only should be forwarded with memoranda of name of grower, location, time of seeding and harvest, production per acre, number of acres grown, character of soil and course of cultivation. By so doing the whole particulars attending the production of the above named articles can be made known to the people of the Atlantic States by publication in the reports of the departments and the public press who have correspondents at Washington. The name of grape, character of soil, yield per acre, quantity of wine or brandy made, and the process of making should also be given. Parties desiring to send should forward their samples, expenses prepaid, to care of Messrs Cummings & Maxwell in this city, and when a sufficiency of them is received he will see the same properly packed and forwarded to Washington, and such mention made of them in the published reports of the Department will be sent to each contributor. Samples can be sent at any time up to the 15th of November, but it would be better to send in advance of that date, so that shipments can be divided among the steamers.

THE "ETHNO-HISTORICAL SOCIETY," is the title of a new scientific association, whose certificate of incorporation was filed in the County Clerk's office on Thursday last. The ground which it proposes to cover seems to be somewhat extensive, embracing, according to the record, "Ethnology, History, and Geography." The Bulletin, not unnaturally impressed by the magnificent comprehensiveness of this field of investigation, naively and admiringly, says: "It covers the ground usually occupied by three societies," and adds, probably viewing the matter from a commercial and economical point of view, "This is an advantage, as it increases the field, and diminishes expenses." The trustees of the Society are H. H. Haight, John T. Doyle, John W. Dwinelle, J. W. Winans and Louis R. Lull.

THE LIBERAL PARTY in Mexico seems to be gaining the ascendant in the States bordering on the Rio Grande, and according to the latest advices, it is making substantial progress in other quarters. The French forces are reported to have abandoned Monterey and Saltillo, and the army of General Escubido is said to be rapidly increasing in numbers. Tampico, the garrison of which consists of three thousand French and Mexican Imperialists, was attacked on the 4th instant with partial success.

THE NEW YORK LEADER, alluding to the Round Table's extraordinary call for "more writers," significantly says: "It is curious that this paper should request contributions, when all other papers that we know of have more than they can use. At some early date we hope to have leisure to explain this contrast, and to tell the Round Table how its demand may be promptly supplied." We suspect that the Leader's innuendo is that the Round Table does not find it convenient to pay remunerative prices for the talent it so noisily invokes.

THE ATLANTIC CABLE, notwithstanding its immense cost, is clearly an unequivocal pecuniary success. The London Daily News announces that its patronage is already so great, that the Directors contemplate the establishment of a new scale of prices, arranged in three classes, according to priority—the third class to command the same rates now charged. The present charge is five dollars per word. We wonder what the charge for despatches, ranked as "first class," will be, according to the new scale.

[For the Californian.]

SEA-CALLS.

ALL the winds blew southerly,
When the sea's heart throbbed to me;
Eyes, all glorious in their shine
Dropped their dusks and stars in mine;
But my heart in bitter throbs,
Echoed the sea's ceaseless sobs,
As it moaned upon the beach,
Out of reach! out of reach!

Stars and stars shone radiantly
When the sea's voice spoke to me,
Lips beside me said in song,
"Friend, my dreams have known so long,
I will hold thee evermore!"
Then the sea cried to the shore,
And it echoed in my breast,
No more rest! no more rest!

Half the moon looked westerly
When the sea's soul came to me:
I have two souls; one said "mine,"
And the other answered, "thine!"
But the pitiful, poor clay,
Each from either turned away,
And the South winds held their breath,
As the caves moaned underneath,
Not till death! not till death!

EMILIE LAWSON.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

Applications for the Position of Editor.

IT is said that there is at present considerable excitement in this city in consequence of certain official positions—Chief of Police, Superintendent of Streets, a lot of Supervisors, a batch of School Directors, and a number of Constables—being thrown open for public competition. This may be so. This is perchance a public grief. Ours is a private sorrow which we seek to alleviate by casting it on the public, and begging them to share it with us.

This is our trouble: The press of this city have, with the most kindly motives, mentioned that a change has occurred in the proprietorship of THE CALIFORNIAN, and that one individual has become almost sole owner of this vein for the silver and place for the gold when he finds it. The consequences of these—well meant, no doubt,—notices have been direful in their effects. All the literati of the State have applied for the most honorable of all offices—that of editor of THE CALIFORNIAN. What are we to do? How do they know we are in need of an editor? How can we decide? The public must help us. To them we appeal, and lay before them the claims of the various candidates as set forth by themselves.

The Proprietor of the Californian:

SIR:—A concatenation of circumstances having, as I am lead to believe, caused, or brought about a change in the vestment of the proprietory interests of THE CALIFORNIAN, a paper of which none can express any opinion, save laudatory, it occurs to me that you may require an editor. It also occurs to me that I may be the editor of whom you stand in need—an editor who can soar, piercing through the nebulosity of material subjects up, far up in the clear empyrean.

Yours, W. A. K—ND—L.

To the Proprietor of the Californian:

GENT:—The difficulty about your journal is, that it's a devilish sight too "literary" and high-toned for this community. I flatter myself that I am eminently the individual to remedy that defect. If there's any other man better qualified than myself to bring the paper down to a level suitable to this latitude, just "fetch on your bear" and I'll hand in my checks. Though I don't go a bogus dime on literary frills, "classical allusions," and all that sort of trumpery, yet I'm reading up Keightley's Mythology and Wilson's Outlines of Ancient History, besides cramming with a Dictionary of Quotations, so as to be able on occasion to "overcome" the vulgar mind "like a summer cloud," by lugging in Helicon or Olympus, or one of the heathen gods or goddesses to round off a sentence neatly. * * * * As to your "Bret," he's about as fit to make a paper popular in California, as a "dear gazelle" is to tow a canal-boat. You might as well try to quarry Folsom granite with a gold tooth-pick, or repair a breach in an honest miner's inexpressibles with floss silk. "Kuzzilbash" is a "fine writer" too, I admit, and that's what's the matter. His writing is like Tom Freelou's "orating"—all varnish and japanning; there's no more vim or virility in either than in a moribund Shanhae hen. Neither of them could produce half a column that would be accepted by the News Letter—and that's the best test of a writer's metal that I know of. * * * * In short, I'm your man. If we come to terms, I'll send your stock up above par in less than a month, if I have to pile what's his name upon thingummy, (classical allusion to the row between Jupiter and the old Tight'uns,) and burst an intellectual blood vessel or two in the attempt.

Yours truly, F. M. P—X—Y.

P. S. It's understood that you're to support me for next governor, against all the "Acciden cies" that may turn up. Don't forget that.

F. M. P.

The Proprietor of the Californian:

SIR:—I have no hesitation in applying to you for a situation which I know I can fill in a manner which will benefit you. As a satirist I am unequalled. As a poet I am free to confess my merit has as yet been but partially acknowledged. What of that? It will be. It will be. Perhaps when I am dead. What is Bowman? Can he write a pome? Can Kendall write such pomes as I have written? Is there a line of poetry in ont-crspping? I don't care. Let the cusses do what they like. I don't care.

H—B—RT C. D—R.

To the Publishers of the Californian:

GENTLEMEN:—I learn you are in want of an editor for your esteemed journal. If you would give less space to the frivolities of Bohemianism, and more to matters of national concernment, your paper might be made as popular as the Flag, which owes its present position mainly to the efforts of my individual genius. At a time when the sables of bereavement shadow thousands of homes from the Des Moines to Piscataqua, and the grass is still incarnidined with patriots' blood, over a corpse-strewn continent fragrant with the votive lilies that consecrate the graves of a nation's dead, and moistened with the inexorable baptism of patriots' tears—at such a time when the awful scroll of Apocalyptic vision is unrolled before the gaze of the blinded nations; when the seventh vial is opened and the seventh trumpet is sounded, and the great Dragon is loosed and Satan is revealed upon earth sitting in the White House, in the shape of Andy Johnson—at such a time it is of concernment to community that the truth should be proclaimed from the housetops as with the tripple thunders that made Sinai quake when the Law was delivered to Moses. * * * If these terms meet your views, let me hear from you with all convenient speed. Yours, etc., C. B. McD—LD.

P. S. It is possible that the low revilements of a viperous little slanderer who exudes the excremental venom of his malignant nature in sundry disreputable, scurril mongering papers, may have created a prejudice against me in some quarters. I incurred the enmity of this purchasable Bohemian whose Digger locks sweep a greasy semi-circle upon the back of his coat, by refusing to loan him a clean shirt and my tooth brush when he was upon the Flag, since which time he has pursued me with the untiring worriment of a warlike gad-fly buzzing about a bull in the dog days. C. B. McD.

Proprietor Californian:

Perhaps you want an editor now. Since my "Mouse-Trap" has been out of the paper, I have seen precious little in it that I consider worth reading I can tell you. I am willing to edit your paper provided that you will allow me to devote one column every week to correcting Fitz Smythe's grammatical errors—Good gracious! it's little enough for the work I should have to do—and half a column to pitch into the awful hash the papers generally publish. As I am really the only thoroughly educated man in California, it is hardly worth your while to look farther for an editor. I know Webb is jealous of me, but that is no consequence as you have a controlling interest. Of course you know I don't want you to say anything about this if you don't want me to be editor, but you're a fool if you don't.

Yours truly, TREM.

To the Proprietor of the Californian:

GENT:—You want an editor, and I am satisfied that I am the person you want. You want your paper popularized, and I can do it. I think I may say without vanity, that taking all things into consideration, I am the best writer on this coast. If you don't believe it, ask Squarza or M—rr—t. After all, the real test of writing, is its market value, and where's the man on this coast who can command as much per column as I? If my merits are not universally recognized, it is mainly owing to my own excessive and morbid modesty. I am probably the only thorough scholar (in the true sense of the term) now connected with the California Press. Look at my "Leaden Papers!"—for I am "the Mufti," though the fact is not generally known, as I never mention it. But in this country they have a fashion of calling every man "a scholar" who has been through a Yankee College. You are probably aware of my reputation as the best critic in California, as well as the most extensively read. Should I take charge of the CALIFORNIAN, I shall occasionally give it variety by writing a theological article for the benefit of our clergy (who are shockingly behind in professional reading) or an essay on Kant's philosophy. * * * * I am sure I can build up your paper, and make a property of it. Of course I can't all at once elevate it to the standard of the Dramatic Chronicle or the News Letter, but give me time, and I'll show you what a live man can do. I have studied the taste of this community, and I tell you, you must pitch in to persons and things with a free broad-axe if you want to win. In that vein I don't give in to P—xl—y himself, and when it's necessary to do anything in the tomahawking and scalping line, I can operate as neatly as the Tripple Thunderer.

Yours, &c., J. F. B—WM—N.

P. S.—You needn't fear any irregularity about supplying copy. I haven't joined the Dashaways to be sure; but then my friend Squarza has sold out, and so I've dried up on Rum Punch. J. F. B.

FARALLONES. August 20, 1866.

Publishers Californian:

GENTLEMEN:—You had better hire me to fill the vacant editorship of THE CALIFORNIAN. What you want is a good Moral tone to the paper. If I have got a strong suit, that is it. If I am a wild enthusiast on any subject, that is the one. I am peculiarly fitted for such a position. I have been a missionary to the Sandwich Islands, and I have got the hang of all that sort of thing to a fraction. I gave such excellent satisfaction in Hawaii nei that they let me off when my time was up. I was justly considered to be the high chief of that Serious Family down there. I mention here—and I mention it modestly—I mention it with that fatal modesty which has always kept me down—that the missionaries always spoke of me as the Moral Phenomenon when I was down there. They were amazed to behold to what a dizzy altitude human morality may be hoisted up, as exemplified in me. I am honestly proud of the title they have conferred upon me, and shall always wear it in remembrance of my brief but gratifying missionary labors in the Islands.

What you want is Morality. You have run too much poetry; you have slathered—so to speak—(missionary term,)—you have slathered too many frivolous sentimental tales into your paper; too much wicked wit and too much demoralizing humor; too much harmful elevating literature. What the people are suffering for, is Morality. Turn them over to me. Give me room according to my strength. I can fetch them!

Let me hear from you. You could not do better than hire me. I can bring your paper right up. You ought to know, yourself, that when I play my hand in the high moral line, I take a trick every time.

Yours, "MARK TWAIN."
Surnamed THE MORAL PHENOMENON.

Proprietor of the Californian:

SIR:—I am pining. The slurs which have been cast in my teeth on the subject of sage brush have rankled and festered my soul. My soul has suppurated; and if perchance this communication may show any signs of gangrenous putridity (I speak metaphorically) think that it is the outpouring of a wronged, a blighted, blackened soul. I pine. Like the deadly shade of the Upas tree, Joe blights my fairest efforts—or worse, claims them as his own. 'Twas I wrote that criticism on "Outcroppings," Joe had no hand in it. Enough. You want an editor. I, I made the Golden Era. What's the Era now? What has it been since I left? What? Ah! Do you remember those contributions over the signature of "Blunderbus?" I guess you do. Am I engaged?

R. N. D—GG—TT.

A number of similar applications from others of our literati, are reserved for our next issue.

A Model Verdict.

On Monday, August 20th, the Coroner convened a jury of six men for the purpose of ascertaining whether the death of the eight persons, crushed by the fall of the building on Summer street, was caused by neglect on the part of any person; if so, to decide who that person was, and whether such neglect on his part and the consequent death of eight persons, would justify the bringing in of a verdict of "manslaughter" against him. This was the evident duty of J. M. Verdenal, O. P. Sutton, A. M. Comstock, Wm. A. Plunkett, Robert Merrill, and W. P. C. Stebbins, who formed that jury. They were at liberty to call for any number of witnesses for the purpose of satisfying themselves on every point connected with the fall of the building. This conscientious jury after listening to the testimony of numerous witnesses, appear to have come to the conclusions: that is a bad piece of business; the men are dead; the least said the soonest mended; it won't do them any good to annoy the living, etc. But they must bring in a verdict which, while it will not annoy any respectable gentleman by casting blame on him, shall satisfy the public. To do this requires art. He who best understands how, by ambiguous phrases, to conceal thought, must write a verdict for these tender hearted gentlemen to sign. We publish the following extract from this model verdict, calling attention to its beauties by italicizing a word here and there:

"And from the above facts the jury arrive at the conclusion that the fall of said building was caused by an excavation having been made parallel with, and 2 feet 10 inches distant from its eastern wall; that said wall, under these circumstances, reposed upon a clay bank, inadequate to sustain the pressure of so great a weight; that in the eyes of casual observers, as well as practical mechanics, it was evident, before the building fell, that while there was no moral certainty of it, there was at least a probability that the wall might give way; that, while such a probability existed, however faint it might be, it became the duty of the owner of said building, and likewise of those having made the excavation adjoining it, to take the necessary precautions to guard others against the smallest possibility of accident, as it, apparently, on one side involved the lives of tenants and on the other of laboring men.

They further conclude, and are of opinion, that while no one should perhaps be charged with criminal neglect, there was, at least, a want of due care exhibited on the part of those whose duty it was to see that proper measures be taken to prevent the happening of this terrible calamity.'

If they had concluded by saying "But, after all, the thing's done and can't be undone, and if any one is to blame he did not let the house fall down on purpose, and we are not going to annoy him," a key would have been afforded by which the meaning of this curious non-committal verdict might have been understood by the careless reader. The Grand Jury will probably have sufficient bravery to express in plain words the truth which this Coroner's Jury so shamefully shirked.

Kindly Warnings.

John J. Knowlton having filed his petition in insolvency, and stated as the cause of his becoming insolvent—losses incurred in publishing a newspaper called the San Francisco Evening Journal, the Bulletin and Examiner draw a moral from the misfortune of John J. Knowlton. The former heads the paragraph in which it recounts the facts, "The Result of Starting a Newspaper;" the latter commences: "A Warning," and closes in the following lugubrious style:

"The fate of this newspaper publisher should act as a salutary warning to all who have the desire to rush rashly into the perilous field of journalism."

It is particularly kind of these newspapers to warn people from rushing into the perilous field of journalism, and of course they are entirely disinterested. Isn't this a pretty dodge? Poor J. J. Knowlton is to be stuck up as a scarecrow in the field of journalism to frighten away the rather timid birds of the some day-to-be-published Times, who have not yet quite made up their minds to alight in the aforesaid field. All the proprietors of daily papers in this city would be perfectly heart-broken if the Times should cause it's prospective publishers to become insolvent—hence these kindly warnings.

Old Acquaintances.

The daily papers are making a great fuss and abusing Judge Rix shamefully, because he admitted two thieves who had frequently been had up before to bail in the sum of $40 each, and on their forfeiting their bail refused to issue a bench warrant, and the next morning sentenced a man to two months' imprisonment for stealing a pair of socks and a handkerchief, this being his first offense. The reason of Judge Rix's pursuing this course must be plain to everyone. The last-named person was entirely unknown to the Judge, and was therefore entitled to no leniency, while the two former were old acquaintances.

A Bad Beginning.

No one has ever yet heard of a telegraph line that did not bring false stories, but still the Atlantic cable need not have commenced business with such a yarn as that gunpowder plot to blow up the Houses of Parliament. It is terrible to think that when such an enterprise as the laying of the Atlantic cable has been completed—in these days of nitro-glycerine—we are told that a policeman picked up nine pounds of powder and a match near the Houses of Parliament, and this led to the Atlantic cable being used to inform us, on the other side of the ocean, that it was suspected there was a plot afoot to blow up the Houses of Parliament—with nine pounds of powder and a match!

A Slight Difference.

The Call publishes a table, compiled from the Great Register, which it says shows "the nativity of the residents of San Francisco." Of course this table instead of showing the nativity of the residents of San Francisco, can only give the place of birth of those who were either born in the United States or who have become citizens by naturalization. This table shows 8,517 American born voters against 6,301 foreign born.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO
To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibns, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma.
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,
1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

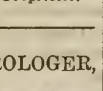
Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.

Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,



Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge.

JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6-3m Proprietor.

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. je15 3m

PISCO!

G. & F. MARTELL'S COGNAC;
JAMES HENNESSY'S Cognac;
STEAMBOAT GIN;
OLD TOM GIN;
IRISH WHISKY,
from Bond direct.

For sale by V. SQARZA,
my28 Lied street, San Francisco.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work o all kinds, Spikes,

Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
je10 3m

MONEY TO LOAN!
MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,

53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, President

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

ALLEN'S
LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR
COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH, CONSUMPTION,
And all Diseases of the
CHEST AND LUNGS

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

DR. HUMPHREYS'
Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults... fants.....	25 25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faccache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

A BEAUTIFUL COMPLEXION!

Secret of Beauty!

USE GEO. W. LAIRD'S

See that the name,

GEO. W. LAIRD,

is stamped

ON THE BOTTLE.

No other is Genuine.

BLOOM OF YOUTH,

OR

LIQUID PEARL!

The best article in the world for Preserving and Beautifying the Complexion and Skin.

This magnificent Toilet Article is prepared only by GEO. W. LAIRD, 74 Fulton street, New York, formerly 483 Broadway.

Sold by Druggists everywhere.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay
ap27-3m San Francisco

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

MARY SMITH, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one-half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, be awarded to Plaintiff, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney, 535 Clay street. } je30-3m

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that in pursuance of the order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California, made on the 26th day of July, 1866, in the matter of the estate of Andrew Roheson, deceased, the undersigned, administrator with the will annexed of said deceased, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, in two parcels, subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Tuesday, the 11th day of September, 1866, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the counting room of Aldrich & Merrill, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county, all the right, title and interest of said Andrew Roheson, deceased, at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has, by operation of law or otherwise acquired, other than or in addition to that of said deceased at the time of his death, in and to all those certain two lots of land situated in said city and county and described as follows, viz: 1st. Commencing at a point on the west side of Mason street, 77 1 2 feet northerly from the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets; thence running northerly along said side of Mason street 60 feet; thence at a right angle westerly 77 1 2 feet; thence at a right angle southerly 60 feet; and thence at a right angle easterly 77 1-2 feet to the point of beginning. 2d. Commencing at a point on the north line of Ellis street, 117 1 2 feet westerly from the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets; running thence westerly along Ellis street 20 feet; thence at a right angle northerly 60 feet; thence at a right angle easterly 20 feet; and thence at a right angle southerly 60 feet to the place of beginning. And said administrator will receive offers or bids for said property from this date till said 11th day of September, 1866, at 12 o'clock noon, at said counting-room of Aldrich & Merrill, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county. EDWARD F. STONE, Administrator with the will annexed of Andrew Roheson, deceased.
San Francisco, August 11th, 1866. au11-td

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of GEORGE D. HANSEN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of CHRISTIAN KIRK, the Executor of the estate of GEORGE D. HANSEN, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the heir and devisee of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

IT IS ORDERED, That all persons interested in the estate of the said George D. Hansen, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the court-room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on Wednesday, the fifth day of September, A. D. 1866, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate to the heir and devisee of the said George D. Hansen, deceased, according to law:

It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 5th day of September, A. D. 1866, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated, San Francisco, August 3d, 1866. 4w

PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors.

It appearing to this court from the petition this day presented and filed by Robert L. Harris, the guardian of the estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors, praying for an order of sale of the real estate belonging to his said wards, that it would be beneficial to the said wards that such real estate should be sold at private sale.

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said wards, and all persons interested in said estate, appear before this court at the court room thereof, at the court house, in the city and county of San Francisco, on Monday the 10th day of September, 1866, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least three successive weeks before said hearing of said petition in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

Dated August 10th, A. D., 1866. M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
au11 4t

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—Estate of WILLIAM MACMICHAEL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, administrator with the will annexed, of the above named estate, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against William MacMichael, deceased, to exhibit the same, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at his place of business, No 12 Post street, Masonic Temple, in the city and county of San Francisco.

San Francisco, August 18, 1866.

THEODORE L. SCHELL,
Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of William McMichael, deceased.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Administrator. 5t

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,
VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON TUESDAY, - - - SEPT. 25,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S
Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 16th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

STEAMERS FOR AUGUST:

The following steamships will be despatched from San Francisco on the date given:

AUGUST 30th, - - - - GOLDEN AGE,
Captain E. S. Farnsworth,
(Connecting with the NEW YORK, Captain Bradbury.)

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

The splendid steamship COLORADO will be despatched for CHINA on TUESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1867.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

GRAND OPENING
OF THE
Circassian Saloon,

Corner of Dupont and Pacific streets,

(Formerly "Diana Saloon,")

ON SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1866.

NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT!—Magic and Gymnastic Feats, free of charge.

The best of WINES, LIQUORS, LUNCH, and CIGARS always on hand.

N. B. Fine Vocal Music, Polite Waiters, etc.
au11 1m

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late GREAT INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my26

CALIFORNIA
Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT. W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets,

mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

QUINCY HALL,

545, 547, 549 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE LARGEST CLOTHING EMPORIUM in California. The daily sales from the establishment is a sufficient guaraatee that the prices are less than those of any other house on the Pacific coast. Here you also fiad clothing of the best of California Cloth, both for Wholesale and Retail trade. Also, particular attention paid to making up fine clothing to order. jy21

RING'S

VEGETABLE AMBROSIA

IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale aud retail, by

JOHN F. SNOW,

Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,
je23 San Francisco.

MEAGHER, TAAFE & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS OF

DRY GOODS, LINENS,
FURNISHING GOODS,
YANKEE NOTIONS,
FANCY GOODS, ETC.

AGENTS FOR THE

MOUNT VERON DUCK COMPANY

NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.

RETAIL HOUSE, - - - NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
jy21-3m Lick House.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL

AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoinin Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. au5-3m

FURNITURE

AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

HEUSTON,

HASTINGS

& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE

STOCK OF

CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT

REDUCED PRICES.

je17-3m

ELECTION PROCLAMATION.

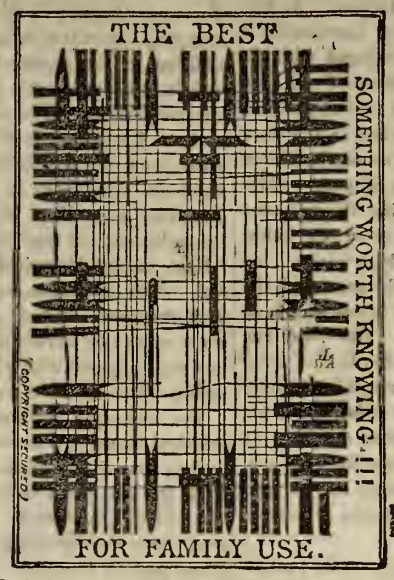
FOR THE MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

PUBLIC NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the Municipal Election in and for the City and County of San Francisco, will be held on WEDNESDAY, September 5th, 1866; and the qualified voters of said city and county are hereby called upon to meet in their respective districts for the purpose of electing the followiug-named officers at said election. to wit:

Attorney and Counsellor
Auditor.
Tax Collector.
Public Administrator.
Superintendent of Pub Streets, Highways, and Squres.
Chief of Police.

One Supervisor and one School Director in each of the following Districts: First, Third, Fifth, Seventh, Niuth, and Eleventh, for the full term.

Also, one Supervisor in the Eighth District for an unexpired term.



Witness my hand and the seal of the city and county of San Francisco, this fourteenth day of August, [SEAL.] 1866.

H. P. COON, Mayor.

Attest: CHAS. L. WIGGIN, Clerk. au18

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street. - - - Petaluma.
mar24-6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

To decipher, lower the top of the paper to an angle of forty-five degrees; then close one eye, and read at your ease.

THE Accidental Insurance Co,

OF NEW YORK,

ISSUES POLICIES INSURING AGAINST INJURIES OF all kinds, aad death resulting from accident.

In case death does not result from the iajury, the insured receives a weekly compensation as long as he is disabled (not to exoeed twenty-six weeks.)

Policy.	Premium.	Weekly Compensation.
$1,000	$ 5 00	$ 5 00
$2,000	$10 00	$10 00
$5,000	$25 00	$25 00
$10,000	$50 00	$50 00

SEA VOYAGE POLICIES,

Covering risk to New York, cost $2 per $1,000.

☞ No Medical Examination required.

Life Insurance.

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
HARTFORD, CONN.

For Policies, or further information, apply to

A. D. SMITH & CO., Agents,

Northwest corner Montgomery and Secramento streets
au4 3m

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

je30-3m

BREWSTER & CO.'S

Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the comiug seasou, aud with a view to

SUPPLYING THE

WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city aad country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should he addressed to

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wauts of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Waro-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
je16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
je30 3m San Francisco.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

je17-3m

YANKEE NOTIONS

AND

FANCY GOODS!

MERCHANTS wanting Goods in this line shou'd not fail to examine our stock, which is new and attractive, before huyiag elsewhere.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
jy21-3m Battery street, near Pine.

CARRINGTON & CO'S

GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothing, Iustruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furuiture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Geutlemeu's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam-engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOCR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT.

Address:

CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

Cor. Sansome and California streets, San Francisco

Insnrances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

mediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

GRAPHIC.—During the campaign in East Tennessee, in the winter of 1863-64, quite a spirited engagement occurred near Bean Station, in the beautiful valley of the Holston. In this engagement Colonel Wolford, of Kentucky, commanded a division of Federal cavalry, and was hotly engaged with the enemy, and at nightfall was compelled to retreat. Some time after we visited Bean Station, and passing over the ground held by Wolford's division we came to a log hut, in the door of which stood a "lone woman" with seven small children and "one at the breast"—one of that class of poor "white trash" who so frequently complained during the war that "we all will perish to death if you-uns don't go to your hums, and let we-uns alone." Approaching the "lone woman," we informed her that we were looking over the ground of the late engagement, and asked her if she would please inform us of the position held by the Federal troops. Her reply was thus laconic: "Wa'al, yer see, Captin Woolfords kum along with two long strings of fighters, all mounted on critter backs, and he had two wagon guns, and he stretched his strings of fighters right back o' my house thar, and they fit and they fought till clean dark, and then tore down my ash-house, and Captin Woolfords lit out and never has yet paid me a cent for it. Do you-uns know whar Captin Woolfords is now?"

Fully satisfied with her graphic descriptinn of the engagement, and informing her that we did know of "Captin Woolford's" whereabouts, we passed on.

PARISIAN CAFE.—In a Parisian café you will find as many women as men—respectable women, too, who come with their husbands, and bring their children with them. There they sit in a family group, round a marble table, sipping their coffee or their wine, thinking it no shame to be seen by any of their neighbors, because there is nothing to be ashamed of. The café is not simply a drinking shop. There is no necessity to drink anything stronger than coffee or eau sucre; and you may sit at the table as long as you please, read the paper, play at dominoes, or chat with your friends. All the amenities of private life are strictly observed. The men are gallant and polite; you never hear a word that could offend the most sensitive, and you never—or very rarely indeed—see any one tipsy. There is nothing about the place to suggest the drinking shop, or to impress you with the obligation to drink. You feel that you are at liberty to take your ease and pleasure, and do as you like. So accustomed is the landlord to look upon his house as a place for the convenience and general entertainment of the public, that he will sometimes take more interest in a game of dominoes or piquet than in the vending of his goods. Madame will have to shriek to him to come and attend to his business. In Paris even the lowest classes take their wine like gentlemen; in London they swill their liquor like pigs. A London public house is a trough.

A FACE MAKER.—Europe, which usually sends its artists into all parts of the world, has just received one from America, who is destined to a large amount of success in Paris; the artist in question is what is called, in theatrical language, a grime, or face maker. The talent of this singular grimacier consists in imitating the heads of celebrated historical personages. He places himself behind a frame hidden with a white cloth, and beside a table covered with wigs, false beards and paint brushes. As soon as his toilet is made, he suddenly draws aside the curtain, and exhibits to the spectators the head of Washington, Napoleon, Charles I., Wellington, Louis XI., or that of a madman, an idiot, a fury, a criminal, &c. The principal merit of this curious spectacle, is the rapidity with which the artist changes his head, for each transformation is perfect in its truthful resemblance! This genius, who has only as yet appeared in the salons, is about to "make faces" in public, and his appearance is looked forward to with impatience.

PRESIDENT JOHNSON'S proposed "recreating tour" as far West as Chicago, furnishes the text for a leader in the Sacramento Union, in which said tour is characterised as an electioneering raid through the North by "two experienced stump-speakers, whose political existence is staked upon the issue of the contest," Secretary Seward being, we presume, the other "experienced stump-speaker."

THE Board of Health has induced the Board of Supervisors to pass an ordinance enjoining the sweeping of streets weekly by all parties in front of their premises, in the populous portions of the city, and the removal of the dirt by the street contractor.

COMMENDABLE.—Messrs. Bradley & Rulofson donated the proceeds of their gallery on Wednesday last—over $200—to the Ladies' Protection and Relief Society of thi city.

INSURED.—The late landlord of the Summer Street House, John Brewster, Jr., was insured in the Broolyn Life Insurance Company for $5,000, which sum has been paid to his widow.

THE largest vat in Barclay and Perkin's Brewery is said to contain 108,000 gallons.

AMUSEMENTS.

LADY DON still proves as attractive as ever at the Opera House, and "full houses" is the rule—without an exception, notwithstanding the adage to the contrary. In addition to the regular dramatic entertainments, many fine ballads are introduced in the pieces, or presented in a musical interlude between them, to give the audience an opportunity to hear Lady Don in some sterling old English, Scotch, or American songs and ballads. The ability and simplicity with which she sings many of them, has not been equaled in San Francisco since Kate Hayes sung to her thousands here in the earlier days of the city's history. "Home, Sweet Home;" "Meet me by Moonlight;" "Should auld Acquaintance;" and "John Anderson, my Jo," are sung by Lady Don with such sweetness and feeling as to charm and delight her audiences, and to be worthy of the critic's particular note. Then, how martially and with what vigor she sings that fiery Scotch ballad, "The MacGregor's Gathering."

The burlesque of Orpheus and Eurydice has been the principal dramatic attraction throughout the week, accompanied by some little comedietta as an introductory performance, with the exception of Thursday evening, when Kenilworth was revived. Last night the organization known as the Veteran Corps was the recipient of a good benefit. Mr. McCullough reciting Sheridan's Ride for the occasion.

The spectacular burlesque of Aladdin, or the Wonderful Scamp, will be produced for the first time in California this afternoon. This burlesque was originally brought out in London in 1861, and made a splendid hit. Great preparation and extra care in regard to scenic display and costumes, have been bestowed by the management in its production. Lady Don, Kate Denin, Mrs. Jackson, Harry Courtaine, H. D. Thompson and others are in the cast. Aladdin will be played this evening, and every evening next week.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.—The favorite opera, Ernani, was given as an extra performance last Saturday evening, and impressed us as the most brilliant success of the season; we certainly have not observed a more enthusiastic and delighted audience, even at the first representation of Lucia, already chronicled by us as being the best performance up to that time. Signor Manousi, in the third act, excited an absolute furore by his rendering of the beautiful cavatina, "Oh, de verd' anni miei," and in the splendid solo and chorus, "Oh sommo Carlo," (given with such effect as to receive a tumultuous encore,) he introduced a high A flat, which he sustained with marvellous purity and vigor. Signor Milleri's "Silva" was an improvement on his previous effort, although his "Infelice" and "Io l'amo, al vecchio misero" were taken a good deal too slow, a fault made more conspicuous in the latter by Mancusi's rather too hurried rendering of "Vieni meco," which immediately followed. Signorina Brambilla, Signor Bianchi, and the rest, were excellent in their respective characters, as usual.

The second season commenced on Monday with Un Ballo in Maschera, which was given in a manner by no means creditable to the troupe, especially as it had been twice produced before. Under ordinary circumstances we should feel bound to make this slovenly performance the text for some pretty savage criticism; but as the manager is really a victim to the insatiate craving for new operas, and has done (as we remarked last week) more on his part than the public have on theirs, we shall merely say that the principal singers were in poor voice, the chorus unusually dull, the prompter (necessarily though unsuccessfully) vociferous, the leader apparently indifferent, and the orchestra worse than all the other performers together.

La Sonnambula, full of delightful and popular melodies, was given for the first time, on Wednesday evening, to an audience well pleased. Signorina Brambilla sang the music of "Amina" with exquisite delicacy, and was ably supported by Signor Morley as "Elvino," their voices blending most perfectly in the duets, "Prendi: l'a nel" and "D' un pensiero." M'lle Tourny was very good as "Lisa," although she committed an error in varying at all the second verse of her opening air, "Tutto e gioja;" her voice has not yet the lightness that is necessary to make any variations tolerable in music so well known. The great triumph of the evening was Signor Milleri's "Count Rodolpho," an impersonation full of life and spirit, and worthy to be placed by the side of his "Zaccaria" (in Nabuco) for artistic excellence, though so different in style as to establish his remarkable and heretofore unsuspected versatility; he was frequently and warmly applauded. We must not omit to notice the lively acting of Roucovieri as "Alessio," and the careful and satisfactory singing of Mrs. Cameron as "Teresa." The chorus was moderately good, but the orchestra grows worse and worse.

Il Trovatore was performed last night. This evening Faust will be given. On Monday Criepino e La Comare will be brought out, after long and careful preparation, and bids fair to prove a decided success.

DR. JORDAN'S ANOTOMICAL MUSEUM.—The cerplastic preparations, in anatomy and pathology, which Dr. Jordan has at great expense brought to this country, are on exhibition at Eureka Hall to day, from morning till 10 o'clock, P. M. On Sundays the Hall will be open from five to ten P. M. only.

WAR MAP.—A. Gensoul, of the Pacific Map Depot, 511 Montgomery street, has just published a very useful map of re erence, embracing the territory of the seat of war in Europe, with the boundaries of Prussia, Austria, Italy, etc., and the locality of all their principal cities and towns clearly defined. It appears to be very carefully and correctly compiled.

EPIDEMIC CHOLERA: A treatise on the modes of treatment of this disease, their respective results, and directions for prevention; and what to do in cases of sudden emergency, by John F. Geary, M. D., has been laid on our table. H. H. Bancroft & Co. are the publishers.

A NEW AND GRAND EPOCH IN MEDICINE.—Dr. Maggiel is the fonnder of a new medical system. The quantitarians, whose vast internal doses enfeeble the stomach and paralyze the bowels, must give precedence to the man who restores health and appetite with from one or two of his extraordinary pills, and cures the most virulent sores with a box or so of his wonderful and all-healing salve. These two great specifics of the Doctor are fast superseding all the stereotyped nostrums of the day. Extraordinary cures by Maggiel's Pills and salve have opened the eyes of the public to the inefficiency of the so-called remedies of others, and upon which people have so long blindly depended. Maggiel's Pills are not of the class that are swallowed by the dozen, and of which every boxfull taken creates an absolute necessity for another. One or two of Maggiel's Pills suffice to place the bowels in perfect order, tone the stomach, create an appetite, and render the spirits light and buoyant. There is no griping, and no reaction in the form of constipation. If the liver is affected, its functions are restored, and if the nervous system is feeble it is invigorated. This last quality makes the medicines very desirable for the wants of delicate females. Ulcerous and eruptive diseases are literally extinguished by the disinfectant power of Maggiel's salve. In fact, it is here announced that Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhea Pills cure where all others fail. While, for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. MAGGIEL, No. 11 Pine street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box. R. H. McDonald & Co., Agents for Pacific coast, corner Sansome and Pine streets, San Francisco. c14

"THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR HOW TO LIVE, AND WHAT TO LIVE FOR."—This is the title of an interesting and highly useful little book, published by Dr. Beck, of this city. It is especially adapted for the perusal of young men, nevertheless its truthful pages should be read by all, as they contain good, sound, healthy matter which can be easily understood and appreciated by every reader. This work is issued gratuitously on application to the Doctor, or will be sent free to any address on receipt of postage stamp or envelope addressed to Dr. Beck's office, 314 Kearny street, or post office Box 1599.

Dr. Beck is a member of several American and European Universities, and has published numerous works on Anatomy, Medicine, and Surgery. His former connection with the principal "Anatomical Museums" of New York, Paris, London, etc., combined with his experience in his profession render him a highly desirable person to consult, and we can confidently recommend him to the public.

WE call the attention of the public to an advertisement, in our today's issue, of Messrs. C. Weiderbold & Co.'s new Piano Warerooms, No. 685 Market street. The above firm have lately been in receipt of a large assortment of fine square and upright pianos, amongst which we notice John B Dunham's, of New York, one of the oldest and most favorably known manufacturers of the Eastern States. Weiderhold & Co. are now introducing, for the first time, his pianos in the California market, and we are sure, judging from the quality on hand, they will succeed in establishing amongst the musical public of the Pacific, the reputation of J. B. Dunham's pianos. These fine piano warerooms are, from this on, kept open evenings till eight o'clock, when all interested in music and fine pianos can call and examine for themselves.—Alta California.

THE New York Tribune, in speaking of the Pianos of the manufactory of Wm. Knabe & Co., of Baltimore, says: "These instruments are approved by Strakosch, Anschutz, Gustave Satter, Vieuxtemps, Muzio, Robert Heller, G. W. Morgan, and many other first class artists." Fradel, alluding to a recent occasion, wrote: "Your Grand Pianos in Irving Hall told out with brilliant effect. Their tone, richness, power and carrying quality were more than sufficient to fill that large Concert Hall, and I look upon them as instruments of sterling excellence, and as successful rivals to those instruments which have, heretofore, monopolized the concert halls and the markets of the country." Messrs. Frisbee & Scott, No. 8 Montgomery street, are sole agents for these superior Pianos.

THERE is one thing about Dr. Bourne's style of dealing with sick people which distinguishes it from that of many others—he never deceives or makes them promises which he knows he cannot fulfil. That course has obtained for him the unlimited confidence of all who know him.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co. announce in our advertising columns the opening of their new style of Fall Dress Goods, consisting of Silks, Poplins, Empress Cloth, Plaids, Cashmeres, Merinos, De Laines, etc,, to which we call the attention of our lady readers.

RHEUMATISM, inflammatory or chronic, however slight or severe, is cured quicker by Dr. Bourne's method than by any other means whatever, while the process is a pleasant one. Cures guaranteed in all cases if required. No. 10 Masonic Temple Post street.

THE great charm of Davidson's Circassian Bloom, for the complexion and skin, is its perfect assimilation to nature. No one can detect its use, while it beautifies and enhances the purity of the skin.

COLDS are very quickly as well as pleasantly cured by Dr, Bourne's baths, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street.

NEURALGIA, it matters not how severe, is quickly cured by Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for and take none but LYON'S, bearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervation, listlessness, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaints they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedentary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spavin, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Strains, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westbrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky, and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off and turning gray, and promotes its growth upon prematurely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.
E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no othe e7m

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

PHOTOGRAPHY.—The pictures taken in this city are far superior to those taken in the East and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The best gallery to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The NEW YORK, on the east side side of Third street, a few doors below Market, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries.

ALL GOOD JUDGES OF PIANOS agree that Frishee & Scott have the finest and largest stock of Pianos in this city. They are agents of the celebrated firms of Caleuberg & Vaupel, of New York, and Kuahe & Co., Baltimore. There is certainly not an instrument equal to those imported by them. Mr. Gusvav A. Scott pays, also, particular attention to having their stock of foreign and American sheet music equal to any New York store. They keep at No. 3 Montgomery street, Masonic Temple.

JACOB SHEW & Co., No. 315 Montgomery street, near Pine, take First-Class Photographs, of all kinds, at the lowest scale of prices adopted by the Associated Photographers. Photographs retouched in the highest style of the art.

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE

FOR

TAX COLLECTOR,

HENRY A. COBB,

OF THE FIRM OF COBB & SINTON,

jy21 NO. 407 CALIFORNIA STREET.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,

ja27-tf between California and Pine.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN, D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty-second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,

jc2 4m NEW YORK.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,

THE

Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,

ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets.

DEMOCRATIC

CANDIDATE FOR

Chief of Police,

P. J. WHITE,

OF THE FIRM OF P. J. WHITE & CO.,

au11 No. 412 Front street.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.)

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
Whitcomb & Dyer, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co.. 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyee & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peiree, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pin

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Speen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N.E. cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. C. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldhush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.
T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

UNION CANDIDATE

FOR

City and County Attorney,

H. M. HASTINGS.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapere (one copy only) sent to actual snbscribers withiu the county where printed and pnblished, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE,

751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

AN INSTITUTION designed to prepare boys, young and middle-aged men for the active duties of business in the shortest time possible and at the least expense. For "COLLEGE REVIEW," giving information, call at the College, or address E. P. HEALD, President.
au11 3m

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM
AT THE
State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,
General Agent,
111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.
my10-3m

NOTICE TO TAX-PAYERS.

CLERK'S OFFICE, BOARD OF SUPERVISORS,
San Francisco, August 13, 1866.

Public notice is hereby given that the Books of the Real Estate and Military Assessment Rolls of the city and county of San Fraocisco for the fiscal year 1866-'67, will be open for examination in this office from 9 A. M. to 4 o'clock P. M., during the sitting of the Board of Equalization.

A Committee of the Board of Equalization will be in session in the chambers of the Board of Supervisors daily (Sundays excepted) from 1 to 3 o'clock P. M., until further notice, for the purpose of receiving and considering applications for the alterations or reduction of assessment upon Real Estate.

All applications for reduction of assessments are required to be verified by each. (See Statutes of 1863-'64, page 189.) JAS. W. BINGHAM, au18 Clerk of Board of Supervisors.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)
WHOLESALE AND RETAIL
Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

AYER'S PILLS.

ARE YOU SICK, FEEBLE and complaining? Are you out of order, with your system deranged and your feelings uncomfortable? These symptoms are often the prelude to serious illness. Some fit of sickness is creeping upon you, and should be averted by a timely use of the right remedy. At once TAKE AYER'S PILLS, and cleanse out the disordered humors, purify the blood, and let the fluids move on unobstructed in health again. They atimulate the functions of the body into vigorous activity, purify the system from the obstructions which make disease. A cold settles somewhere in the body, and deranges its natural functions. These, if not relieved, react upon themselves and the surrounding organs, producing general aggravation, suffering and derangement. While in this condition, and see how directly they restore the natural action of the system, and with it the buoyant feeling of health again. What is true and so apparent in this trivial and common complaint is also true in many of the deep-seated and dangerous distempers. The same purgative effect expels them. Caused by similar obstructions and derangements of the natural functions of the body they are rapidly and many of them surely cured by the same means. None who know the virtue of these Pills will neglect to employ them when suffering from the disorders they cure, such as Headache, Foul Stomach, Dysentery, Bilious Complaints, Indigestion, Derangement of the Liver, Costiveness, Constipation, Heartburn, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Worms and Suppression, when taken in large doses.

TAKE AYER'S PILLS,

They are Sugar-Coated, so that the most sensitive can take them easily, and they are surely the best purgative medicine yet discovered.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
jy26-2m and all Dealers.

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal.

THE FOURTH ANNUAL SESSION of the above Institution commenced July 30th, 1866.

The age for admission is from seven to fifteen years. For those more than fifteen years of age, it will be necessary to have testimonials of good character from respectable parties.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance; also, such sum to be deposited as will be sufficient to pay the traveling expenses of the student to his place of residence, and other contingent expenses, such as books, clothes, etc.

No Student will be received without such deposit.

The terms are so reduced (less than one-half the usual charges in this State) that the Institution can be conducted only on a rigid cash principle; hence any failure in remitting the Pension will oblige the authorities of the College to charge ten per cent. additional, or forward the student to his parents or guardian.

Though it be a Catholic Institution, yet pupils of all denominations will be admitted, and their religious convictions respected; but, for the sake of uniformity, all will be required to be present at the public religious exercises.

Bedding, towels, etc., will be furnished by the Institution, to defray the cost of which ten dollars will be paid, once only, by each pupil, as an entrance fee.

Each pupil is required to be provided with a neat black suit for Sundays, and two other plain suits, three pairs of boots, with sufficient linen, stockings, etc.

Five dollars will also be charged annually for medicines and medical attendance.

au4-1m REV P. J. GREY, President.

A CARD.

Great Sale of Fine Clothing.

OUR WHOLE STOCK OF FINE CLOTHING and Gents' Furnishing Goods, for the next
THIRTY DAYS,
At Prices that Challenge Competition.

IT MUST BE SOLD, TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner Bush and Montgomery streets, and corner Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.
au4

GOOD NEWS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Teeth Extracted Without Pain

BY THE
ANÆSTHETIC SPRAY PRODUCER,
WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

Partial to a full Upper Set of Teeth, for from $10 to $25, as usual. Filling with best Cement, $1; with Gold, from $1 to $3. All work warranted.
Office, 139 Fourth street, near Howard.
au4-3m J. P. CROWELL, Dentist.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY

J. P. BOGARDUS AND C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,
No 532 Merchant street,
SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN

TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25-tf

TRY LE COUNT'S INK.

CORNER OF
Sacramento and Montgomery streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Post Office Address: Lock Box No. 1477. je30 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine,
ap14-1y Agents for Pacific Coast.

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

As Amended March 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0	05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right	05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand	02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100	05
Every additional $100, or fractional part	05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivaleut in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S.	02
Every additional $100, or fractional part	02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchaudise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place	10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500	50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels	05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less	50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof	50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office	1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule	25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons	10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50	10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000	25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'al part	25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such	25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100	05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y,	25
Certificates, other than specified	05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale	10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500	1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse	50
Gauger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr.	25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1	00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction.	50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons	5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels	25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500	50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less	01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1	02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof	05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof	05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1	00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon	25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries	10
To receive or collect rents	25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1	00
For any other purpose	50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof	50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft,	25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property	02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000	10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for	25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs	25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State	50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid	50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record	50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100	50

TYLER BROTHERS,

NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,

SAN FRANCISCO,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

SCHOOL BOOKS,

STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

BLANK BOOKS,

PORTFOLIOS,

JUVENILE BOOKS,

FANCY ARTICLES,

CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we stamp with

INITIALS,

In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.

je23

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,

Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Capital fully paid in Gold Coin.....$500,000 00
Surplus, April 30, 1866..... 154,824 57

Total Assets.....$654,824 57

Insure against Loss or Damage by Fire, on Stores, Dwellings, Merchandise, Vessels and Cargoes in Port, and other insurable property.

$50,000 is the largest amount taken on any one risk. This Company reinsures whenever the risks are deemed too large for the locality.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY of STOCKHOLDERS

Under the Constitution and Statutes of California.

ALL LOSSES PAID PROMPTLY IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

W. B. BOURN, President.
D. J. STAPLES, Vice President.
CHAS. R. BONN, Secretary. au17-3m

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY.

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order. au15

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

BOWMAN & CO.,
Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,
mar24-6m Main street, Petaluma.

OCCIDENTAL

HOMESTEAD

Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

CAPITAL STOCK, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

THIS ASSOCIATION was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 409, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

Now No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour; instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M.

mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

STOP THAT COUGHING.

SOME OF YOU CAN'T, AND WE PITY YOU. You have tried every remedy but the ONE destined, by its intrinsic merit, to supersede all similar preparations. It is not surprising you should be reluctant to try something else after the many experiments you have made of trashy compounds foisted on the public as a certain cure. but

NEWELL'S

PULMONARY SYRUP

is really the VERY BEST remedy ever compounded for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Consumption. Thousands of people in California and Oregon have been already benefited by the surprising curative powers of

NEWELL'S PULMONARY SYRUP,

and with one accord give it their unqualified approbation. We now address ourselves to all who are unacquainted with this, the greatest Panacea of the age, for the healing of all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, assuring you that has cured thousands, and it will cure you if you try it. This invaluable medicine is pleasant to the taste, soothing, healing and strengthening in its effects; entirely free from all poisonous or deleterious drugs, and perfectly harmless under all circumstances.

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

Certificates from many prominent citizens of San Francisco accompany every bottle of

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

REDINGTON'S

Flavoring Extracts

ARE MADE FROM FRESH FRUITS. Each bottle holds twice as much as any other brand in the market, consequently they are the cheapest and the best. USE NO OTHER.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Agents for the Pacific Coast.

MARTHA WASHINGTON

HAIR RESTORER.

THIS IS A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY, and stands above comparison with any other article for the Hair ever brought before the public.

A PERFECT

Hair Restorer AND Hair Dresser

BOTH COMBINED IN ONE.

First—It is not a Dye.
Second—Will not Color the Skin.
Third—Will restore Gray Hair to a beautiful Black, Brown, Auburn, or whatever might have been its original color, and cause it to assume its former beauty.
Fourth—Will cure all Humors and Diseases of the Scalp.
Fifth—Will remove Dandruff and Scurf from the head, and keep the hair moist and silk like in its appearance as in youthful days.
Sixth—Will promote a healthy growth.
Seventh—Will prevent it from falling off, and cause it to grow on bald heads where there is life and vitality at the roots, but where these are gone there is no hope of success.
Eighth—The best testimony that can be given will be found inside of each bottle.

Warranted to do all we claim for it, or the money refunded after using two bottles. Try it and be convinced.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Price.....One Dollar.

SIMONDS & CO., Proprietors,
Fitzwilliam, N. H.
REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

REDINGTON & CO.'S

Essence of Jamaica Ginger.

THIS VALUABLE PREPARATION, containing in a highly concentrated form all the properties of the Jamaica Ginger, has become one of the most popular domestic remedies for all diseases of the stomach and digestive organs.

As a tonic it will be found invaluable to all persons recovering from debility, whether produced by fever or otherwise, for whilst it imparts to the system all the glow and vigor that can be produced by wine or brandy, it is entirely free from the reactionary effects that follow the use of spirits of any kind.

It is also an excellent remedy for females who suffer from difficult menstruation, giving almost immediate relief to the spasms that so frequently accompany that period.

It gives immediate relief to Nausea, caused by riding in a railroad car, or by sea-sickness, or other causes.

It is also valuable as an external application for Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, etc.

REDINGTON & CO.,
au4-6m Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

THIS AFTERNOON AND EVENING..AUG. 25,

LADY DON,

SUPPORTED BY

Miss Kate Denin,

AND A POWERFUL COMPANY

Will appear in H. J. Byron's Original Burlesque Extravaganza, never before acted here, entitled ALADDIN!

OR, THE WONDERFUL SCAMP!

Aladdin, with Songs.....Lady Don
Princess Badroulhoudour.....Miss Kate Denin
Pekoe.....Mrs Jackson
Ahanazar, a Magician.....Harry Courtaine
Widow Twunkey, Aladdin's Mother, H D Thompson
The Sultan..John Wilson. | The Vizier..H. Sinclair

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - $1 00
Reserved seats, - - - - - - - 50c. extra
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - 25

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

Bianchi's Grand Italian

Opera Troupe.

General Director.....J. P. Crowly
Treasurer.....A. Birrell

NON-SUBSCRIPTION NIGHT.

SATURDAY EVENING.....AUGUST 25,

Will be presented Gouno's Opera of

FAUST!

Margnerita.....Signorina Elvira Bramhilla
Faust.....Signor Morley
Valentine.....Signor Mancusi
Mepbistopheles.....Signor Stanislaus Milleri
Siebel.....Mlle Jennie Landesmann
Maria Schwerlein.....Mlle Louisa Tonrny
Wagner.....Mons Roncovieri
Students, Soldiers, Villagers, etc.

The splendid Band of the 2d U. S. Artillery, under the leadership of Joseph Schmidt, will lend its valuable assistance.

MONDAY—First Night of Ricci's famous Comic Opera,
CRISPINO E LA COMARE,
(THE COBBLER AND THE FAIRY.)

CONDUCTOR.....MR. RUDOLPH HEROLD
Scenery by Mr. Rogers. Costumes by Mrs. Taylor.

Regular Subscription Nights, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.
Dress Circle, Orchestra and Parquette.....$1 00
Reserved seats, 50 cents extra.
Gallery.....50

☞ The Box Office is open from 9 A. M. for the securing of reserved seats for season tickets.

C. WEIDERHOLD & CO.'S

Piano Warerooms,

685 Market street, corner of Third,

WILL BE OPEN ON AND after SATURDAY, Aug. 25th, EVENINGS, till 8 o'clock.

SOLE AGENTS FOR

J. B. DUNHAM'S,
F. C. LIGHTE & CO.'S,
GEO. STECK & CO.'S, and
ERNEST GABLER'S

CELEBRATED PIANOS.

We will be in constant receipt of the above fine Pianos, which we warrant equal to any imported, and ask our friends and the public to call and examine for themselves. au25-3m

W. E. GOLDSMITH,

Practical Card and Seal Engraver,

AND PLATE PRINTER,

No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.
au25-3m.

CHILION BEACH,

Bookseller and Stationer,

NO. 34 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Opposite the Lick House,

SAN FRANCISCO,.....CALIFORNIA.

Paper Stamped with Initials, plain and colored, to border. All the New Books received by every steamer from New York. au25-3m

NEW DRY GOODS!

FALL IMPORTATION, 1866.

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

WILL EXHIBIT AT

THEIR RETAIL STORE,

ON

Monday, - - - August 20th,

A FULL AND COMPLETE STOCK OF Splendid Dress Goods!

CONSISTING OF

SILKS—

Rich Moire Antique, Watered, Chine, Brocade, Plaid, Striped and Plain—all in new and elegant designs and colors.
Black Silks from the celebrated manufactories of "Bonnet's," "Bischoff's," and "Ponson's," of Lyons, France.
Poplin of superior make in Irish and French—in all colors.
Empress Cloth—in all colors.
Plaid, Striped and Plain Poplinets and Cashmeres.
Merinos, De Laines, Prints, Ginghams.
Laces and Embroideries of every description.
Hosiery for Ladies, Gentlemen and Children.
Shawls—in India and French Cashmere, Paisley, Broche and Woolen.
Cloaks, Basques, Saques and Talmas—made to order in the most fashionable styles.

KID GLOVES—

1500 dozen in all colors and sizes, from the manufactories of Alexandre and Preville, of Paris.

ALSO AT

GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

THE FOLLOWING DESCRIBED GOODS, ALL OF WHICH HAVE JUST BEEN LANDED, AND ARE

Warrented of Superior Quality.

COTTONS—

1000 pieces Brown Cottons, from 4-4 to 10-4.
1000 pcs 8-4, 9-4 and 10-4 Cotton Sheetings.
200 pieces New York Mills Shirtings.
300 pieces Wamsutta Shirtings.
500 pieces White Rock Shirtings.
400 pieces Lonsdale Shirtings.
700 ps Masonville and Williamsv'le Shirt'gs.
600 pairs of Lace Curtains.

LINENS—

500 pieces Super Shirting Linens.
200 pieces Superior Sheeting Linens, in 8-4, 9-4, 10-4, 11-4, and 12-4.
200 pieces Barnsley and Scotch Table Damask, of superior quality.
1000 Table Cloth, from 8-4 to 10-4.
800 dozen Table Napkins—all sizes.
1500 doz Towels, suitable for the Bath, Chamber and Kitchen.

WOOLENS—

1000 pairs Blankets, in 6-4, 8-4, 10-4 & 12-4.
500 pieces Flannels of every description.

CLOTHS FOR MEN AND BOYS' WEAR.

1000 Marseilles and American Quilts.

9 Montgomery Street,

LICK HOUSE.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,

NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.

au 25

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

LIST OF

Late Publications.

Ecce Homo: a Survey of the Life and Work of Jesus Christ.
Campaigns of the Army of the Potomac, by Swinton.
A Treatise on Ship Draughting, by Wm. Laister.
Trodden Down, a Novel, by Mrs. C. J. Newby.
Land at Last, a Novel, by Edmund Yates.
The Apostles, by Ernest Renan.
Christina Rossetti's Poems.
The Albert Nyanza, Great Basin of the Nile, by S. W. Baker.
Old Merchants of New York, by W. Burrett, Clerk
Life of Junius Brutus Booth, (the Elder) by his daughter.
Medical Recollections of the Army of the Potomac, by J. Letterman, M. D.
Constitutional and Party Questions,—S. A. Douglas.
Conversion of the Northern Nations, by C. Merivale.
Crums from the Round Table, by Joseph Barber.
Running the Gauntlet, a Novel, by Edmund Yates.
Who Goes There; or Men and Events, by 'Sentinel.'
The Language of Flowers, edited by Miss Ildrewe.
The Miniature Fruit Garden, by Thos. Rivers.
Goulburn's Sermons.
Map of the Seat of War in Europe.
Napoleon's History of Cæsar, vol. 2.
Fruit Culture, by Charles R. Baker.
The Crown of Wild Olive, by John Ruskin, M. A.
Four Years in the Saddle, by Col. Harry Gilmor.
Andersonville Prison, by Ambrose Spencer.
Resources and Prospects of America, by Sir Morton Peto, Bart.
Dictionary of the Chinese Language, by Rev. R. Morrison, D. D., 2 vols.
Mexico, Ancient and Modern, by M. M. Chevalier, 2 vols.
Vegetables and Flowers; How to Grow Them, by Elizabeth Watts.
Army Life on the Border, by Col. Marcy, with illustrations.
The Prison Life of Jefferson Davis, by Brevet Lieutenant-Col. J. J. Craven, M. D.
Life and Times of Andrew Johnson, written from a National Stand Point, by a National Man.
Storm Cliff, a Tale of the Highlands, by M. S. Walworth.
My Vineyard at Lakeview, by a Western Grape Grower.
Life of James Stephens and Fenianism.
The American Annual Cyclopedia for the year 1865
Summer Rest, by Gail Hamilton.
Pictures of Country Life, by Alice Cary.
Miss Mulock's Poems—New Edition, Blue and gold.
Our Eternal Homes, by a Bible Student.
The Little Things of Nature, by Leo H. Grindon.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED, ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street,
au25 San Francisco

EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND

IN USE!

THE ORIGINAL P. P. STEWART'S FUEL SAVING

Air-Tight Cooking Stoves,

FOR WOOD OR COAL.

IMPROVED IN 1861;

WITH NEW AND EXTRA LARGE FLUES, AND BY THE ADDITION OF THE CELEBRATED PATENT DOUBLE SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.

Attention is Invited to the following Points of Superiority:

I. DURABILITY.—Lasting, with proper care, at least twenty years. Stoves are now in use that were set up in 1838.

2. MANUFACTURE.—Every portion of the Stove is thoroughly constructed. Each Stove is submitted to a critical test, and none leave our works unless completely and perfectly finished.

3. CAPACITY.—Baking, Boiling, Roasting, and all other culinary operations performed at the same time.

4. ECONOMY.—Saving the cost of the Stove in one year in the cost of fuel.

5. VENTILATION OF OVEN.—In the Stewart Stove alone, the front doors open directly into the oven, (protected by letters patent) securing a direct draft through the top of the oven by means of perforated holes in the doors and back flues. It will be borne in mind that, as the heated air always rises, this method of ventilation is the only one of any value whatever.

6. ENTIRE CONTROL OF HEAT.—The heat generated by the Stove may be held therein and used or thrown into the room at pleasure.

7. THE DOUBLE SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.—By which a compressing and inverting action of heat is obtained, and the oven more evenly and efficiently heated than by any other known invention.

9. HOT WATER RESERVOIR AND WARMING CLOSET.—Both useful and convenient, supplied by the waste heat and without extra fuel.

10. WATER BACK.—An arrangement for supplying hot water for the bath-room equal to any range.

☞ Beware of numerous imitations in the market, many of which resemble the "Stewart" only in appearance, and none of them possess any of its peculiar qualities.

See that the name of P. P. STEWART is on each Stove. None other genuine.

For sale by CALEB M. SICKLER,
422 Kearny street,
Between California and Pine, San Francisco.
Repairs for Stewart's Stoves constantly on hand.
au25-4m

DEMOCRATIC

City and County Ticket.

For Chief of Police,
P. J. WHITE.

For Tax Collector,
GENERAL H. A. COBB.

For Auditor,
WASHINGTON BARTLETT.

For Superintendent of Streets,
LEANDER WINTRINGER.

For City and County Attorney,
SELDEN S. WRIGHT.

For Public Administrator,
COL. M. C. SMITH.

For Fire Commissioners,
JOHN BARR, SIMON T. WALSH.

For Supervisors,

WARD		WARD
First	P. H. Daly	Seventh	Peter Whelan
Third	W. B. Fairman	Eighth	Dr. J. W. Winter
Fifth	M. O'Neil	Ninth	Jas. B. Carson
Eleventh	F. McCoppin

For School Directors,

WARD		WARD
First	Michael Daly	Seventh	T. G. McGuire
Third	Peter Dempsy	Ninth
Fifth	J. C. Shorb	Eleventh	Peter Johnson

For Constables,

First Township.....Samuel Bridgewood
Second Township.....Cornelius Mooney
Third Township.....
Fourth Township.....Michael Hawkins
Fifth Township.....Thomas Aguew
Sixth Township.....

ADDRESS

To the Voters of San Francisco.

We, the Members of the Democratic County Convention, respectfully addressing ourselves to the Voters of San Francisco, claim for the ticket we have nominated, your approval and support.

We have succeeded in securing gentlemen of irreproachable character and acknowledged fitness to serve as candidates. In making the selection, we have been careful that schemes for personal aggrandizement and mere political success should not shut out from view the future welfare of the community. The peace of the city, protection to property, and fidelity on the part of the custodians and dispensers of the public moneys, are the considerations which have controlled their deliberations.

We are persuaded that a change for the better can be made in the manner of administering the several Departments of the City Government; and this we believe to be the general conclusion in the public mind.

Whilst it is conceded that much credit was due, for a time, to those who managed our municipal affairs in an independent spirit, it is also contended that more recently they have ignored the former proper tests for official position, and have become mere partisans, intolerant in their views and prejudiced in their action. With this change in the spirit of their government, there has also come extravagance in public expenditures, oppression in their license system, and corruption in the police regulations. Reform is therefore needed in the City Government. This reform can be effected only through the agency of the ballot-box. To that end we heartily invite the co-operation of the voters of San Francisco.

Nor should it be forgotten that the result of the approaching local election will, to some extent, affect all the social and monetary interests of our city. Moreover, it will exert an important influence on politics throughout the State; and, in order that the people may fully appreciate the political significance of the victory we fervently hope to achieve, we shall briefly declare the principles which our nominees adhere to, touching their duties and the great issues of the day.

We pledge them to a faithful discharge of the obligation their election will cast upon them.

We pledge them to an unwavering support of those principles of our Government which assert the supremacy and vindicate the dignity of the white race.

We pledge them to the doctrines of the equality of all the States of the American Union, and the right of each individual one to determine, under the Constitution of the United States, the qualification of its electors, and to provide for its local prosperity and domestic happiness in its own way; and

We pledge them to a firm adherance to the policy of the National Administration, looking to the defence of these great principles as the only means calculated to heal our differences, to secure for the Government the undivided affection of the people, and to the Union of the States, that freedom, prestige and power rightfully belonging to a great Republic; and, in conclusion, we declare that they approve of the call for a National Convention, and hope that beneficial results may come of its patriotic purpose.

Finally, we beg leave to say that the evasion practiced by the County Convention of the opposite party on these vital questions, is, in our opinion, designed to accomplish a great political fraud, and trifling with the intelligence of the people and the interests of the State. We condemn as dangerous, ill-timed, and characteristic of Radicalism, the letter and spirit of the address put forth by that body. It is but an appeal to the passions of party at a time when those powerful in war and successful in battle should be just and magnanimous in peace.

By order of the
DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION.
au18

The California.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 15.
OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 1, 1866.

TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:
Applicatioos for the Position of Edi tor.
Podgerings by the Way.
"Liou's Mouth."
Cyoicism in Literature.
Thoughtful Readiog.
Not Afraid of Cholera.
Cleopatra.—By Heory Proverb.
Swill Milk.
Editorial Paragraphs.
Amusemeots.

SELECTED:
Soog.—By Ben Jooson.
Glimpses at Califoroia Scenery.
Siogapore and Hoog Kong.
Does Lager Beer Intoxicate?
A Burlesque Bull-fight.
The Archangel's Trump.
"Mark Twaio" on his Travels.
Sketch of Ernest Reoao.
Eoglish Gossip about Amerioan Ac tors.
Literary aod Musical Notes.

[For the Califoruiao.]

CLEOPATRA.

AN old ranchero entered a book-store once
To make a purchase, and surprised the vender
That any good thing could come from a dunce,
In preface, page, appendix, or addenda.
Thus said he: "Have you Webster's 'Cleopatra?'"
The clerks surprised, refered to catalogues,
And words grew spicier than "Old Sumatra;"
More potent far than physic thrown to dogs!
By closest questioning as to time and fact,
One clerk, at last, revealed his native tact,
And all of "Webster's Works" in haste repeats;
Then by this process it was found the speedier,
That "Cleopatra" was a Cyclopedia
Of just seven thousand "Family Receipts!"

SAN FRANCISCO, August 25, 1866. HENRY PROVERB.

(For the Californian.)

PODGERINGS BY THE WAY.

No. 6.

THE individual answering to the name of Jim Green, who ceased whittling on our arrival, came forward and remarked, "What's out?" He might have observed that nine fishermen were getting out, as fast as possible.

To his second inquiry, "where are you bound?" Charley Watson replied, "we are bound to stop right here." Jim scratched his head, hitched up his trousers, and says, "Mighty sorry gentlemen that I can't accommodate you."

"Why not?" said Charley.

"Waal, you see, Charley, the old woman is off her feet, and there ain't a soul in the house to cook a meal of vittles, and their ain't any vittles to cook, neither."

"What's the trouble with the old woman?"

Jim scratched his head again and looked sheepish, but finally replied, "Waal, you see the old woman thought the population a little skerce hereabouts, and she's been helping the matter out, and there's a little Jim on hand, and he ain't quite ready for busiuess, bein' he's only a couple of days old." To this objection we all protested we could do our own cooking, and take care of ourselves—but Jim shook his head and brought out his knife again, picked up a chip and began to whittle away, protesting that there was not a morsel in the house to eat, and he had not had a square meal himself for a week."

"Nonsense," Charley replied, "we are going to stay, Jim Green, and there's no use talking."

Jim still objected and protested, but at this stage of proceedings the chief of the Union staff displayed a little strategy most commendible. He went to the wagon and drew forth a small box, and knocking off the cover, displayed half a dozen bottles of prime old whisky, and informed Jim that his partner, who had partaken of Jim's hospitality the week previous, had sent him the whisky with his compliments. Jim shut up his knife, and appeared suddenly to take a more liberal view of the situation, he looked at the whisky, a cork was drawn, and a proposition to "irrigate" met with no dissenting voice—Jim took about "four fingers," smacked his lips, drew his hand across his mouth, and remarked, "Waal now, that's good stuff! Young Jim would take that natarly." That whisky did the business, we could stay, "if we would put up with what he had—there was the house, and there was the kitchen, and we must do the best we could." The result was, a table was soon spread, and from various closets there appeared a most substantial lunch of cold meat, fresh bread, fresh butter, and fresh milk enough for a regiment. We lunched heartily, and then every man prepared his rod and taekle. The chief representative of the Saeramento Union, having finished his preparations, proeeeded to put a bottle of "green seal" in his eapacious pocket, which he aunounced was to be opened on the capture of the first fish. The creek was but a dozen yards distant, and we adjourned to the bank, aud in a moment one of the party landed a fine trout. The fishermen were at once called to order, the cork popped, and the first bottle was sacrificed to the achievement.

I started off up the creek, and had not proceeded far before I heard a shout, and looking back saw that the Judge had caught a fish, and another bottle was sent for. I don't kuow how many fish were caught in that place, but I could see that a "fast freight line" was being run between the creek and the wagon, and when I returned to the scene, about dusk, the number of useless bottles. dead marines, laying about, argued that fishing must have beeu thirsty work.

On assembling on the porch at dusk 350 fine trout were laid out as the result of our few hours fishing. Jim Green's larder appeared inexhautstible, for the table was spread splendidly, and we did justice to as fine a supper as any one would wish; after which we gathered around a cheerful fire iu the huge fireplace, and the Judge opened his prolific budget of stories again, and we made a gay evening of it. As the clock struek ten another bottle of "green seal" did duty as a night cap, and we retired each man to a clean nice bed, which, after the fatigues of the day, was partieularly acceptable. After a refreshing sleep, and a cup of coffee at sunrise, we rallied forth again, scattering ourselves along the creek, and had glorious sport until the hour set for reassembling came, when 300 more fine trout were added to our previous evening's work. The fish were dressed and packed in grass. After a fine dinner the horses were put to the waggon, three cheers were given for Green, Senior, and the same for Jim Greeu, Junior, Charley cracked his whip, shouted to his horses, and away we rattled on a keen jump down the slope, plunged into the creek, up the opposite bank aud aeross the table land towards the mountains. The last I saw of Jim Green he was waving his hat from a stump and whooraying us all sorts of good luck, and I really believe, was sorry to see us go.

Jim Green may be set down as a character in his way—first impression of his character tor hospitality may not be favorable, but you have only to know him to discover a rough diamond. In early days he roughed it all over California with his dog, rifle and blankets; lived in the mountains—seldom sleeping under a roof—hunting grizzles and deer, and leading a wild and roving life; he finally pitched upon Hope Valley as his resting place, built a log cabin, and as he prospered, added to his domicil until he has a fine house of hewn timber, a wife and a young Jim. as aforesaid. Occasionally he starts out for "a day's shooting," and extends his excursions into the coast range, some two hundred miles distaut, up the coast to the Oregon line—often making a trip of four or five hundred miles—returns and subsides until the old spirit breaks out again. Jim invited me to come up and have a little "shoot" with him, but as I am not partial to grizzles and a four hundred mile excursion on a mule, I don't antieipate accompanying him on his next raid.

As the grade was rather heavy on the horses, we all got out and walked up the mountain, a distance of three miles. On reaching the summit we halted in a cool, shady spot where a sparkling stream of snow water crossed the road, and indulged iu a loll upon the grass and rested half au hour; then set out again. A drive of three quarters of an hour brought us to the foot of the other slope, and we were at the bend of Lake Valley, and travelling aloug over a fine. smooth, natural road. The Judge's budget of stories still holding out, as we passed down the valley he told us of the exploits of a famous Norwegian who, in early days, travelled on snow shoes over the mountains, and carried letters into Carson Valley in the dead of Winter, sleepiug upon the snow wherever night overtook him. The Judge told us of a famous race on snow shoes up at the Norwegian settlement, at Silver Mountain, where this man came down the mountain a half mile on his snow shoes in eleven seconds. The Union appeared skeptical, but the Judge pledged his character for truth and veracity, for the truth of the performance, and recounted in support of the skill of these people; that at a ball given at Silver Mountain, some of the girls came on snow shoes forty miles to attend the ball; danced all night and went back in the morning. This performance, on the part of the delicate Norwegian ladies, required that their health should be drank with honors—not standing, for the road had now become a little rough, and the Judge lost his first drink by a jolt that sent it into his neck the wrong side of his shirt collar; but being of a persevering nature, he succeeded on the second attempt, and if the Norwegian ladies are uot in good health it is not from any fault on the part of the Judge. About 3 o'clock we reached the main road and drew up at Yank's Station, where I left the party, who were bound to Lake Tahoe to "do" that beautiful sheet of water. (A full account of which is given with great fidelity, and in a masterly manner, by one of the gentlemen of the Union, and which appeared in that excellent paper under the head of "Cruise on a Mountain Sea," extraets from which can be found in this number of THE CALIFORNIAN.) Bidding good bye to the party, I dismounted to wait for the stage to proceed homeward, while they continued on their way to the Lake, where they appear to have met with adventures that should be read to be appreciated.

At 9 o'cloek the stage came along. Mounting the box with the driver, I find myself in Placerville next morning; and at Sacramento at noon of the hottest day I ever experieneed anywhere. On going on board the Capital I found her a fiery furnace; not a breath of air, and the atmosphere like a kitchen in dog-days. I mentally resolved that I never again would complain of San Francisco fogs and breezes—I have hardly cooled off yet; and if any man proposes a trip to Sacramento at this season, I shall exclaim, in the words of a well known capitalist here, "No more Hums! No more Hums!"

I have settled down to the hum-drum duties and pursuits of every-day life again, but I find my thoughts too often reverting to my trip to Hope Valley, and long for a repetition. The Judge promises me a few days' splendid grouse-shooting at Strawberry, if I will "come up," and has a story or two left to tell; and Charley Watson says he kuows of a splendid trout stream near by.

A boy's idea of happiness is a stick of candy and a smooth eellar door to slide on—mine is a life on the mountain aud a home at Jim Green's. PODGERS.

BE SPARING OF DRUGS.—Doctor Oliver Wendell Holmes, whose reputation as a physician runs neck and neck with his literary popularity, in his valedietory address to the medical students of Harvard University, delivered recently, gives the following, we doubt not, judicious advice to the medical students who were about to graduate:—"With regard to the exhibition of drugs as a part of your medical treatment, BE SPARING. Many remedies you give would make a well person so ill that he would send for you at once if he had taken one of your doses accideutally. It is not quite fair to give such things to a sick man, unless it is clear that they will do more good than the very considerable harm you know they will cause. Be very gracious with the children, especially. I have seen old men shiver at the recollection of the rhubarb and jalap of infaney. You may depeud upon it that half the success of homœopathy is due to the sweet peace it has brought into the nursery. Between the gurgling dowu of loathsome mixtures and the saccharine deliquescence of a minute globule, what tender mother could for a moment hesitate?"

DESTROYED.—The town of Mariposa was almost entirely destroyed by fire on Saturday night last. Two hundred thousand dollars damage was sustained.

THE new city directory of New York, just issued, contains 176,511 names, an increase over last year of 10,367.

SINGAPORE AND HONG-KONG.

IN the Indian cold season—that is, from the 1st of December to the first of March—the voyage from Calcutta to Hong-Kong is delightful as far as Singapore. Looking down one calm cool morning over the ship's side into the streaks and eddies of the transparent sea, I was startled during the voyage thither by the sudden appearance of a dead Chinaman's face, as the body floated with the ebb tide slowly turning along the vessel's counter. It was the face of a man in the prime of life and the best of health. An old salt who had had much experience amongst Chinamen, and who was standing by my side, observed thoughtfully: "He's been a winning at the dice, ye see, and when they got him to the water-side, they fetched him handsome over the afterpart of his skull with a thick stick, and took his money, and hove him in, and that makes no marks, ye see." And in this way many a gambler meets with his end, without detection of the murderers, against whom their countrymen will not, when they can, give evidence. The police force at Pinang would be no match for the Chinese in any very serious affray, but the magistrate can easily and promptly procure the aid of any number of Malays from Wellesley province, and these people would eagerly obey an order to kill every Celestial in the country.

It is scarcele possibly to conceive anything more beautiful than this entrance to Singapore harbor. The ship glides in between islets and little hills clothed in verdant forest, fringed by a pebbly or white sandy beach. The water is perfectly calm, or moved gently by long lazy undulations, and so transparent, that the fishes, some of gorgeous hues and fantastic shapes, which infest such localities, are plainly to be seen gliding about far below in the shadow of the hull. Cheerful-looking villas and prettily painted houses are scattered along the summits of these islands, and increase in number as the ship advances into a basin connected with the outer harbor, in which are the mooring wharves and coal-sheds of the opium China steamers and of the Peninsular and Oriental Company's vessels. Hardly is the ship fast when she is assailed by a fleet of canoes, manned by Malay men and boys. The boys come to dive for sixpences or eight-ana pieces which the passengers throw over for them, and the men bring pine-apples, shells, paroquets and other birds, and animals, such as tiger-cats, civet-cats, monkeys, &c., for sale. The shell boats are really beautiful, being filled to the uttermost nook and corner with the most lively specimens, arranged in perfect order, so that the boat looks as if it were a floating cabinet. The diving-boys are of all ages, from seven to seventeen. Some paddle themselves singly in tiny canoes little larger than a butcher's tray; others go three or four together in larger skiffs; but all are equally eager, crowding under the gangways and keeping up an incessant gabble in broken English to attract attention. "Massa, massa, massa! now, massa! I dive very good, massa! You throw sixpence, I dive very quick, good dive, massa!" When a sixpence is pitched overboard, the whole mob of them throw themselves out of their canoes headlong in, and their sprawling limbs may be discerned far down as they strike towards the bottom, till a lucky fellow clutches the prize, when they all return to the surface puffing and blowing, and scramble into their respective canoes, where they are soon ready for another dive. This feat of catching the sixpence is by no means so difficult as a stranger might imagine. In the first place, the sixpence, or any similar flat thin object, when thrown into the water, descends by gyrations, and therefore settles so slowly that a moderately expert swimmer can meet and grasp it.

In the mean time, the wharf begins to fill with a heterogeneous crowd of Malays, Coringamen, Chinese, Surutties, Eurasians, and Europeans, and little palanquin carriages drive up for hire. These are most useful vehicles, exceedingly light, but strong, holding two, and, at a pinch, four people, and drawn by one of the indomitable little Burmah ponies up the heaviest and toughest road. They are driven by half-naked Madras men, who perch on a small seat placed on the front of the carriage, and, never understanding a syllable that is said to them, goad, poke, and worry the pony on till brought up by the shouts of the passengers. The carriages are all numbered, and their owners and drivers subject to strict rules.

After landing from the ship, and elbowing his way among vendors of paradise birds' skins, China and Indian fans, Bombay work-boxes, &c., the traveleris taken by thē indefatigable diving-boys, who strive to earn a sixpence on land as well as in the water, to one of the palanquin carriages or "gárees" aforesaid, and driven off to the town, which is nearly two miles from the wharf. The road, which is good, leads at first through a mangrove swamp, above which, however, it is well raised. A little farther on it rises, where pretty cottages and suburban villas, with neat hedges and gardens, and a large Chinese burial-ground, indicate close approach to the town. Singapore is substantially built, laid out in regular streets, and consists almost wholly of Chinamen's shops. There is a good iron suspension-bridge over an inlet or creek in the town, a pretty though small square, planted with flowering shrubs and shady trees, and some handsome brick and stuccoed houses bordering the strand, or drive, along the beach of the outer harbor, which, with its dark blue waves, is seen outside the town, crowded with vessels of every size, class, and nation.

This strand road is bordered inland by a strip of lawn, planted with flowering shrubs, forming a pleasant promenade and playground for children. The lawn is again skirted by a road bounding a series of gardens and enclosures, in which are contained a line of detached and handsome houses, including a good church. These buildings, embowered in trees, sweep round along the curve of the harbor, and are ended by Government House, an imposing edifice in beautiful grounds, crowning the end of the high land, which in gentle undulations encircles the landward side of the town. The homes of the merchants, government officers, and private individuals, are scattered all around the suburbs, in fine airy situations. The grounds and gardens are exceedingly tasteful, and kept in admirable order; and the roads, shaded by neat hedges of the China or dwarf bamboo, and trees of elegant and varied foliage, are kept carefully in the best repair. A large body of life convicts, some three thousand in number, enables the municipality to preserve the communications throughout the station in thorough order. About a mile and a half's drive along this pleasant suburb brings the visitor to the public gardens, which, though new, are already beautiful, and only need the ripening of time to make them still more so. The exquisite neatness of the lawns and paths is a welcome sight, and, although there are very few flowers, they are large and brilliant. Amongst the houses facing the outer harbor, which command a full view of it, and all day enjoy the refreshing breeze of the sea, is a very comfortable family hotel, kept by an enterprising Frenchman. The "compound" of the hotel contains a detached building for bachelors on one side, and another for the table d'hote in the opposite quarter. This hotel appears to fill well. The passenger-traffic between Europe and the southeastern archipelago is rapidly increasing, and English, French, Dutch, and Portuguese from and to Batavia, Borneo, Manila, and Sumatra, have to wait at Singapore for the smaller steamers to convey them to their destinations, or for the large Peninsular and Oriental and Imperial Messagerie ships from Hong-Kong, as the case may be. Besides these, numerous young clerks and assistants in counting-houses take up their permanent abode in the hotel, and help to increase the crowd at the table d'hote, which is capable of accommodating about sixty. The fare is good, and served in a style half French and half English. About twenty Chinese lads, clean and well-dressed, fly about, serving the dinner with great briskness, while the master of the hotel stands at a side table with a couple of assistants, carving for his customers. Fish (in great variety and excellence), poultry, and pork, are the chief meats; beef being scarce and poor, and mutton, as in Penang, and throughout Burmah, procured from Calcutta at an extravagant price. European vegetables do not thrive, nor are there any fine fruits, with the exception of pine-apple and the deliciously refreshing mangosteen. But the steamers—whether the opium vessels from Calcutta, or the Peninsular and Oriental ships from Galle—afford but scanty leisure for a survey of Singapore. In twenty-four or thirty hours the traveller has to proceed on his voyage to

HONG KONG.

The first indication of the coast of China is usually the sight of numerous fishing junks, in pairs, towing between them large trawl-nets, and beating steadily up to windward. The ease and safety with which these odd-looking vessels ride over the tumultuous seas is beautiful to see, and the intrepid fellows who manage them come fearlessly out two hundred miles from land. They are pirates, and, whenever they have opportunity, attack and plunder the small junks and lorchas of the coasting trade. The first land seen, as we near Hong Kong, is the southernmost of a series of barren rocky islets, on which the heavy rollers break with a loud roar. The sea-bird breeds upon these rocks, and amongst them may be seen, but rarely, the only species of albatross which ventures north of the equator—Diomedea brachyura of Temminck. Increasing in size northwards, the rocks attain the size of rugged, lofty islands, and encircling Hong-Kong—itself an island—on the south and west, inclose a tolerably smooth and land-locked harbor.

Hong-Kong is, in its way, as beautiful a port as Singapore. The town is built of white granite, laid out in regular streets, which rise in terraces one above another. It spreads over a considerable portion of the southern face of the island, and, standing in bold relief against a background of rugged mountain, is carried down to the water's edge, the strand being faced by a stone wall or quay for its whole length. The harbor is generally full of shipping—merchant vessels of all nations, and French, English, American, and Russian men-of-war. Between these glide all day long boats of all patterns, junks, and sampans. Those belonging to the counting-houses and offices in the strand are secured at night by being hoisted up to regular davits built into the quay wall—an admirable plan, which I have not seen followed in any other port. Chinese boatmen, and boatwomen with their fat ruddy babies slung to their backs, have been so often described, that I will say no more about them here, except to express an opinion that the Chinese mode of handling their boats does not appear to have been duly appreciated. There is no craft in the world safer and handier than a Chinese sampan, which has no more grace in its outlines than a butcher's tray. The boatman, who stands and rows facing forwards, can twist and turn it in ways not to be attempted by our boats, thus worming his way safely through crowds of other boats, all, like itself, too broad to be upset, too pliant and tough to be injured in a squeeze. The Chinaman also makes more use than we do of sculling. Lighters, and other heavy barges, reaching up to seventy or eighty tons burden, are invariably furnished with a huge steering or sculling oar, which is worked by six or seven men, and drives the vessel much more powerfully than an equal number of men working with sweeps. We have also some lessons to learn from this people in sailing, and, until we condescend to stiffen our canvas with battens, cannot expect our vessels to lie in the wind's eye as does a Chinese junk.

A pull of five or ten minutes brings the traveller to the stone quay, and, as he mounts one of the numerous flagged stairs along its face, he finds himself surrounded by eager coolies or porters, and chair-men, with their light, pretty sedans, ready to take him up the hill. If the new arriver have friends in Hong-Kong, or has been provided with an introductory letter to some one of its hospitable residents, he is landed in a handsome private boat, sent for his accommodation, and under the care of a comprador or steward of the household placed in a chair or sedan, and carried off to his host's house. These sedans are most useful things. They are nearly as commodious as an Indian palanquin, and far more comfortable, as the rider sits in a large easy-chair, instead of being borne along like a bedridden patient. To enter the sedan the passenger has simply to pass in through the front shafts, which are uplifted for the purpose, the sedan remaining on the ground. When he is fairly seated, the bearers (a man at each end) squat down under the cross-bar near the ends of the shafts, and rising up, chair and all, stride along at a rapid pace up hill and down dale, their sandaled feet making a loud slapping noise on the road. They do not go at the half running pace of the palkee-bearers in India, but with a sturdy step and a stiff knee. Two men are enough for a sedan; but if there be a long journey to make, or the fare be of such proportions as led Mr. Banting to his useful researches, two additional men are added to temporary yokes lashed across the shafts. Thus reinforced, they will run all day. These chairs are sometimes prettily painted and glazed, with awning roofs. They are to be had in numbers for hire in all the principal streets and thoroughfares, and the stranger is greeted in such places, as he passes on, by a chorus of "Chá!" (chair) "chá!" from the bearers seated about their unemployed vehicles.

The main street in Hong Kong, running parallel to the strand, is handsome and regular, with excellent shops, English and Chinese. The banks, counting houses, a handsome club-house, and a church, are in this street. The consular and steam agencies, warehouses, ship-chandlers' stores, and such like offices and buildings, some of considerable size, occupy the strand. A little way up the hillside, and parallel to the main street, are smaller streets, containing hotels, lodging-houses, and some private residences, with their court-yards and enclosures, chiefly European, but with some Parsee, Coringa, and Chinese dwellings. These streets are connected at right angles by smaller ones, steeply ascending the hillside, and thickly crowded with shops, chiefly Chinese. Still higher up are the stately villas and semi-detached houses of the English residents, the governor's house, a handsome building, with the public gardens, the residence of the general, the barracks, and the cathedral. These all communicate by excellent roads, bounded by neatly-finished stone walls, and interspersed with gardens, flowering shrubs, and shady trees. From the level of this quarter extends a magnificent view of the harbor and the opposite island of Kowloon, and the traveller can, if he pleases, ascend the rugged barren hights above him to the flagstaff peak, nearly two thousand feet above the sea; but the mountain is cheerless and lonely.

The suburbs of "Victoria," as Hong-Kong is called (or should be called, although nobody in my hearing ever called it so), are not extensive, but are thickly crowded with Chinese houses, inhabited by fishermen, boat-builders, umbrella and sedan-chair makers, masons, and coolies, a lawless set, and whom the police of Hong-Kong find plenty to do. Indeed, to this day it is reckoned unsafe to go along the skirts of the town after sunset, unless well armed or with a party. Chinamen are both adroit and audacious highwaymen, but they have great dread of firearms, especially of a revolver, and the sight of a pistol insures safety to the traveller. The quarrymen, who are employed in great numbers on the hillside skirting the roads, and many of whom pass the night in temporary hovels where they work, are all thieves. And as the police force is composed of Hindoos, for whom physically Chinamen have great contempt, and as the punishments sanctioned by the laws are altogether insufficient to check crime amongst this people, it is not matter of surprise that Hong-Kong should be a nest of thieves, while the neighboring city of Canton is a pattern of good order and security. Indeed, it is a known fact that all the worst characters in the latter place, finding their own government too hot for them, repair to Hong-Kong, as a genial region for misdeed. It was only a short time since that they robbed a bank in the town with singular skill and audacity, entering the treasure room through a drain and subterraneous passage dug by themselves at right angles to it, under the foundation-wall of the building.

At the west end of the town the level land of the beach penetrates the hill, forming an oval-shaped flat space of meadow-land, which has been turned into a very excellent race-course, and on the eastern side of this, at the foot of the hill, is the Christian cemetery. The roots of the hills are here covered with forest trees, and a pretty little stream or "burn" runs along the bottom of this "Happy Valley," as this west-end suburb is termed by the English residents. The races take place here once a year, and are exceedingly good; for there are two great millionaires who spare no expense in importiug first-rate horses.

Hong-Kong is a good deal colder than Calcutta, but the seasons are as to time much the same as in India. The rains are short in duration, but very violent, drenching the streets with mountain torrents which the numerous and deep drains cannot always contain. The summer is unpleasantly hot only in June and July, and the cold weather, during which fires are absolutely necessary, lingers ou till near the middle of April, with gloomy, misty skies, and chill driving rain coming in gusts from the hills above.—All the Year Round.

THE ARCHANGEL'S TRUMP.

A GOOD story is told in this city (says a Parisian correspondent,) at the expense of a very handsome and rich widow of most exemplary character, who has a small and elegant retreat at Versailles, in addition to her town residence. At this pretty rurality she was passing a week at the close of the autumn, having for her guest a lad in his teens, who was a distant relative, and who was thus passing his vacation from school. Madam's housekeeper and cook was a respectable female, who, however, had an admirer. a trumpeter, stationed in the barracks near by, and the stolen pleasure of whom was to come in and dine stealthily on the remaining dishes of the mistress' luxuriant table.

Madame and her boy relative having started after dinner for a walk, the trumpeter took advantage of the absence: but unluckily prolonged his meal a few minutes too long. In his hurry to conceal himself when taken by surprise, he became ensconced under the bed of the lady of the house, thinking to escape while she passed the evening in her drawing-room as usual. Madam was tired with her walk, however, and proceeded to her room for an hour's repose immediately on her return.

The trumpeter, in full uniform, with his brazen instruments beside him, was of course in a position of considerable dismay. As he lay racking his brain, the door suddenly opened, and in walked the schoolboy, who, to the astonishment of the lady, fell on his knees, and made a tumultuous declaration of love!

"In the name of Heaven," cried the astonished object of his passion, "rise, and leave the room immediately! What would be thought of me if you were seen in this indiscreet situation and posture! Rise this moment and retire!"

"No!" firmly persisted the academical. "I live but to love you! No power on earth shall tear me from this spot—no—no—not even if the trump of the last day—"

At this moment the trumpeter, whose lips were at the edge of his instrument, blew a blast, into which was poured the overwhelming torrent of his previous impatience, "Trrrrr—ta, ta, ta, ta, ta"—a thunder-blast, to which the walls of the little cottage trembled to their foundation.

The room was vacated by dame and lover in a trice, and the trumpeter made his escape; but the story got wind, and, without name or place, was all over Paris.

It was being narrated one evening by a gay man, in a small circle, when the narrator remarked:

"I would have given anything in the world to have seen the face of the lady at the moment of the trumpet's sounding."

"The face of the boy on his knees was much better worth seeing, I assure you," exclaimed in a tone of pique, a lady among the listeners—unguardedly revealing, by this hasty comment, that she was, herself, the heroine of the story.

"HOME, SWEET HOME."—This song, written by John Howard Payne, whilst residing in England, was first produced on the stage in the opera of "Clari, the Maid of Milan." The music was furnished by Sir Henry Bishop, who derived the air of "Home, Sweet Home" from an old Sicilian melody.

TELEGRAPH poles in South Australia are made of mahogany at a cost of about four dollars and a half apiece, because other wood will not stand the climate and burial in the ground.

A TURTLE has been caught in Australia seven feet in length and weighing 700 pounds.

DOES LAGER BEER INTOXICATE?—DIARY OF A MAN WHO TESTS IT.

"DOES lager beer intoxicate?" That is a question which has agitated this country for years—courts and communities being divided upon it. As a scientific experiment, and for the purpose of satisfying my mind upon the subject, I went among the beer gardens and beer saloons, yesterday, keeping a journal of my progress, which I herewith append:

9 A. M.—Took a glass of lager at a Third street saloon. Exceedingly cooling to the system. It diffuses a gentle and agreeable exhilaration throughout the brain.

9:05 A. M.—Took another glass, with brown bread, salt, and cardamon seeds. Thoughts run in agreeable channels. Disposed to look leniently upon the frailties of humanity. Wouldn't refuse to receive cash in full from a debtor, or force money upon a man I owed. Pat the head of a little Dutch baby that toddles by me.

Am carried back in imagination to the days of my youth (which the nights of my mature years had put out of my head, somewhat.) I remember my early love, and muse in a kindly vein upon the morning of my existence. Had had some annoyances in the morning, which vanished with the froth of the beer.

9:10 A. M.—Took another glass, joined by a friend. A kindly feeling toward the friend. I allow him to pay for the beer, however, retaining my presence of mind. We indulge in cheerful conversation. I become eloquent on German literature. Quote from Gœthe, Schiller, and glow at the mention of Rembrandt.

Other friends enter. I allow them to pay for beer, also.

10 A. M.—I call for more beer, and tell the bar-keeper that he is "in." Ask a stranger to "join us." Another member of the party calls vociferously for "hard-boiled eggs." I check him, and feel a sympathy for a man who "shows his beer."

10:30 A. M.—We have indulged in more beer. Disposition on the part of some to tell old anecdotes, at which the party laugh inordinately. The bar-keeper "smiles" at our expense. Some one proposes that we go up Teuth street. Another glass of beer, and we go.

11 o'clock, A. M.—Shook hands with every acquaintance we met on the street coming here. Remember patting one or two very particular friends on the back, and urging them to "go 'long." Gave a newsboy twenty five cents for a morning paper that I had read, and declined to take any change. Had a glass of beer.

12 M.—The party gets larger and fuller. All talk together, as a general thing.

Think we stopped twice on the way and drank beer. One man has left the party. He said he had "business" to attend to. Remember feeling a sort of admiration for the man who had the nerve to leave a party and go about his business. Wished I had some business, and had the nerve to go about it. Concluded to have some more beer.

1 P. M.—More beer. Some of us leave half a glass undrank, while others order "kleine" glasses. One man "switches off" on whisky, and another "takes a cigar in his'n."

2 P. M.—Another round. I tell my stories over once, and just as I reach the point in the story a friend breaks in with—"that reminds me of a little incident," etc.

Called for more beer. Boisterous man grows suddenly silent, his head drops over on his shoulder, and he goes to sleep. Another man sings a song. We all join in the chorus without any particular regard to key. More beer.

3 P. M.—"Sixty-six" is introduced. We play for the beer. Two or three suspicious-looking strangers worm themselves into the party. They laugh extravagantly at all my stories, and call for beer, which is applied to my account.

4 P. M.—A man who had been silently drinking his beer for some time, suddenly breaks out in violent denunciation of some individual who is absent, and whom none of us know. We immediately sympathize with him, and proceed to denounce the absent individual with great warmth, all talking together. More beer.

5 P. M.—I sing a song, forgetting the third line in the second verse, and nearly go to sleep in trying to recall it.

I insist upon paying for all we've had. A total stranger borrows five dollars of me until he can "see Stofe." The glasses are filled up again by order of a party at the other end of the room.

6 P. M.—Men with their coats off, vociferating violently. Everybody in intense perspiration; disposition to spill beer on our shirt bosoms and our clothes. Beer mugs knocked off the table. Bar-keeper gets excited and wastes his German on the desert air, the air not understanding it. I imagine that he is asking us all to drink, and accept the invitation. It is charged to me.

7 P. M.—More beer spilled on our shirt bosoms. Fellows grow pale and go out in the back yard, and more men suddenly recollect that they have business to attend to, going about their business as though it was the "rail fence" business.

Lager beer won't intoxicate!

Man asleep across the table. Another man offers to "rassle" any one in the party for the beer (having "rassled" a large quantity of beer.) A stranger takes it up, the "rassle" proceeds, and—and I go under. More beer.

10 P. M.—More men sleep. I embrace two or three Dutchmen at the next table—telling them "you're my friend." Look around and discover all of a sudden that my party has changed. All gone "wot I knowd," and a lot of strangers there. Think it is time to go home. Drink a glass of beer and go it.

11 P. M.—Am rudely awakened by some one. Open my eyes, and see a couple of watchmen. I am on a door-step on Tenth street. The watchman says:

"You don't want to sleep here."

"The devil I don't. Do you suppose I would be (hic) foolish enough to lay down and go to sleep here if I didn't want to?"

"But you can't sleep here."

"That's a different thing altogether. You said I didn't wan't to, and (hic) I never wanted to so bad in my life before."

11:30 P. M.—I reach home. Experience a good deal of difficulty in unlocking the hall-door with a lead pencil. Try a pocket-knife, and then blunder upon the night-key. Suddenly remember that I have got the hiccups, and getting under the hall gas-light I try to cure them by seeing how near I can put my two little fingers together without touching them. I "job" them by each other, clear up to the elbow. Then experience a glow of triumph as I hold them very near together, two feet apart.

11:55 P. M.—The hiccups cured. Congratulating myself on the cure as I go up stairs. Think of taking out a license to practice in that line. I open the door—give a hiccup that starts the roof, and nearly throws my head off. Wife starts up in bed, and says:

"Drunk again!"

I protest that I am (hic) not. I wax dignified and learned, and ask her if she (hic) uuderstands the diag (hic) nosis of hiccups. She says she had ought to; she had seen me have them often enough.

Said I, in an injured voice:

"Do you know, madam, that (hic) hiccups come from (hic—comes from a cold (hic) stomach?"

She said she thought it came from a beer garden.

I insisted that a cold fit of (hic) hiccups often comes from a severe stomach, and remember wandering off into a dissertation upon the intoxicating properties of quails, while she was pulling off my boots.

Lager beer won't intoxicate! O, no!

"HUN-KI-DO-RI."

POSTING HIM.—Sir Walter Scott told the story of a placid minister near Dundee, who, in preaching on Jonah, said:

"Ken ye, brethren, what fish it was that swallowed him? Aiblins ye may think it was a shark; nae, nae, my brethren, it was nae shark. Or aiblins ye may think it was a saumon; nae, nae, my brethren, it was nae saumon. Or aiblins ye may think it was a dolphin; nae, nae, my brethren, it was nae dolphin."

Here an old woman, thinking to help her pastor out of a dead lift, cried out:

"Aiblins, sir, it was a dunter," (the vulgar name of a species of whale common on the Scotch coast.)

"Aiblins, madam, ye're an auld witch for taking the word of God out of my mouth," was the reply of the disappointed rhetorician.

GERMAN BOOKS.—It is a singular fact that in spite of the great number of books—more than ten thousand separate works in a year—published in Germany, the Germans as a nation are not a book-reading people. The editions of works printed there are very small, varying from three to seven hundred. Novels have a larger sale than any other books, being taken in great numbers by the circulating libraries, from which every one who reads at all hires all his light literature. The price in many of these libraries is not more than a cent or a cent and a half per week. In all the principal towns you can see antiquarian bookstore on almost any of the principal streets, and many of the scholars patronize no other booksellers. They have choice assortments, for, whenever a great man in the world of letters dies, his library is purchased by some of these stores. New books are advertised but very little; but the notices of them by editors are more elaborately and conscientiously written than elsewhere, and carry more weight.

PUNCH has written to Mr. Darwin to inquire if it is possible, under his theory of development, for a bay-pony ever to become a sea-horse.

INVINCIBLE fidelity, good humor and complacency of temper outlive all the charms of a fine face, and make the decay of it invisible.

A CONNECTICUT railroad company advertise that until they can get money to buy cars, they will run coaches over the route, and have bought one coach to accommodate the travel.

"MARK TWAIN" ON HIS TRAVELS.

AFTER journeying through the sugar and coffee regions of Kona, and having a missionary conference with "Brown," "Mark" comes to the place where exists

NATURE'S PRINTED RECORD IN THE LAVA.

At four o'clock in the afternoon we were winding down a mountain of dreary and desolate lava to the sea, and closing our pleasant land journey. This lava is the accumulation of ages; one torrent of fire after another has rolled down here in old times, and built up the island structure higher and higher. Underneath, it is honey-combed with caves; it would be of no use to dig wells in such a place; they would not hold water—you would not find any for them to hold, for that matter. Consequently, the planters depend upon cisterns.

The last lava flow occurred here so long ago that there are none now living who witnessed it. In one place it inclosed and burned down a grove of cocoanut trees, and the holes in the lava where the trunks stood are still visible; their sides retain the impression of the bark; the trees fell upon the burning river, and becoming partly submerged, left in it the perfect counterfeit of every knot and branch and leaf, and even nut, for curiosity seekers of a long distant day to gaze upon and wonder at.

There were doubtless plenty of Kanaka sentinels on guard hereabouts at that time, but they did not leave casts of their figures in the lava as the Roman sentinels at Herculaneum and Pompeii did. It is a pity it is so, because such things are so interesting, but so it is. They probably went away. They went away early, perhaps. It was very bad. However, they had their merits; the Roman exhibited the higher pluck, but the Kanakas showed the sounder judgment.

As usual, Brown loaded his unhappy horse with fifteen or twenty pounds of "specimens," to be cursed and worried over for a time, and then discarded for new toys of a similar nature. He is like most people who visit these Islands; they are always collecting specimens, with a wild enthusiasm, but they never get home with any of them.

CAPTAIN COOK'S DEATH-PLACE.

Shortly we came in sight of that spot whose history is so familiar to every school-boy in the wide world—Kealakekua Bay—the place where Captain Cook, the great circumnavigator, was killed by the natives nearly a hundred years ago.

Kealakekua Bay is a little curve like the last kink of a snail shell, winding deep into the land, seemingly not more than a mile wide from shore to shore. It is bounded on one side—where the murder was done—by a little flat plain, on which stands a cocoanut grove and some ruined houses; a steep wall of lava, a thousand feet high at the upper end, and three or four hundred at the lower, comes down from the mountain and bounds the inner extremity of it. From this wall the place takes its name, Kealakekua, which in the native tongue signifies "The Pathway of the Gods." They say (and still believe, in spite of their liberal education in Christianity,) that the great god Lono, who used to live upon the hillside, always travelled that causeway when urgent business connected with heavenly affairs called him down to the sea-shore in a hurry.

THE STORY OF CAPTAIN COOK.

Plain unvarnished history takes the romance out of Captain Cook's assassination, and renders a deliberate verdict of justifiable homicide.

When he landed at Kealakekua Bay, a multitude of natives, variously estimated at from ten to fifteen thousand, flocked about him and conducted him to the principal temple with more than royal honors—with honors suited to their chiefest god, for such they took him to be. They called him Lono—a deity who had resided at that place in a former age, but who had gone away and had ever since been anxiously expected back by the people. When Cook approached the awe-stricken people, they prostrated themselves and hid their faces. His coming was announced in a loud voice by heralds, and those who had not time to get out of the way after prostrating themselves, were trampled under foot by the following throngs. Arrived at the temple, he was taken into the most sacred part and placed before the principal idol, and tendered distinguished civilities never offered by the islanders to mere human beings. The belief that he was a god saved him a good while from being killed—protected him thoroughly and completely, until, in an unlucky moment, it was discovered that he was only a man. His death followed instantly. Jarves, from whose history, principally, I am condensing this narrative, thinks his destruction was a direct consequence of his dishonest personation of the god, but unhappily for the argument, the historian proves, over and over again, that the false Lono was spared time and again when simple Captain Cook of the Royal Navy would have been destroyed with small ceremony.

The idolatrous worship of Captain Cook was repeated at every heathen temple he visited. "For a brief period he moved among them an earthly god—observed, feared, and worshipped." During all this time the whole island was heavily taxed to supply the wants of the ships or contribute to the gratification of their officers and crews, and, as was customary in such cases, no return expected.

At one time the King of the island laid a tabu upon his people, confining them to their houses for several days. This interrupted the daily supply of vegetables to the ships; several natives tried to violate the tabu, under threats made by Cook's sailors, but were prevented by a chief, who, for thus enforcing the laws of his country, had a musket fired over his head from one of the ships. This is related in Cook's Voyages. The tabu was soon removed, and the Englishmen were favored with the boundless hospitality of the natives as before, except that the Kanaka women were interdicted from visiting the ships. The officers and sailors went freely about the island, and were everywhere laden with presents. The King visited Cook in royal state, and gave him a large number of exceeding costly and valuable presents; in return for which the resurrected Lono presented His Majesty a white linen shirt and a dagger—an instance of illiberality in every way discreditable to a god.

"On the 2d of February, at the desire of his commander, Captain King proposed to the priests to purchase for fuel the railing which surrounded the top of the temple of Lono! In this Cook manifested as little respect for the religion in the mythology of which he figured so conspicuously, as scruples in violating the divine precepts of his own. Indeed, throughout his voyages, a spirit regardless of the rights and feelings of others, when his own were interested, is manifested, especially in his last cruise, which is a blot upon his memory."

Cook desecrated the holy places of the temple by storing supplies for his ships in them, and by using the level grounds within the inclosure as a general workshop for repairing his sails, etc.,—ground which was so sacred that no common native dared to set his foot upon it. Ledyard, a Yankee sailor, who was with Cook, and whose journal is considered the most just and reliable account of this eventful period of the voyage, says two iron hatchets were offered for the temple railing, and when the sacrilegious proposition was refused by the priests with horror and indignation, it was torn down by order of Captain Cook and taken to the boats by the sailors, and the images which surmounted it removed and destroyed in the presence of the priests and chiefs.

The abused and insulted natives finally grew desperate under the indignities that were constantly being heaped upon them by men whose wants they had unselfishly relieved at the expense of their own impoverishment, and, angered by some fresh baseness, they stoned a party of sailors and drove them to their boats. From this time onward, Cook and the natives were alternately friendly and hostile until Sunday, the 14th, whose setting sun saw the circumnavigator a corpse.

Ledyard's account and that of the natives vary in no important particulars. A Kanaka, in revenge for a blow he had received at the hands of a sailor (the natives say he was flogged), stole a boat from one of the ships and broke it up to get the nails out of it. Cook determined to seize the King and remove him to his ship, and keep him a prisoner until the boat was restored. By deception he got the aged monarch to the shore, when a multitude of natives flocked to the place; great excitement ensued, and Cook's situation became perilous in the extreme. He had only a handful of marines and sailors with him, and the crowd of natives grew constantly larger and more clamorous every moment. Cook opened hostilities himself, by firing on and wounding a threatening native. A speedy retreat of the English party to the boats was now absolutely necessary; as soon as it was begun, Cook was hit with a stone, and, discovering who threw it, he shot the man dead. The officer in the boats now ordered his men to fire; this occasioned Cook's guard to face about and fire also, and then the attack became general. Cook and Lieutenant Phillips were together a few paces in the rear of the guard, and, perceiving a general fire without orders, quitted the King and ran to the shore to stop it; but, not being able to make themselves heard, and being close pressed upon by the chiefs, they joined the guard, who fired as they retreated. Cook, having at length reached the margin of the water, between the fire and the boats, waved with his hat for them to cease firing and come in; and while he was doing this, a chief stabbed him from behind with an iron dagger (procured in traffic with the sailors), just under the shoulder-blade, and it passed quite through his body. Cook fell with his face in the water and immediately expired.

The native account says, that after Cook had shot two men, he struck a stalwart chief with the flat of his sword, for some reason or other; the chief seized and pinioned Cook's arms in his powerful gripe, and bent him backward over his knee (not meaning to hurt him, for it was not deemed possible to hurt the god Lono, but to keep him from doing further mischief), and this treatment giving him pain, he betrayed his mortal nature with a groan! It was his death-warrant. The fraud which had served him so well was discovered at last. The natives shouted, "He groans!—he is not a god!" and instantly they fell upon him and killed him.

His flesh was stripped from the bones and burned (except nine pounds of it, which were sent on board the ships). The heart was hung up in a native hut, where it was found and eaten by three children, who mistook it for the heart of a dog. One of these children grew to be a very old man, and died in Honolulu a few years ago. A portion of Cook's bones were recovered and consigned to the deep by the officers of the ships.

Small blame should attach to the natives for the killing of Cook. They treated him well. In return, he abused them. He and his men inflicted bodily injury upon many of them at different times, and killed at least three of them before they offered any proportionate retaliation.—"Mark Twain," in the Sacramento Union.

SHARK-KILLING.

ON the coasts of Sumatra, sharks are sought for and killed as a sporting exercise. A traveller thus speaks of this dangerous pastime:

"I was walking on the bank of the river at the time when some up-country boats were delivering their cargoes. A considerable number of coolies were employed on shore in the work, all of whom I observed running away in apparent trepidation from the edge of the water—returning again, as if eager, yet afraid, to approach some object, and again returning as before.

"I found on inquiry that the cause of all this perturbation was the appearance of a large and strange looking fish, swimming close to the bank, and almost in the midst of the boats. I hastened to the spot to ascertain the matter, when I perceived a huge monster of a shark sailing along—now near the surface of the water, and now sinking down, apparently in pursuit of his prey.

"At this moment, a native on the chuppah roofs of one of the boats, with a rope in his hand, which he was slowly coiling up, surveyed the shark's motions with a look that evidently indicated he had a serious intention of encountering him in his own element. Holding the rope, on which he had made a sort of running knot, in one hand, and stretching out the other arm, as if already in the act of swimming, he stood in an attitude truly picturesque, waiting the reappearance of the shark. At about six or eight yards from the boat, the animal rose near the surface, when the native instantly plunged into the water, a short distance from the very jaws of the monster. The shark immediately turned round, and swam slowly towards the man, who in his turn, nothing daunted, struck out the arm that was at liberty, and approached his foe. When within a foot or two of the shark, the native dived beneath him, the animal going down almost at the same instant. The bold assailant in this most frightful contest soon reappeared on the opposite side of the shark, swimming fearlessly with the hand he had at liberty, and holding the rope behind his back with the other.

"The shark, which had also by this time made his appearance, again immediately swam towards him; and while the animal was apparently in the act of lifting himself over the lower part of the native's body, that he might seize upon his prey, the man, making a strong effort, threw himself up perpendicularly, and went down with his feet foremost, the shark following him so simultaneously that I was fully impressed with the idea that they had gone down grappling together. As far as I could judge, they remained nearly twenty seconds out of sight, while I stood in breathless anxiety, and, I may add, horror, waiting the result of this fearful encounter. Suddenly the native made his appearance, holding up both his hands over his head, and calling out with a voice that proclaimed the victory he had won while underneath the wave, Tun, tan! The people in the boat were all prepared; the rope was instantly drawn tight; and the struggling victim, lashing the water in his wrath, was dragged to the shore and dispatched. When measured, his length was found to be six feet nine inches, his girth, at the greatest, three feet seven inches. The native who achieved this intrepid and dexterous exploit bore no other marks of his finny enemy than a cut on his left arm, evidently received from coming in contact with the tail, or some one of the fins of the animal."

STEEL CALVES.—Domestic animals generally seem to be doing well this summer. The last few windy days have been particularly favorable for the development of "calves." There have, perhaps, been no periods in the history of this city where so many of them have been seen on the streets. They mostly go in pairs. While many of them are quite slim and gaunt this summer, others appear remarkably large and thrifty, and we are informed that in many cases some have nearly doubled their size in a single night. To a city-bred young gentleman, no branch of stock-growing is so peculiarly interesting as this variety of live-stock. Somewhere in the Old Testament it is stated that Jewish women were once punished for adoring a false calf. The lesson has its warning.

PROCTOR'S CAVE, recently discovered about three miles from the celebrated Mammoth Cave, is said to surpass the latter in extent, grandeur and the beauty of the mineral formations. Prof. Wright, of Louisville, is making a thorough exploration of this subterranean wonder.

How to catch fleas—go where they are.

AMUSEMENTS.

AT Magnire's Opera House Byron's burlesque of Aladdin proved a light and agreeable entertainment, well produced, with fine scenery and costumes, and pleuty of good music. Lady Don made a very taking "Aladdin," and Kate Denin a particularly graceful "Princess." Courtaine, as the "Magician," introduced some good local hits, and the "Chinese Widow," as played by Thompson, was exuberantly amusing.

The live petty comedy of Simpson & Co. was played during the fore part of the week with Aladdin, and from its brilliant points and finish, as well as from the excellent fitting of its parts in the cast, was a particularly noteworthy production. The piece is full of life, sparkle and character, and was very effectively personated. Lady Don as the jealous "Mrs. Simpson," gave us a characterization that forcibly reminded us of Mrs. Charles Kean's "Mrs. Oakley," in the Jealous Wife. In action, in the modulation of the voice, in the apparently natural impetuosity of jealonsy, the personation was excellent. Mrs. Jackson, too, as the dialectical and impressive "Mrs. Bromley," confidant in her intriguing husband's innocence, and believing poor innocent "Simpson" a perfect Don Juan, was admirable. Of course, Courtaine was in his element as the double-dealing, and often sadly perplexed "Bromley." Mrs. Judah and Miss Sallie Goodrich ably supported the lighter parts. In adding that Anderson was an excellent personifier of "Simpson," we have finished the commendation of one of the best and the best played little comedies we have seen for a long time.

The Colleen Bawn, with Lady Don as "Eily O'Conor," was brought out on Thursday evening, and was played again last-night. This afternoon and evening the burlesque entitled Mazourka, or, The Pole and the Tartar will be produced. We suspect the plot is founded on some poor "Pole" who gets treated as usual with his countrymen, to Tartar Sauce. Tommy and Sally will be the introductory piece. On Monday and Tuesday Rob Roy, with all the original music, will constitute the bill, Lady Don as "Francis Osbaldiston."

METROPOLITAN THEATER.—The second representation of Il Trovatore, after an interval of several weeks, (and we believe without rehearsal), was given on Friday of last week, to a full house, and with a degree of spirit and completeness quite remarkable. Signora Bianchi was more than usually impressive as the fierce Gipsey, and her rendering of the duet with "Manrico," (ably sustained by Signor Bianchi), elicited a hearty recall. Signorina Brambilla and Signor Mancusi, were in fine voice, and Signor Milleri, as before, gracefully assumed the secondary part of "Ferrando," to the great advantage of the cast. The chorus and orchestra were unusually prompt and harmonious, and the general effect of the performance deserves all praise.

Faust, which drew the largest audience of the season on its first representation, and a good one on its second, was given for the third time last Saturday evening to a thin house. It has never won its way into the public heart, and a San Francisco audience is probably the last one that would he impressed with its subdued beauties.

The long expected novelty, Crispino e la Comare, was produced on Monday evening, and repeated on Wednesday and Friday, to the great satisfaction of crowded and fashionable audiences. The light and graceful character of the music, not strikingly original, but fresh and sparkling, is admirably adapted to the public taste here, and will not easily grow tiresome; while the broad comedy of the plot, after weeks on weeks of tragic opera, seems doubly grateful. The leading feature, of course, and we are glad to say also, the great triumph, of the performance, is Signor Mancusi's capital impersonation of the title character, Crispino, in which he developes such an astonishing amount of comic talent as almost to make us doubt his identity. While every one has from the first acknowledged the fine quality, unusual compass, and very artistic management of his voice, we cannot say that his style of acting in serious parts has found much favor; but the only difficulty in Crispino is to imagine that it can have a better representative, or to remember that we have ever seen him in anything else. His capital make-up, and the complete removal of his heavy black beard, increase the illusion, and we are now only afraid that we shall never be able to look upon him seriously again. Among the gems of his part were the "Cobbler's Lament," sung with real pathos; the duet and dance with "Annetta"; the tumultuous trio with "Mirabolano" and "Fabrizio"; and the little address to "La Comare," begging leave to see his wife and children before death. Where there is so much to applaud, we regret to find even one fault, but must unite with several of our daily contemporaries in a protest against "gags," especially in English; they excite a little laughter from a few, but are nevertheless in bad taste anywhere, and in opera should be looked upon as an insult to the audience, and met with instant signs of disapprobation. Signorina Brambilla was very charming as "Annetta," though a part quite out of her usual line. Her singing of the three principal airs, "Ho qui di cal di palpiti," in the first act, "Io non sono," in the second, and "Non ha gioja," in the last—all bearing, by the way, a strong family likeness—and also of the piquant little canzonet, "Piero mio, go qua una fritola," was heartily enjoyed; and her quarrel, reconciliation, and dance with "Crispino," after the gift of money from the fairy, quite brought down the house. Signor Bianchi filled acceptably the small part—reduced by cutting out whole scenes relating to his love for "Lisetta"—of the "Contino del Fiore," and sang his single romanza, "Bella siccome un angelo," with taste and expression. MM. Charles and Roncovieri, as the Doctors, "Fabrizio" and "Mirabolano," were excellent, as was also M. Hennecart as "Don Asdrubale," while M. Guinde, as "Bartolo," looked more really like a ghastly sufferer than was altogether pleasant. The part of "La Comare" was assumed by Mlle. Tourny, who evidently needs more time to make herself acqnainted with it; we believe she has only had it for four or five weeks, and therefore merits the indulgence of the public. The chorus and orchestra display new life and precision under the temporary but very competent direction of Mr. Evans, and the whole performance, even on the first night, was remarkably smooth and successful. The careful attention paid to costumes, scenery, and other details, was shown by several changes—all for the better—made on the second night. Crispino is likely to draw many a crowded house before the public will consent to its retirement for the season.

This evening, for the benefit of the Hebrew Ladies' Benevolent Society, Lucia di Lammermoor will be performed. Belisario is announced for Monday, on which occasion Miss Brannan, heretofore favorably known in private musical circles as a refined lady and cultivated singer, will make her first appearance in opera, doubtless to a crowded house.

The Howson Opera Troupe performed last week at Nevada, and are at Grass Valley for the present week. They are to open the Marysville Theatre with a sacred concert to-morrow evening; and will give the Marysvillians an opera season during the coming week, which will be the "Fair week" at that place.

DR. JORDAN'S Anatomical Museum is on exhibition at the Eureka. An inspection of the wonders of this establishment cannot fail but prove instructive.

LITERARY AND MUSICAL NOTES.

"IT is more than probable," says the Saturday Review, "that during the next twelve months at least half a dozen new books about the Mormon settlement, the Rocky Mountains, Colorado Territory, and all that wonderful land lying to the north of Mexico, and midway betwixt the Mississippi and California, will appear in London and at New York. Two English authors have signified their intention of visiting these parts very shortly; a French celebrity, whose work on China has recently attracted wide attention, is going; and an American artist, Mr. W. Beard, in company with Bayard Taylor, has already started for this district, with the intention of producing an illustrated work."

The completion of the 50th volume of Punch was celebrated early in this month, by a banquet at Maidenhead. The entire literary and artistic staff and the proprietors dined together; and, in recognition of the services of Mr. Mark Lemon, who has for a quarter of a century been sole editor of Punch, a silver "loving cup" was presented to him by the proprietors, and a testimonial of a very gratifying character was also handed to him by his fellow-workers.

Among recent notable London publications are: a pamphlet on "Steam as the Motive Power in Earthquakes and Volcanoes;" "Thecla," a drama; a "Collection of Two Hundred Chess Problems;" Lamartine's "Biographies and Portraits of Some Celebrated People;" and "The Faire Gospeller," by the author of "Mary Powell."

The profits of Lord Derby's version of the "Iliad" amount to £1,350, and have been invested as a prize for the pupils of the Wellington College.

Mr. James Russell Lowell is said to have been, for some years, engaged on a novel which is to be a kind of American "Wilhelm Meister." So says an English literary gossiper.

The author of "Felix Holt" was paid £4,000 for her novel, which is about a fifth of the sum demanded for a sensational drama. She has gone to Germany to escape the temptation of reading, and the annoyance of listening to, criticisms on her new work.

It is understood that Mr. Shirley Brooks, whose novel-inditing pen has too long lain idle, has commenced a story, which will shortly be published in the monthly serial form, with illustrations by Mr. Du Maurier.

The lively Paris correspondent of The American Literary Gazette and Publishers' Circular is Mr. Osborne, who writes the "Spiridion" letters in the Boston Gazette, and the "Gamma" letters in the New Orleans Times.

The tenth thousand of "Ecce Homo" has been published, with a new preface.

Col. Marcy's "Thirty Years of Army Life" has been republished in England, from the original Harper edition.

Dwight's Journal of Music, in quoting the preamble and list of officers of the "San Francisco Italian Opera Association," premises it as follows: "Music-lovers and fashionables in the Golden Gate city, taking it for granted that Italian Opera is the height and sum of all musical felicity, are anxious to make it a permanent institution among them, and to this end have lately organized an Association on the following basis:" and naively adds: "Judging by the following list presented to the Directors by Signor Bianchi, the season will be stunningly Verdi-ish." Our seasons always are.

No less than nine new operas are in preparation for the next season in Milan: Verdi's "Don Carlos," Pacini's "Streghe di Hofbau" (Witches of Hofban), Georgio Micelli the Neopolitan's "Convito di Baldossare" (Belshazzar's Guest), Bazzini's "Turando," the "Eloisa di Cleve," by Quaterez of Naples, "I Promessi Spossi," by Pincherle of Trieste, "Il Romito di Legnaro" (Hermit of Legnaro), by Borivi of Bergamo, and "Rosamonda," by a very young maestro, Parlo la Villa, of Palermo.

The great Organ just erected in Rev. H. W. Beecher's Church at Brooklyn, by the Messrs. Hook of Boston, has been exhibited to a select musical company. A public exhibition of this instrument will soon be given. The Organ cost $25,000, and is the largest ever built in this country. It is next, in size, to the great Boston Organ, which was built in Europe.

PARIS.—At the Grand Opera, during the last week or two of June, Meyerbeer reigned almost exclusively. M. Dumestre was successful in the "Africaine" as Nelusko. Next came the "Prophète" before Gueymard's vacation; then "Robert le Diable," "L'Africaine" again, and so on.

The facade of the new Grand Opera, now building in Paris, will be decorated with the busts of the most celebrated composers. The sculptor, Denechaux, is commissioned to provide those of Cherubini, Mehul, Nicolai, Weber, Rossini and Adam; and M. Bruyer is to provide those of Lesueur, Berton, Boieldieu, Herold, Donizetti, and Verdi.

Milan, during the last two months, the only novelty has been the performance of Cagnoni's opera "Claudia" at the Cannobiana. The libretto has been adapted from the work of George Sand and was commenced by the late Signor Marcello, a man of great talent, especially with regard to adaptations. There are too many recitatives, and altogether it hangs heavily, and is wearying to the listener.

VIENNA.—Both German and Italian operas are closed, and of course, by the latest war news from Bohemia, the old Austrian empire must be singing from the other side of its mouth. The last operatic event of interest was the performance of Weber's "Preciosa," with Walter for tenor, Boch for baritone, and Mmes. Prauze, Dustmann and Tollheim.

BERLIN.—The journals complain of the falling off of receipts at the theaters, consequent upon political troubles. The same cause renders musical and theatrical news from all parts of Germany of the scantiest description.

The musical world is anxiously expecting the appearance of Mr. Thayer's "Biography of Beethoven." Part of the MS. is translated into German, and it will appear in both countries simultaneously. Mr. Thayer is American Consul at Trieste.

The mobilization of the Prussian army has ruined the theater at Carlsruhe. The tenor Stolzenberg has been drafted into the Rhenish Contingent, and another singer—Roberstin—has also been compelled to take military service.

"Emanuel d'Astorga," which has awakened such interest at Stuttgart, is Herr Albert's third work. He is already favorably known in Germany for a symphony called "Columbus," and for his opera "Enzio."

THE ADRIATIC SEA.—The events now transpiring in Europe are drawing the attention of all the world to the famous sea that once floated the lords of the world's commerce. The Adriatic is from the Strait of Otranto, which connects it with the Ionian Sea, to the mouth of the Tagliamento, four hundred and eighty miles long, and its average width is a hundred and thirty miles below the mouth of the Po, above which the Peninsula of Istria reduces it to sixty miles. The Adriatic receives few rivers of importance save the Adige and the Po. The western coast is flat and swampy. It is unfit for habitations, and its harbors are few and poor. The eastern shores are steep and rocky, and contain several excellent harbors. The northwestern part of the Adriatic is known as the Gulf of Venice, and the northeastern as the Gulf of Trieste. During the summer, the navigation is safe; but, in winter, the northeast winds produce many dangerous shipwrecks. Its depth, between Dalmatia and the mouth of the Po, is twenty-two fathoms; opposite Venice it is twelve fathoms; and southward it deepens rapidly. Its waters are salter than those of the Atlantic, and its tides are almost imperceptible.

Victor Hugo's "Toilers of the Sea" has reached its third edition.

A DIAMOND was recently sold in Paris for $12,000.

SONG.

STILL to be neat, still to be drest
As you were going to a feast;
Still to be powder'd, still perfumed:
Lady, it is to be presumed,
Though art's hid causes are not found,
All is not sweet, all is not sound.

Give me a look, give me a face
That makes simplicity a grace;
Robes loosely flowing, hair as free;
Such sweet neglect more taketh me
Than all the adulteries of art;
They strike mine eyes, but not my heart.

BEN JONSON.

GLIMPSES AT CALIFORNIA SCENERY.

LAKE TAHOE.

THE Hand-book of some California Murray will tell you that Tahoe is twenty-two miles long, ten miles wide, six thousand one hundred and sixty-seven feet above the sea, over fifteen hundred feet deep in the center, and surrounded by mountains, the summits of which vary from fifteen hundred to thirty-five hundred feet in hight above the level of the lake. And when you have got through with that arithmetical description, you will have as clear a conception of this Sierra sea as you would gain of the Big Trees by reading of their dimensions. Stand upon the pebbled shore at the southeastern end, soon after sunrise, and the lake and all its conspicuous landmarks are within the eye's unaided grasp. A lake in a lower atmosphere, five miles long and two miles wide, circled by hills covered with grass, instead of trees, deep blue in the center and a brilliant green near the shore, would make the same first impression, for the vastness of the expanse of water and the hight of the surrounding mountains do not appear until after closer inspection and comparison. Yonder point, one of the capes of Emerald bay, looks like a small grassy knoll, to which you could easily pull a Whitehall boat in fifteen minutes. That little knoll is a hill three hundred feet high, covered with pine trees and chapparal, and there are just nine miles of water between your eye and the point where a boat would land its passengers. Upon a very clear day, a guide will direct your attention to two white specks on the edge of the water near the northwestern corner of the lake, and it will seem as though you might row a boat over to the foot of that hill within an hour. The faint white specks are Tahoe City, located on a bluff sixty feet high, and a fast-sailing schooner of twenty tons burden may, if the winds be favorable, carry you there in about six hours. The vessel may be on its way toward your stand-point now, and yet be invisible. The smooth, green hill, above the white specks, is a mountain two thousand feet high, and covered with stately sugar-pines. Enter a boat, and row out for a distance of a half mile. The water will be a clear, translucent green, every pebble on the bottom being visible, and you may be tempted to strip and wade. First cast a line, with a broad sinker, and, before you pull it in, you will decide not to wade; for this green "shoal" water, a half mile from the beach, will be probably one hundred and twenty or thirty feet deep, though you can see the glimmer of the sinker at the end of the line. Push out a little further into the blue water, as blue and sparkling as any sapphire that decks the hand of beauty, and you may piece out several of your longest lines without touching the quiet ooze. The highest summit in sight at the southeastern end of the lake is Pyramid Peak, which is still covered with snow in July, and looks like a nice point to reach in a morning's climb. It would be a good day's work to cross the lake and journey to the edge of that snow by the shortest practicable route, and then the traveler would need a long day's rest. When such facts as these are learned, the mind begins to grasp the grandeur of Tahoe. There is much more which can only be learned by embarking, under the care of a skillful navigator and an intelligent guide, upon the sparkling water of this mountain sea. Smiling and lovely as she looks, Tahoe has fits of anger, when an old salt would prefer to encounter the wildest winds and the most threatening waves of the Atlantic to braving her perilous, freakish wrath.

LAKE AND HOPE VALLEYS—A BEAUTIFUL LANDSCAPE.

Lake Valley was clothed in the beauty of May, while the far plains were withering under the scorching sun of July. The meadows were fresh and gaily decked with flowers. The pine and the tamarack towered in symmetrical elegance, forming groves free from underwood, and making the valley look like a well kept park. The southern wall was crowned by snow-clad peaks. The eastern wall arose at first with an easy swell, and then shot up into straight, sheer, brown rock, with lofty cliffs of perilous edge.

A very pleasant, exhilarating drive brought Oldbuck and his friends, through a forest of pines, oak and aspen, having a rich carpet of grass and flowers, to a point whence they gained their first view of Hope Valley. Here Church should study to paint the "Heart of the Sierra," as a companion picture for his "Heart of the Andes." Here is May in the lap of January. Here are gathered within a space that may be grasped at a glance the beauty and sublimity of the mountain land. Below, fresh green meadows, through which the clear and rapid Carson flows, its circuitous route marked by willows and bowlders of granite. A complete frame of mountains, from fifteen hundred to two thousand feet above the stream. The segment on the extreme right shows masses of snow and dark-gray rock, from which descend forests of pine and tamarack, with straight trunks and spires of evergreen foliage, through which the sunlight falls upon the gently sloping sward. Elsewhere, the mountains are green to the summit, but spotted with bowlders that look like flocks of nibbling sheep. The meadows far below are fenced, and two or three houses and barns may be discerned, for men have fixed their homes here, "shut out from the rude world by Alpine hills." From this valley of emerald splendor, freshness, and bloom, where the yellow-bird and the blue-bird are warbling in the meadows and by the stream, and wild flowers, blue, purple, and golden—larkspur, gentian, and flowers unnamed—are swaying in the sunlight, the Great Artist of Nature had not long withdrawn the screen of snow. The emigrant who, after weeks of slow toiling across the hot, sterile, dusty plains of the Utah basin, emerged from the rocks of Carson Canyon, to meet such a vision as this, might well fix it forever in his heart as the Vale of Hope—the beautiful gateway of the Promised Land. * * * * *

The sun was high in the heavens when these delighted tourists caught a first glimpse of Hope Valley from the summit of Luther's Pass. The air was cool and delicious. How light it was Oldbuck and his friends did not know until they undertook to walk up the road on the eastern side of the valley, where Wohaugh said the grade was too steep for a heavily laden stage. An up-hill walk of a quarter of a mile was sufficient to give most of the party a bellows to mend. The unaccustomed citizens were not the only sufferers. Buoy, otherwise strong and capable of enduring severe toil and exposure, puffed like a porpoise, lagged behind, and finally managed to deposit his two hundred and eighty pounds in the stage, to the snorting indignation of the horses. The others jogged on, helping themselves with improvised alpenstocks, and occasionally complaining of feeling oppression at the upper portion of the lungs. Tenderloin, resting on a wayside rock, quoted, with parenthetical puffs, the opening lines of Beattie's "Minstrel," thus:

"Ah! who can tell (puff) how hard it is to (puff) climb
The steep where Fame's proud (puff) temple shines afar."

* * * * * * *

And now, as they were about to take a farewell look at this lovely vale, the dazzling light of noon was kindling all its wealth of graceful line and varied hue. Here and there the Carson could be seen glimmering through the meadow grass or covering the rocks with snowy foam. The straight pines and their shadows were distinctly defined upon the lower slope of the mountain, and the snow glistened on the crowning peaks. Below was the lush verdure of May. Above, the bald and white-haired Winter kept eternal guard.

NAVIGATION ON THE "MOUNTAIN SEA."

Next morning, as soon as the matin meal had been dispatched, the party gathered on the little wharf which had been built for a landing, and also as a protection for small boats against the breakers when the lake was in a tempestuous mood. The water was perfectly calm now, and near the shore shone like an emerald in the sunshine. On the adjacent beach the sand was thickly sown with jasper and cornelian, beautiful specimens of which were transferred to the pockets of Jenkins and Tenderloin. No schooner was in sight. She would not come into view until she should round Sugar Pine Point, a long, low peninsula on the western shore, covered with valuable timber. Hours passed before the white sail was detected—a mere speck against the green—by the keen eye of Buoy, who knew exactly where to fix his gaze."

"Thar ain't enough wind here to snuff a candle," observed the big man, "but thar's a stiff breeze blowing over yonder. They've got Meeks' wind by this time."

"Whose wind?" inquired Hardtack.

"Meeks'. The wind blowing out of the gorge at Meeks' creek. The winds to reckon on here blow out of Blackwood's, Emerald bay and Fallen Leaf Lake. If they don't blow, a sailing vessel might as well be anchored, for she can't make any headway. The schooner is heading for this point now, but if we don't see the white caps running out of Emerald bay she won't get here till near two o'clock."

Jenkins looked at the waters of the lake, so quiet and unruffled as far as he could see, and couldn't help expressing a wonder whether it was possible for white-capped waves to show themselves on that calm surface.

"White caps!" responded Buoy; "why I've seen 'em running across here like a flock of sheep in a sweet potato patch."

Jenkins booked the smile, but thought it would hardly be of service to a poet smitten with the charms of Tahoe. He would take Tenderloin's opinion on that point.

"Yonder," said Buoy, pointing to a streak of smoke near the eastern shore, but far to the northward, "is the steamboat coming out of Zephyr Cove. She is an old schooner, with a steam engine aboard, and drives a fair business, carrying lumber across the lake for the sawmills. There's not many people around here now, and all kinds of trade are dull. But thar's the making of a great country here. Just look at it. Here we have plenty of the finest timber in the world, enough to keep fifty sawmills busy. And right over that ridge," pointing to the eastern range, "is a God-forsaken region that won't grow anything. Barren? Why, if a man owned seventy-five thousand million acres of it he couldn't pasture a whip-poor-will. But silver draws people thar, and they must have timber. Then thar's mines near this lake that will be worth something one of these days, and at this end, where the Lake House stood, will be the Saratoga of the Pacific coast.

"Saratoga!" exclaimed Jenkins with a nauseating recollection of Congress Spring. "If they had such a lake as this anywhere in the Atlantic States, Saratoga, Newport and the White Hills would be deserted."

No white caps were running out of Emerald bay. The schooner seemed to creep slowly along the western shore of the Lake, though far on her way across, and scarcely a ripple floated over the smooth, bright expanse of water between her and her destination. And when the vessel at last showed her hull and appeared to be within a mile of the landing, the party of tourists ascertained that they would have ample time to get dinner before she would be near enough to receive them and their traps. And they began to realize the magnitude of this Lake, where all apparent distance was a deception.

The schooner had a graceful model, and, with every inch of canvas spread to catch the faintest breeze, moved over the calm waters with swan-like ease. She was dedicated to pleasure and unstained by trade. Her captain, a veteran of lower but wider seas, had studied the lake, for he had soon discovered that the longest experience on the ocean would not suffice to qualify a man for navigating this innocent-looking water. He was a cautious, considerate captain, looking far ahead, confident of his perfect mastery of his vessel under perilous circumstances, but taking no risks while the lives of others were intrusted to his care. His whole crew consisted of one man, equally familiar with the squalls and cross seas peculiar to Tahoe.

When the sun sank behind the western range, "in one unclouded blaze of living light," when the purple shadows of evening crept up the mountain sides, while the rosy light still played upon the higher peaks on the eastern side of the lake, the schooner was not more than two miles from her anchorage. It was the captain's opinion that she could not reach Emerald bay that night, although the entrance appeared to be within rifle-shot, and therefore the tourists prepared to enjoy a sleep on the lake.

With night and the moon and stars came a gentle breeze, enough to ripple the water or rustle a leaf, but the schooner seemed to sleep upon the quiet bosom of the lake, with heaven below and heaven above. The evening star, just over a western peak, made a pathway of light across the glassy surface, and all the bright hosts of the sky were mirrored in the lake. The mountains loomed up darkly, their summits being sharply defined against a sky o'erspread with silver radiance.

The night was delicious—the scene enchanting. But the temperature was unmistakably frosty. Tenderloin and Jenkins, with buttoned overcoats, seated upon the bow of the schooner, recalled the poetry applicable to the hour and scene, had intervals of silent communion with all this affluence of loveliness, during which it is to be supposed their thoughts were too deep to cast a spray of words, shivered, yawned, and finally sank upon the deck to rest for the night, with a soft bundle of rope for a pillow, a spring-plank for a mattress, and two thick blankets for a mutual quilt. The rest of the party, except the sleepless captain, stowed themselves away in various eligible spots; and before midnight all were wandering in dreams, though sleeping under the moon, "rocked in the cradle of the deep."

EMERALD BAY—A HOME IN THE WOODS.

Emerald bay opened before the party—a sheet of quiet, green water, a half mile wide, and perhaps two miles long, but looking much smaller, on account of the hight of the steep mountains by which it is surrounded. Shoal at the entrance, with a bottom of boulders, the favorite haunt of silver trout, the bay deepens suddenly, and would easily accommodate the Great Eastern, if she could cross the stony bar. At the extreme western end, the mountains culminate in two remarkable round peaks, which have a name only mentionable to stag parties. Beyond them are higher summits, spotted with snow. On the right of this beautiful background, a snowy cascade foams down from the summit of the green range, but is broken by rocky steps into three falls ere it reaches the level sward at the base. Between this cascade and the waters of the bay, a new and elegant cottage, a summer-house, a landing, a sail-boat, and several skiffs were seen, indicating that somebody with a fine appreciation of beauty had made a home here. In the center of the bay, but near the western end, arose an island, thirty or forty feet high, a mass of rugged granite, made picturesque by the contrast of the evergreens with the rocks. A party of Sacramento ladies visited this place some time ago, and one of the ladies named the island the Coquette, because, "being the center of a brilliant circle of admirers, attracted by her beauty, she still has a stony heart."

The adventurous cruisers lauded where the sail-boat was moored. They saw children playing on the fresh grass beneath the shade of towering pines. They saw a home, enchantingly located, and marked by evidences of genuine taste. They cultivated the acquaintance of the "lady of Emerald bay," as a Washoe minstrel ventured to sing, and her lord—once a busy man in Sacramento and San Francisco, now "monarch of all he surveys" about this mountain home. Among the pets were a bald eagle caught on Eagle Point, a pointer capable of intelligent tricks, a tame specimen of the wild goose, tame trout in a tank, and a model of a quartz-mill in full operation. The accomplishments of the queen of this beautiful realm included rowing, shooting with a heavy rifle, trout-fishing, managing a sail-boat in a squall, designing and building a summer-house without the aid of architect or carpenter, and administering the affairs of an isolated household; and, strange as it may seem to the delicate manipulators of pianos in town, this life of vigor and daring implied no loss of gentleness or neglect of the usual attractions of the sex.

Jenkins thought of Diana, the huntress. Hardtack was tossing and talking nonsense to a lively baby. That would never do. Diana with a baby! Tenderloin was climbing the mountain to get a good view of the cascade. Mr. Oldbuck, Buoy, Shorty and Wohaugh were examining everything in general, the citizens seeming to be fascinated by the beauty of this secluded home and the novelties assembled around it by the taste and energy of its fortunate possessors.

Ice, purer than the best Sitka, and trout a foot long were taken aboard here, and the Captain insisted on a short leave-taking, because a wind had sprung up which would carry the schooner out of the bay and further on her voyage. Every inch of sail was set. The party were cheered by the prospect of a genuine ride on the lake, under the impetus of a spanking breeze; yet, as the schooner slowly sailed out of the bay, away from the pretty home in the shadow of the hills, the foamy cascade, the picturesque island and the various charms of this delightful piece of lake scenery, there was a general expression of regret.

As they sailed over the stony bar at the mouth of the Bay, Buoy, as they say in the French reports of Parliament, "took the word." He had the deck:

"Nearly all the points of attraction about this Lake are at the southern end. When you get to Tahoe City you will have one of the finest views of the lake, as a whole, that can be obtained anywhere, but around here you might spend a week and see something new every day. This Bay has been painted several times. One of the Washoe aristocracy has a picture which he says is 'pooty, only it haint got distance enough into it.' Right over that low range," pointing north, "is Fallen Leaf Lake, about two miles long and a half mile wide, walled in by steep mountains—one of the most beautiful sheets of water the sun ever shone on. Over here," pointing over Eagle Point, "is Cascade Lake, with a higher cascade than this one at the Bay. Away up above that is Echo Lake, where there is a wonderful chorus of echoes. It's like advertising for a wife. Pop the question once and you get more answers than you can attend to in a month. Then thar's Pyramid Peak, which you've seen at a distance. That used to be called the highest mountain this side of Lassen's Butte. But Job's Peak—that yellow summit over thar, with a small patch of snow on the tip, goes about a thousand feet higher—say eleven thousand feet above the sea. It's just fourteen miles from the upper end of this lake to the top of Job's Peak, though it looks so close. Them barren yellow summits represent Washoe. These green mountains are California, you bet. That pile of rocks just north of Emerald bay is called Rubicon Rocks. Thar the blue water comes close to the shore, and if you cross that Rubicon you go down about nine hundred feet, unless the big trout make a meal of you."
—"Winkle," in the Sacramento Union.

In the diary of the Japanese mission who visited England in 1862, it is noted that at Dover they were received with cries of "Peyapipehare," evidently intended for "hip, hip, hurrah;" and the writer adds, "The meaning is not clear, but it appears to be a congratulatory expression."

Ivory.—A scarcity of ivory is predicted; the demand for Sheffield alone kills twenty thousand elephants a year. In process of time no more elephants will remain to be killed, all the tusks will be used up, and then what shall we do for ivory handles to our knives?

The Prince Imperial of France is to be taught printing, a press having been put up for his use in the Tuileries.

A BURLESQUE BULL-FIGHT.

A RECENT traveller in Spain describes a burlesque bull-fight which he witnessed while in Seville:

The great attraction of the day was the first appearance of an "intrepid señorita"—"tauromaniac," we should be disposed to call her—who was to face the bull single-handed This drew crowds of spectators; and when the ring was cleared, and the young lady entered, in a kind of "bloomer" costume, with a cap and red spangled tunic, the audience rose to welcome her. She bowed to the president, and was conducted at once into the center of the arena, when, lo! a great tub, with one end open, was brought and placed upright, and the "intrepid" lifted into it! It reached to her armpits, and there she stood, waving her "banderillas" or darts, when at a given signal the bull was let in. It was a young bull, with horns cut short and padded at the ends; and as the animal could only toss or do any mischief by lowering its head to the ground, the risk did not seem great or the peformance promising. For some time the bull would not have anything to do with the tub, evidently not considering it fair game; but, after walking two or three times round the arena, he turned round suddenly, and, without the slightest warning, rushed headlong at it. Away went the tub, rolling half across the arena, with our fair señorita, who had evidently rehearsed her part, coiled up inside. This was all very well, and the lady might enjoy a sport usually confined to the hedgehog and other lower animals; but when the bull, who soon began to get angry, at last caught up the barrel on his horns, and rushed bellowing round the ring, it looked serious for the tenant. There was a general rush of "banderillas" and "chulos" to the rescue; but some minutes elapsed before they could surround the bull and rescue the performer from her perilous position. When extricated, she was smuggled ignominiously out of the arena, and we saw the brave señorita no more; the bull was not killed, but "bundled" out of the ring. The next act was "Skittles." Nine negroes ("Bedouins of the Desert," we should call them), dressed grotesquely, stood up like "ninepins," within a few feet of each other, and a frisky "novillado," or young bull, was let in to knock them over. They understood their duty, and went down flat at the first charge. The bull struck out right and left, and soon overturned them all. They then sat in rows in chairs, and were again bowled over, to the delight of the assembly.

This was great fun, and was repeated several times—the bull liked it, the "ninepins" seemed to like it, and the people gloried in it. The third act was the burlesque of the "picadores;" a grotesque but a sadder sight. Five poor men in rags, who, for the sake of two or three reales allowed themselves to be mounted on donkeys and receive the charge of the bull. We could not help thinking that it was not alone Cervantes who had "laughed Spain's chivalry away," if the stately Sevillians could enjoy such sights as these. But we must not stay to moralize: the sight is too ridiculous. Here they come in close phalanx, cheered by at least 5,000 people; the five donkeys with their ears well forward and their tails set closely between their legs; the ragged "picadores," without saddle or briddle, riding with a jaunty air, and a grim smile on their dirty faces, that was comical in the extreme Would that Gustave Dore could have seen the group! The gates are opened again, and the bull goes to work. He charges them at once, but they are so closely packed that they resist the shock, and the bull retires. He has broken one of the poor animal's legs, but they tie it up with a handkerchief, and continue marching slowly round, keeping well together as their only chance. A few more charges, and down they all go. The men run for their lives and leap the barriers, and the donkeys are thrown up in the air! Such is the general outline of the performance, which had many variations and interludes, and lasted more than three hours. As evening approached, the whole scene made one of those pictures that delight an artist. The "Plaza de Toros," at Seville, is half in ruins, one side of the wall being destroyed; and through this gap we saw the city. The foreground was an irregular mass of people, scarce distinguishable in the twilight, but twinkling with the light of thousands of "cigaritos," and covered with a complete canopy of smoke floating in the still air. Beyond, the city towers just tinged with the sun's departing rays, and "La Giralda," high above them all, glowing as if it were yet broad day. The finale was a wonderful sight. Two or three young bulls were let into the ring, and then all the people. We left them there rolling and tumbling over one another in the darkness, shouting and screaming, fighting and cursing—sending up sounds that might, indeed, make angels weep.

Precocious.—The other evening, as I was sauntering slowly down the main street in our village, I drew near one of our groceries, and perceived a dirty-faced boy and girl, about nine years of age, standing by the store window. Just as I was passing, the boy broke out with, "Mag, do you love Sam Galey better nor me?" When out came the young lady's reply: "Sam Galey to blazes! I don't like you nor Sam Galey either." Just phancy that boy's phelinks.

OUR EYES.

AN eminent Boston physician says indigestion is the principal source of weak eyes. Reading in the cars often seriously disturbs the vision. A delicate and wonderful apparatus within the eyes is constantly busy adapting it to the varying focal distances. The jerking motion of the cars compels an exhaustive effort to maintain the required adaptation. Thousands of eyes are spoiled by reading in cars and other vehicles. Recently I was consulted by a railroad expressman who had become blind by reading the newspapers in the cars. Thousands, who have never consciously suffered any inconvenience from the habit, are obliged to wear glasses prematurely, to correct an unsteadiness of vision produced in this way. Reading with the gas-light before you is another cause of weak eyes.

The light should always hang quite high and behind you, and allowed to shine over the shoulder. If convenient it should be over the left shoulder. If using kerosene, it is best to employ the lamps which hang on the wall. Neither should you read with your face toward the window.

Reading by twilight is dangerous. Gradually accommodating itself to the receding light the eye is unconsciously strained. I have seen more than one case of grave disease of the eye produced by an undue effort to use the vision too long at twilight.

White paint is another mischief to the eyes. White paint inside, white paint outside, white paint everywhere. During the season of the brightest sunshine the glare hurts the eye. I wonder if it is not in bad taste also? I notice that artists have none of it about them.

In our constant reading, the eyesight is much tried by the white paper. I hope that the tinted paper, with still deeper color, may become fashionable.

Avoid reading by artificial light when you can. We read too much. We read as we eat—pell-mell, hotchity-potchity; no mastication, no digestion. If, as a people, we read less, we might know more. Few indications are more unpromising in a child than a remarkable passion for books. I doubt if a good lady, who called on me the other day with her son, will ever forgive me for what I said to her. Her boy was of the regular Boston type—great head and eyes, with small and narrow chest. She said with a mournful voice, but with evident pride: "Ah, doctor, he has such a passion for books. As soon as he is out of bed, he is down at some great book, and scarcely leaves it but for his meals. He never plays like other children."

I told her, among other things, that unless she could break up that habit, her son would very likely turn out a dolt. She left very soon with the belief that I did not understand her son's case. I should have about as much hope of a man who gave himself up to childish sports as I should of a child who gave himself up to the habits and life of a man.

The newspapers have much to answer for in the way of small type and imperfect printing. I would cheerfully give two hundred dollars a year to support a newspaper which would give us, morning and evening, a half column of the really reliable news, instead of fifteen columns of diluted speculations and tricky canard, the reading of which bursts our eyes and wastes our precious time.

The Schoolmaster's in that Bed.—One evening, after school, one of my scholars stepped up to me and said:

"Mr. Jones, father said you would come home with me."

"Very well," said I, and forthwith set out for my patron's house, which was some two miles.

Now, be it known, James McHenry—for such was his name—had two daughters, the pride and envy of the whole community. I had heard so much about them that I was anxious to see them. It seemed, however, I was to be disappointed.

When we arrived, I heard that the girls had gone to a party on the other side of the creek; so I went to bed, execrating the luck which deprived me of seeing them that night. The night had well advanced, when I heard one of the girls come; and passing into an adjoining room, she warmed herself before some coals which were alive on the hearth. It seems that the old gentleman and lady slept in the same room, which I was not aware of then. Having warmed herself, she turned to leave the room, when the old man spoke.

"Girl," said he, "the schoolmaster is in your bed."

"Very well," said Sarah, and passed through the room I slept in, and went up stairs.

An hour elapsed, when I heard Judy, the other one, come. She stood at the door a long time, talking with her sweetheart, then entered softly.

Disrobing her feet, she entered the room where I lay in her stocking feet, carefully undressed herself, and coming to the side of the bed, prepared to get in. Now it happened I lay in the middle, and turning back the clothes, she gave me a shake, and said, in a suppressed whisper:

"Lay over, Sarah."

I rolled over, and whipped the corner of the pillow in my mouth to keep from laughing. In she bounced, but the bed would squeak. The old man heard it, and called out:

"Judy!"

"Sir!" was responded in a faint voice from the bed beside me.

"The schoolmaster is in that bed!"

With one loud yell, and "O, Heaven!" she landed on the floor, and fled with the rapidity of a deer up stairs.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS, C. H. WEBB. } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 1, 1866.

FULL volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

TRAVELLING AGENT.—MR. O. P. TRUESDELL is our authorized Agent to receive subscriptions, and appoint agencies for THE CALIFORNIAN.

THOUGHTFUL READING.

RUSKIN says, in one of his recent publications, that Englishmen have no taste for "thoughtful reading." This is, perhaps, true enough; but is it exclusively or especially true of Englishmen? Are Frenchmen at all more remarkable than Englishmen for "a taste for thoughtful reading"? Does the prevailing strain of the more popular French literature of the day indicate such a taste in those who have created a demand for it? And how is it, even in this pre eminently "enlightened" nation? Is there any particularly vociferous demand among us for "thoughtful reading"? Are not halting wit, bastard humor, vulgar gossip, the "gushings" of sickly sentimentality, the snarls of a mean and malignant cynicism, the inanities of triflers who juggle with words, and never approach a subject except to play with it,—are not all these far more popular with us than sound, manly, healthy literature? What is the character and quality of the poems that are most popular, of the novels that are most extensively read? Tupper has more readers than Tennyson, Pierce Egan than Anthony Trollope, Miss Braddon than the author of "Romola," the "Country Parson" than Ruskin, and Bonner's Ledger is said to be the most widely circulated unillustrated weekly in America.

Such is the cynical view of the case; but there is another and wiser, as well as brighter view. If there is little taste for "thoughtful reading," the taste for reading of some sort is almost universal; and this is in itself a great gain for civilization and humanity. A thirst for literature of the outrageously stimulating sort, is better than no thirst at all, and as Wordsworth philosophically observes, there are certain "inherent and indestructible qualities of the human mind," and certain "powers in the objects that act upon it," which have a continual tendency to bring men back to a true and healthy standard of taste.

The youth who kindles into enthusiasm over the "Proverbial Philosophy" and finds delight in frantic novels, having once formed the habit of reading, may, and under favorable circumstances probably will, acquire by degrees a relish for a very different kind of intellectual pabulum. Indeed, which of us is there who has not had frequent occasion in his riper years to smile and wonder as he glanced over the pages of some early favorite, at finding how utterly the charm and glory that once seemed so magical, had vanished.

THE HON. HORACE HAWES has given by deed of trust a newly erected building, with four surrounding acres of ground, in the heart of Redwood City, for the purpose of establishing a Select School. The trustees, to whom is committed the control of the school, are Bishop Kip, Thomas H. Selby, B. G. Lathrop, George Kellogg and —— Livingston. Mr. Hawes has always been one of the most public spirited of our citizens, and we are glad to see that his attention has been called to the great need in our State of educational endowment. It is to be hoped that, in taking the initiative in this matter, he will lead others of our wealthy and philanthropic citizens to a consideration of the subject.

THE DESCRIPTION of Lake Tahoe and the surrounding scenery, which will be found in to-day's issue of THE CALIFORNIAN, is taken from four letters which recently appeared in the Sacramento Union, over the signature of "Winkle." We regret that we were unable to afford space for these letters entire, as they are no less interesting in their narrative than they are admirable in their descriptive parts. These descriptions will furnish many of our readers in the Atlantic States with new ideas of the beauties and wonders of some of our California scenery. "Winkle" is generally supposed to be the nom de plume of Mr. Watson, the principal editor of the Union.

WHY is the tolling of a bell like the prayer of a hypocrite? Because it is a solemn sound by a thoughtless tongue.

CYNICISM IN LITERATURE.

ONE of the most marked characteristics of our more recent periodical literature, seems to be a certain hardness and lack of enthusiasm in its tone. A cold austerity in its critical judgments, an exaggerated dread of anything that might be characterized as sentimentality, fastidious solicitude in regard to form and expression more than in regard to pith and substance—these are a few of the worst features of our most fashionable, modern literary style. A large portion of the recent popular literature of France is characterized by coarse and low notions of feminine character; abounds in sneers at the foibles of women, and in insinuations against their purity. As is almost invariably the case, this want of respect for woman is accompanied by a repulsive spirit of cynicism and scepticism in reference to society and religion. It is well, however, that this species of literature, however popular for the moment, is not destined to endure. Like the foam upon the wave, it sparkles and perishes. The order of nature, the law of God working in the constitution of the human mind and of society, are against it. Those of our American feuilletonists who have attempted to imitate the vivacity and sprightliness of Parisian originals, have only succeeded in reproducing the hateful animus without catching the grace and sparkle that serve to make it attractive. Spite, and cynicism, and jaundiced misanthropy, always repulsive in themselves, can only be rendered palatable by the most artistic manipulation. When associated with dullness or stolidity, or owlish assumption, they cannot even amuse.

THE BULLETIN of the 29th ult. says: "Telegraphic correspondence of over seven hundred words from the Empress Carlotta in Europe to Maximilian passed over the Cable on Sunday, and was forwarded to Galveston, whence a dispatch boat would be sent to Vera Cruz." Maximilian is said to have been one of the largest patrons of the Cable so far. It must be important business that warrants the expenditure of so large a sum in telegrams in the depleted condition of the Imperial treasury. We fear that if "the Cable" depends at all for its success as a pecuniary enterprise upon the continued patronage of Maximiliau, it will prove a disastrous failure.

SENSATIONAL.—The New York Leader, quoting from "an exchange," says that within a month after the opening of the New York Inebriate Asylum, over fifteen hundred applications were made by "wealthy parents" for the admission of their daughters, "who had contracted habits of intemperance from the use of wines and liquors at fashionable parties." This paragraph has the genuine ring of a Bowery melodrama, and we regard it as a purely sensational exaggeration.

THE TELEGRAPH announces that there is some talk in Boston of sending Wendell Phillips to Congress from the Third District. We hope that if such a thing is contemplated it will not be carried out. Such extremists are needed for certain work; but we are inclined to think that Wendell Phillips' work, so far as our national affairs are concerned, is completed.

WE acknowledge the receipt of a Photograph copy of the "Cone picture" of the late President Lincoln, from W. E. Loomis, stationer and news dealer, corner Sansome and Washington streets. The picture derives its title from its beautiful and unique frame made from the cones of the pine and cypress trees.

IT IS STATED by the New York Evening Post that within the past two years more than a million of dollars has been paid in New York city alone for the works of foreign and native artists. It should be remembered that all this has been done under the burden and infliction of a great war.

STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.—J. W. Winans, Esq., a prominent member of the Bar of this city, and President of the Board of Education, has been selected to deliver the annual address before the State Agricultural Society at the ensuing State Fair at Sacramento.

NEW MUSIC.—M. Gray, No. 613 Clay street, has favored us with a copy of his second edition of "Good-by, Sweetheart, Good-by," as sung by Lady Don. Also, "O, ye Tears," and "Call Me Thine Own," from his series entitled the "Vocal Beauties of Germany and France."

THE CHINESE POPULATION OF CALIFORNIA.—Figures from Chinese sources give a total Chinese population in California of 58,300 persons, one fourth of whom are employed upon the Pacific Railroad.

THE NEW YORK LEADER says: "We believe that there is a great deal of truth in the World's theory that Greeley is trying to have capital punishment abolished in anticipation of the trial of the Radicals for treason."

THE rag business in New York amounts to $30,000,000 per annum.

NOT AFRAID OF CHOLERA.

IT is evident that the great Asiatic Missionary of cleanliness, the progress of whose steady westward march over mountain and prairie toward the Pacific is regularly chronicled in the morning papers—it is evident that this mighty preacher, "whose evangelism we fear and flee from," is regarded as a myth by our municipal authorities. The Board of Supervisors does not believe in the cholera; at least such is the only conclusion upon which its course can be reasonably explained. To the city of New York, the dread of the coming of the pestilence has proved an almost priceless blessing, the effects of which will be felt for ages. Never, in the history of any municipal body, has there been an instance of reform undertaken so promptly, on so large a scale, and so thoroughly carried out, as is furnished in the sudden and complete purification of that city in anticipation of the coming of the cholera. Persons recently arrived from there speak of the present condition of New York, with reference to cleanliness, as something "beautiful and wonderful." It is doubtful if there is in the world to-day so thoroughly "clean" a city.

If, when the scourge comes to us, it touches us as lightly as it has New York, we certainly shall not owe it to the same cause. San Francisco is, so far as proper sanitary precautions are concerned, in an alarming condition. Many of the smaller streets and alleys are reeking with filth or garbage; and even in some of the most respectable portions of the town, the municipal regulations, in regard to minor sanitary matters, are daily violated.

ENGLISH GOSSIP ABOUT AMERICAN ACTORS.

MR. HENRY MORLEY, Professor of English Literature in the University College, London, has recently published an interesting contribution to the history of the English Stage, under the title of "The Journal of a London Playgoer." This journal extends over a period of nearly fifteen years, beginning on the 30th of August, 1851, and ending on the 7th of April of the present year, and consists of extracts from articles contributed by Mr. Morley, of the London Examiner, of which he was the theatrical critic.

All the good actors who have appeared in England during the last fifteen years—English, French and German—figure in Mr. Morley's pages, as well as the bad ones, whose name is legion, not forgetting the singers in opera and the players in pantomime. Nor are American actors neglected, with the sole exception, we believe, of Mr. Edwin Booth. Mr. Murdoch, who was playing at the Haymarket in the fall of 1856, is pronounced "vigorous without excess, lively and manly, his acting abounding in shrewd and well-considered by-play.' Of Mr. and Mrs. Barney Williams Mr. Morley says: "In farces suited to their humor these artistes excel, and they have the rare merit of a complete absence from vulgarity. They know how to act broad farce with refinement. Of the two actors, the lady, as is fit, appears to be the better artist, and her whimsical songs, which are of a kind that any lady might sing who had enough power of ludicrous expression, have already found their way into the London streets."

Mr. Jefferson is praised for his excellent playing in "Rip Van Winkle," although the play itself is severely censured. Speaking of the third act, Mr. Morley says: "The drama in this act is at its poorest, but Mr. Jefferson is at his best. Retaining his old Dutch English with a somewhat shriller pipe of age in its tone, he quietly makes the most of every opportunity of representing the old man's bewilderment. His timid approaches to an understanding of the change he finds, his faint touch of the sorrow of old love in believing his wife dead, and reaction into humorous sense of relief, his trembling desire and dread of news about his daughter, and in a later scene, the pathos of his appeal to her for recognition, are all delicately true."

Miss Bateman is evidently no favorite with Mr. Morley, who thus mentions her:

"At the New Adelphi, Miss Bateman's 'Leah' is an American version of the German 'Deborah,' in which Madame Ristori acted one night in London not very long ago. Of Miss Bateman let me say first, that she can hardly be said to act the part at all, but only recites it, until she comes to the fourth act, in which she displays some dramatic energy. But in the fifth act she gives the greatest hope of what she may hereafter do. She is still young, unassuming, although it was her misfortune to be on the boards as an infant phenomenon, as one of the two 'Bateman children,' some ten years ago. She has no set faults, and in the fifth act of 'Leah' she plays with a genuine tenderness. Her Leah is not, of course, to be named with Madame Ristori's Deborah, but the difference is not altogether of her own making. The charm of the pastoral play has all been trampled out by the hoof of the American adapter. 'Deborah' is to 'Leah' as the cottage flower garden, neat and trim over night, is to the same garden, in the morning after a jackass has run loose in it."

Sir E. B. Lytton is to be Baron Lytton of Knebworth—and the last of the Barons.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"THE gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I WILL roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me" A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I WILL aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO

More Who Want to be Editors.

WE were unable last week to afford space for all the epistles received by the publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN in consequence of the rumored vacancy of the editorial chair. Within forty-eight hours after the rumor got abroad, thirty-seven of these epistles came to hand. Below are a few more specimens:

Publishers Californian:

GENTLEMEN:—I should like to take the editorship of THE CALIFORNIAN, but at present it is, I fear, quite out of the question. You are probably aware—for in some mysterious manner quite incomprehensible to me, the report of it has leaked out—that I am concentrating my entire intellectual energies upon the production of a great Californian novel, or more properly the great California novel; and for the propriety of my substitution of the definite for the indefinite article I appeal with confidence to the verdict of posterity, who will have a more favorable opportunity of passing upon the merits of my work than this generation, very few of whom, indeed, are likely to be alive when it is completed. For it is designed to be no ephemeral sensational production such as are reeled off by the yard for Sunday papers by those mechanical hacks who may be not inaptly designated the tapeworms of literature. I am "going slow," but when my task is achieved, I flatter myself that it will be "finished" in more senses than one. I have produced three chapters during the last two years, which I have "tested" somewhat as Webb used to test his puns before putting them in print—that is, by seeing how they take. I have read those chapters to men, women, and children, of every grade of culture; and from all, they have elicited the highest praise, as invariably as a corkscrew elicits a tight cork, or a patent forceps a double-pronged molar. Among those upon whom I have thus experimented, are two clergymen, a lawyer, five editors, seventeen lady teachers, thirty-nine school-girls, and innumerable literary persons. As my plan is to "test" each successive chapter in the same manner as fast as it receives the finishing touches, you will perceive that my time is likely to be pretty well occupied for some years to come. I write you therefore, solely in consequence of a rumor prevalent among my friends that the editorship was to be tendered me, and to prevent any delay in consummating your arrangements which might arise from the expectation of securing my services.

Yours appreciatively, RALPH K—L—R.

P. S. I would esteem it a favor if, in your "literary gossip," you would occasionally make an allusion to "Allaquiz's" forthcoming novel. You might mention in your next issue that I expect to furnish another chapter sometime this Fall. R. K.

To the Proprietor of the Californian:

GENT:—I have, after much deliberation, concluded to accept the editorship of your paper should it be tendered me, as I suppose it probably will be—or would be if you had any idea of my readiness to assume the position. Since the disturbance in my establishment on Sacramento street, caused by the preparations to start the Times, my berth has been a rather disagreeable one. McC—— is quite demoralized; W—d—d has taken to—smoking, more recklessly than ever, and the entire labor and responsibility of running the machine has come upon my shoulders My regular work of fixing up U-t-n's "leaders," infusing a little wit into Fitz Smythe's "items," correcting L-v-ngst-n's and H-tt-l's grammar, and manufacturing "despatches" when the wires are down, was enough, God knows, for one man—but under existing circumstances it would kill ten. * * * If I take the position, I can supply you with all the novels and stories you want. Although it is not generally known, I have a natural genius for fiction, and even my ordinary conversation is a romance. * * * The fact is, I'm tired of the drudgery of daily journalism, otherwise I would have accepted the position of chef on the Times, which was offered me at a salary of $750 00 per month before they sent for Dana, who is to get only a beggarly $200.

Yours truly, M. M. N—H.

P. S. Whatever hesitation I may have felt about it is ended. I have had a d—l of a row in the office, and have been obliged to discharge H-tt-ll and L-v-ngst-n, and to order McC-ll-sh (who undertook to interfere) out of the sanctum. D—d if I'll stick by the concern any longer. W—d—d has just gone down on his knees begging me to overlook it, but I told him it was no use and I had sailed the craft for him long enough, and that now I should just let 'em all go to the d—l their own way. M. M. N.

Proprietor of the Californian:

SIR:—I will, for an adequate consideration, edit your paper. I am not urged to make this offer so much by hope of pecuniary gain—or as a jokist I know would say the "mopusses"—as by the conciousness that the field I now occupy as local editor of the A-ta, is too confined for me. I do my best to enliven its columns with jew despries, but a commercial puper is not the sort of paper which is suited to me, or, I may say, ne suitor ultera crepidum. I can, when I am editor of THE CALIFORNIAN, bring out the talent for literature which I possess. I can write articles on natural history, and give reminiscences of the Audubon Club. I can cultivate my vein of humor which is now, perhaps, unappreciated when it crops out in a murder item. I can do many things. I can be a general utility editor. During the opera season I can write criticisms of the beautiful works of the great masters. In the A-ta how weak are the so called criticisms! I wished to write a notice of Beethoven's beautiful opera of Lucrezia Borgia; I was refused permission. With my soul throbbing ecstatically, my whole being thrilling with music, I returned from hearing Salvator Rosa's great creation of La Traviata, in which the splendid anvil chorus must find an echo in every heart. N—h was "how came you so?" I volunteered to write a criticism. Again I was refused permission. I want a larger field. I was not born to remain a local editor of a commercial paper, to chronicle drunks and misdemeanors. I will edit THE CALIFORNIAN. I will make jokes, write sentiment, quote foreign languages, write pathetic in memoriums when respected citizens die, and in addition to all this will gain for your paper an extended circulation among the Chinese population.

Yours respectfully, FITZ SMYTHE.

The Proprietor of the Californian:

SIR:—I will accept the editorship of your paper. You need determination, and I have it. I have increased the size of my arm seven inches in seven days, in the gymnasium, by determination. By determination I have been enabled to walk from the "Nightingale" to the Plaza in 3¼ minutes. I have offered to bet that upon any given subject, or upon no subject at all, I can talk for twenty-four hours consecutively upon my legs. In other words I am a John Bull-Dog. I do not admit it to everybody, because it might excite envy. My professional business is most weighty and important. I only give it up out of consideration for the other members of the Bar. I can make a great deal better speech than Harry Byrne, Tom Freelon, or Aleck Campbell, and can talk longer. As to literature, I may say that I have measured myself with all the so-called celebrities in that line on the Pacific slope, and, in the language of our Yankee friends, they are "no whar." Judge H—ff—n talks too much. He is an egotist and a bore. As to the pestilent tribe of Bohemians, with little Bowman at their head, I can only say odi profadum vulgus. I delivered a lecture at Sacramento before the State Agricultural Fair, the best ever delivered in California. I stood upon my feet seventeen hours without one moment's rest for food or drink, to write that address. I have also been the principal writer of the principal articles of the principal magazines of Great Britain. Col. H—rstb—y has so stated in a public restaurant in this Metropolitan city, and has stated that he has seen the manuscript of the leading articles of the magazines aforesaid in my hand writing. One advantage of employing a man like me is, there will be no necessity of dictionaries or encyclopedias—since I am a library in myself. Sometimes I have stood in doubt and wonder as to whether I was greater with the pen or the tongue. I have concluded, however, that perfection cannot be compared—it is itself—I am myself. I sign myself

Yours confidently, H. H. HIGH-TONE.

Proprietor Californian:

DEAR SIR:—I am in receipt of your letter inquiring whether my engagements are such as to render it possible for me to take charge of your paper, and whether I am willing to do so. In reply, I beg leave to assure you that if I were obliged to choose between the two, I should prefer engineering a hand-cart.

Besides, I haven't the knack of "fine writing" of the mincing sort that has come into fashion with the "literary" journals. The most admired style now seems to be one that is destitute of all force and directness, its chief characteristic consisting in saying pretty nothings prettily; or, rather, of seeming to say something without saying anything at all. For my part, I belong to the old-fashioned school, and don't believe in "literature" that consists of a mere patchwork of dainty phrases. Another disqualification is, that I never could learn to blow my own horn, and as I do not belong to the little literary coterie of mutual admirers, who for some years past have been so industriously engaged in puffing one another into local notoriety, I find myself in a measure crowded out of a recognized position, as a general writer, by new men having greater disposition to keep themselves before the public, and push their claims than I possess.

Republics are said to be ungrateful, and I once thought Republicans and the world in general to be in the same category. But since getting into Federal office, I am inclined to revise my opinion on that subject, and if I can only stir up the Department at Washington to square up accounts and send along the arrears due me for money advanced to keep the revenue office running, I shall be content.

Yours etc., FRANK S—LE.

[We reserve until next week the remainder of these epistles, including one from Kuzzilbash, revealing throughout the idiosyncrasies of his genius, and replete with the felicities of his exquisite style. We have been holding these letters back, on the same principle upon which a thoughtful and self-denying urchin reserves his biggest sugar-plum to swallow last.]

Fully Appreciated.

In the last issue of THE CALIFORNIAN two articles were published, headed respectively "Bogge' Story of Western Style" and "Bummers." Everyone who read these articles said they were capital. Eveyone wanted to know who wrote them. There is no secret about the matter. "Dogberry" is the author; he wrote them originally, we believe, for the Golden Era, a very creditable weekly paper published in this city. Since then they have been going the rounds of the press. We intend to hunt up some more of "Dogberry's" sketches, and if we again omit to give due credit to author and paper, because we do not find either attached, we shall always be happy to make the amende honorable if "Dogberry" will write us a good-natured letter, such as he published in last Sunday's Golden Era.

Very Probable.

The Flag, after mentioning the fact that a slight shock of an earthquake was felt in this city at about ten minutes past 2 o'clock on Wednesday morning, says it was "accompanied with rather more Tartarian effluvia than is agreeable to the inhabitants of this sphere however it may be in another. A strong sulphurous smell pervaded the air for about a minute prior to the shock." This statement is probably true as far as the Flag office is concerned, but we don't believe any one outside the Flag office smelled brimstone.

The Grand Jury.

As we anticipated would be the case, the Grand Jury have spoken boldly and decisively on the subject of the fall of the building on Summer street. The Coroner's Jury said "no one should perhaps be charged with criminal neglect;" the Grand Jury in that portion of their report in which they refer to the killing of eight or more persons by the undermining of this building say:

"We hold this to be the natural fruits of carelessness on the part of those who should be and are, intelligent, practical, and responsible; and that the parties thereto should be held amenable to the law that provides against criminal neglect."

The Grand Jury have spoken well. They have decided that eight persons have been deprived of life by the criminal neglect of certain parties. It is to be hoped that the matter will not be allowed to rest here, but that these parties, whoever they may be, will be punished for their crime.

The Mexican Situation.

The Call thus disposes of the present situation of affairs in the Mexican Empire:

"Carlotta has fled to Europe in her night-clothes, so to speak, and Max. and Bazaine are now gathering up the pots, kettles, pans, and spoons of the Imperial kitchen"

Now this is a terribly disrespectful manner in which to speak of an Empress. Carlotta has not "fled to Europe in her night-clothes." She has gone for the purpose of trying to prevail upon Louis Napoleon to lend a little more money on her husband's crown, which is already in pawn for a considerable sum. Louis does not like the security, but as he has already advanced more on the article than it will ever prove to be worth, is willing to afford Max. an opportunity of paying his debt. The evacuation of Mexico and the restoration of the Republic is only a matter of time. Probably two more leading articles on this subject in the Morning Call will bring about this much-to-be-desired event.

Swill-Milk.

Frank Leslie's Illustrated Newspaper increased its circulation by many thousands of copies by agitating the subject of "swill-milk." The Bulletin of this city publishes an article every other day, informing the public that there is not a drop of wholesome milk to be obtained in this city. We hope that the Bulletin's statements are exaggerations of the facts. If it be really true that the majority of the cows which supply San Francisco with milk are fed on the refuse from distilleries; if it be true that much of the mortality among infants is caused by unwholesome milk, then, indeed, this subject cannot be too much agitated. The Bulletin does not, however, appear to perfectly understand the proper method to manufacture a strong sentiment of disgust in the community against milk produced from cows fed on the refuse of distilleries. It has not adopted a sufficiently sensational style. This is the sort of thing:

"ANOTHER DRUNKEN COW.—Another of the unhappy quadrupeds which are fed by degraded dairymen on distillery refuse, was seen in a state of disgusting intoxication yesterday."

Then again:

"INTOXICATING MILK.—There is no doubt but that the milk produced by cows which have been fed on distillery refuse is intoxicating. Three babies, which were being brought up on the bottle, died last week from a disease which presented all the symptoms of delirium tremens."

This sort of thing, published daily, would very soon create a panic, and the Temperance League would lend their powerful influence to suppress all cows fed upon such intoxicating food as distillery refuse.

A Model Advertisement.

In the fourth column, second page of Wednesday evening's Bulletin appeared the following "new" advertisement:

FURNISHED HOUSE WANTED—By a family who has no children with gas; water and bath in house, and not more than fifteen minutes walk from the Plaza by a responsible party. Address "William," Bulletin office.

Will "William" please inform us how many children without gas said family is blessed withal, and what distance, according to ordinary measurement, is indicated by the phrase "fifteen minutes walk from the Plaza by a responsible party;" furthermore, what the precise difference may be by statute measurement between "fifteen minutes walk from the Plaza by a responsible party," and the same amount of "walk" by an irresponsible party. Upon receiving satisfactory information upon these important points, we shall be able to inform "William" whether he can have our cottage.

Poetry.

Some persons firmly believe that a number of lines which begin with a capital letter at one end and rhyme at the other, constitute poetry. Such people cannot imagine it possible that, while they are reading what appears to their eyes simple prose, some beautiful poetic image is being impressed on their minds. Poetry is allegory By it a picture having a deep and subtle meaning is often photographed on the mind. which, if presented in prosaic and material manner, could not reach the inner consciousness. In this, which might perhaps be termed "prose poetry," the American Flag excells. What can be more beautiful than the following picture of the President of the United States, the chosen leader of this great people?

"PRESIDENT JOHNSON might be pictured in the similitude of an immense equatorial gorilla, sitting cross-legged, ripping out the delicate and compact stitching of a skillful seamstress, which he attempts to reconstruct with a sail-needle and a fishing-line."

Sharp Practise.

That extremely liberal association, entitled the "Omnibus Railroad Company," have announced that on and after Thursday, September 6th, 1866, the price of their car tickets will be at the rate of four for a quarter. Thus we see the liberal Omnibus Railroad Company is ahead of all the other companies in lowering its fare, after learning that the other companies intended doing so. More than this: to express its abhorrence of the illiberal policy pursued by the other railroad companies, it has positively decided that it will not receive their tickets for fares; thus totally ignoring all thoughts of public convenience, and forcing every chance patron of the Omnibus line to buy a quarter's worth of tickets, good for that line only.

The three other companies reduced their fare yesterday, a little earlier than intended, in consequence of the smart action of the Omnibus Company in forstalling them; and will continue to oblige the public by accepting each others tickets on any of their routes. But in self-defence they will have to refuse the Omnibus Railroad tickets, as that liberal company has tabooed them outside of the boundaries of their own cars.

The Chief (of Police) Consideration.

P. J. White, one of the candidates for the office of Chief of Police, is likely to be supported extensively on humanitarian principles. Mr. White has, as everyone knows, a large provision store on Front street. The police have been forbidden of late to give poor, homeless wanderers bed and breakfast in the Station House. Mr. White, it is confidently expected, will go in for square meals for the lodgers in the city mansions, and his friends have adopted the war cry of "P. J. White and good provisions!"

EDUCATION.—The aim of education should be to teach us rather how to think than what to think—rather to improve our minds so as to make us think for ourselves, than to load the memory with the thoughts of other men.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petalnma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petalnma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

DR. HUMPHREYS'

Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so barmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. Tbey have received the bigbest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	fants.....	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis.....	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Billious Stomach.....	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles. blind or bleeding.....	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing.....	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Eularged Glands, Swell-
	ings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness.....	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions....	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel.....	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker.....	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods. even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life.....$1.	00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of tbe above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has npened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House. Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will findi Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can he had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR

COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH,

CONSUMPTION,

And all Diseases of the

CHEST AND LUNGS

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
y19 1m SAN FRANCISCO.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON TUESDAY, - - - SEPT. 25,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

CALIFORNIA

Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar23 B M. HARTSHORNE, President.

W. E. GOLDSMITH,

Practical Card and Seal Engraver,

AND PLATE PRINTER,

No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.
au25-3m.

NEW DRY GOODS!

FALL IMPORTATION, 1866,

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

WILL EXHIBIT AT

THEIR RETAIL STORE,

ON

Monday, - - - August 20th,

A FULL AND COMPLETE STOCK OF Splendid Dress Goods!

CONSISTING OF

SILKS—

Rich Moire Antiqne, Watered, Chine, Brocade, Plaid, Striped and Plain—all in new and elegant designs and colors.
Black Silks from the celebrated manufactories of "Bonnet's," "Bischoff's," and "Ponson's," of Lyons, France.
Poplin of superior make in Irish and French —in all colors.
Empress Cloth—in all colors.
Plaid, Striped and Plain Poplinets and Cashmeres.
Merinos, De Laines, Prints, Ginghams.
Laces and Embroideries of every description.
Hosiery for Ladies, Gentlemen and Children.
Shawls—in India and French Cashmere, Paisley, Broche and Woolen.
Cloaks, Basques, Saques and Talmas—made to order in the most fashionable styles.

KID GLOVES—

1500 dozen in all colors and sizes, from the manufactories of Alexandre and Preville, of Paris.

ALSO AT

GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

THE FOLLOWING DESCRIBED GOODS, ALL OF WHICH HAVE JUST BEEN LANDED, AND ARE

Warrented of Superior Quality.

COTTONS—

1000 pieces Brown Cottons, from 4-4 to 10-4.
1000 pcs 8-4, 9-4 and 10-4 Cotton Sheetings.
200 pieces New York Mills Shirtings.
300 pieces Wamsutta Shirtings.
500 pieces White Rock Shirtings.
400 pieces Lonsdale Shirtings.
700 ps Masonville and Williamsv'le Shirt'gs.
600 pairs of Lace Curtains.

LINENS—

500 pieces Super Shirting Linens.
200 pieces Superior Sheeting Linens, in 8-4, 9-4, 10-4, 11-4, and 12-4.
200 pieces Barnsley and Scotch Table Damask, of superior quality.
1000 Table Cloth, from 8-4 to 10-4.
800 dozen Table Napkins—all sizes.
1500 doz Towels, suitable for the Bath, Chamber and Kitchen.

WOOLENS—

1000 pairs Blankets, in 6-4, 8-4, 10-4 & 12-4.
500 pieces Flannels of every description.

CLOTHS FOR MEN AND BOYS' WEAR.

1000 Marseilles and American Quilts.

9 Montgomery Street,

LICK HOUSE.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,

NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.
au 25

CHILION BEACH,

Bookseller and Stationer,

NO. 34 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Opposite the Lick House,

Paper Stamped with Initials, plain and colored, to border. All the New Books received by every steamer from New York. au25 3m

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

MARY SMITH, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, be awarded to Plaintiff, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled. WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney, 535 Clay street.
je30 3m

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that in pursuance of the order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California, made on the 26th day of July, 1866, in the matter of the estate of Andrew Robeson, deceased, the undersigned, administrator with the will annexed of said deceased, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, in two parcels, subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Tuesday, the 11th day of September, 1866, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the counting room of Aldrich & Merrill, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county, all the right, title and interest of said Andrew Robeson, deceased, at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has, by operation of law or otherwise acquired, other than or in addition to that of said deceased at the time of his death, in and to all those certain two lots of land situated in said city and county and described as follows, viz: 1st. Commencing at a point on the west side of Mason street, 77 1-2 feet northerly from the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets; thence running northerly along said side of Mason street 60 feet; thence at a right angle westerly 77 1-2 feet; thence at a right angle southerly 60 feet; and thence at a right angle easterly 77 1-2 feet to the point of beginning. 2d Commencing at a point on the north line of Ellis street, 117 1-2 feet westerly from the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets; running thence westerly along Ellis street 20 feet; thence at a right angle northerly 60 feet, thence at a right angle easterly 20 feet; and thence at a right angle southerly 60 feet to the place of beginning. And said administrator will receive offers or bids for said property from this date till said 11th day of September, 1866, at 12 o'clock noon, at said counting room of Aldrich & Merrill, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county. EDWARD F. STONE,
Administrator with the will annexed of Andrew Robeson, deceased.
San Francisco, August 11th, 1866. null td

IN THE PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of GEORGE D. HANSEN, deceased.

Order to show cause why order of distribution should not be made.

On reading and filing the petition of CHRISTIAN KIRK, the Executor of the estate of GEORGE D. HANSEN, deceased, setting forth that he has filed his final account of his administration of the estate of said deceased, in this Court, and that the same has been duly settled and allowed; that all the debts and expenses of administration have been duly paid; and that a portion of said estate remains to be distributed to the heir and devisee of said deceased, and praying among other things for an order of distribution of the residue of said estate among the persons entitled:

IT IS ORDERED, That all persons interested in the estate of the said George D. Hansen, deceased, be and appear before the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, at the court room of said Court, in the City Hall in said city and county, on Wednesday, the fifth day of September, A. D. 1866, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order of distribution should not be made of the residue of said estate to the heir and devisee of the said George D. Hansen, deceased, according to law;

It is further ordered, That a copy of this order be published for four successive weeks, before the said 5th day of September, A. D. 1866, in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in the said city and county.

M. C. BLAKE, Probate Judge.
Dated, San Francisco, August 3d, 1866. 4w

PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors

It appearing to this court from the petition this day presented and filed by Robert L. Harris, the guardian of the estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors, praying for an order of sale of the real estate belonging to his said wards, that it would be beneficial to the said wards that such real estate should be sold at private sale.

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said wards, and all persons interested in said estate, appear before this court at the court room thereof, at the court house, in the city and county of San Francisco, on Monday the 10th day of September, 1866, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least three successive weeks before said hearing of said petition in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

Dated August 10th, A. D, 1866. M. C. BLAKE, null 4t Probate Judge.

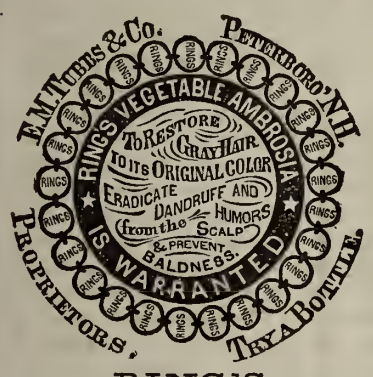
NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—Estate of WILLIAM MACMICHAEL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, administrator with the will annexed, of the above named estate, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against William MacMichael, deceased, to exhibit the same, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at his place of business, No 12 Post street, Masonic Temple, in the city and county of San Francisco.

San Francisco, August 18, 1866.



THEODORE L. SCHELL,
Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of William McMichael, deceased.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Administrator. 5t

QUINCY HALL,

545, 547, 549 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE LARGEST CLOTHING EMPORIUM in California. The daily sales from the establishment is a sufficient guarantee that the prices are less than those of any other house on the Pacific coast. Here you also find clothing of the best of California Cloth, both for Wholesale and Retail trade. Also, particular attention paid to making up fine clothing to order. jy21

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA

IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale and retail, by

JOHN F. SNOW,

Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,
je23 San Francisco.

MEAGHER, TAAFE & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS OF

DRY GOODS, LINENS,
FURNISHING GOODS,
YANKEE NOTIONS,
FANCY GOODS, ETC.

AGENTS FOR THE

MOUNT VERON DUCK COMPANY

NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.

RETAIL HOUSE, - - - NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,
jy21-3m Lick House.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL

AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,

On Bush-st., adjoinin Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soriees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. au5-3m

FURNITURE

AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

HEUSTON,

HASTINGS

& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE

STOCK OF

CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT

REDUCED PRICES.

je17-3m

ELECTION PROCLAMATION.

FOR THE MUNICIPAL ELECTION.

PUBLIC NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that the Municipal Election in and for the City and County of San Francisco, will be held on WEDNESDAY, September 5th, 1866; and the qualified voters of said city and county are hereby called upon to meet in their respective districts for the purpose of electing the following-named officers at said election, to wit:

Attorney and Counsellor
Auditor.
Tax Collector.
Public Administrator.
Superintendent of Pub Streets, Highways, and Squres.
Chief of Police.

One Supervisor and one School Director in each of the following Districts: First, Third, Fifth, Seventh, Ninth, and Eleventh, for the full term.

Also, one Supervisor in the Eighth District for an unexpired term.

Witness my hand and the seal of the city and county of San Francisco, this fourteenth day of August, [SEAL.] 1866.

H. P. COON, Mayor.

Attest: CHAS. L. WIGGIN, Clerk. au18

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street. - - - Petaluma.
mar24-6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late ea. INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

C. WIEDERHOLD & CO.'S

Piano Warerooms,

685 Market street, corner of Third,

WILL BE OPEN ON AND after SATURDAY, Aug. 25th, EVENINGS, till 8 o'clock.

SOLE AGENTS FOR

J. B. DUNHAM'S,

F. C. LIGHTE & CO.'S,

GEO. STECK & CO.'S, and

ERNEST GABLER'S

CELEBRATED PIANOS.

We will be in constant receipt of the above fine Pianos, which we warrant equal to any imported, and ask our friends and the public to call and examine for themselves. au25-3m

THE Accidental Insurance Co,

OF NEW YORK,

ISSUES POLICIES INSURING AGAINST INJURIES OF all kinds, and death resulting from accident.

In case death does not result from the injury, the insured receives a weekly compensation as long as he is disabled (not to exceed twenty-six weeks.)

Policy.	Premium.	Weekly Compensation.
$1,000	$ 5 00	$ 5 00
$2,000	$10 00	$10 00
$5,000	$25 00	$25 00
$10,000	$50 00	$50 00

SEA VOYAGE POLICIES,

Covering risk to New York, cost $2 per $1,000.

☞ No Medical Examination required.

Life Insurance.

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
HARTFORD, CONN.

For Policies, or further information, apply to

A. D. SMITH & CO., Agents,

Northwest corner Montgomery and Secramento streets
au4 3m

GRAND OPENING

OF THE

Circassian Saloon,

Corner of Dupont and Pacific streets,

(Formerly "Diana Saloon,")

ON SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1866.

NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT!—Magic and Gymnastic Feats, free of charge.

☞ The best of WINES, LIQUORS, LUNCH, and CIGARS always on hand.

N. B. Fine Vocal Music, Polite Waiters, etc.
au11 1m

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

je30-3m

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

NOS. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,
je16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

T. RODGERS JOHNSON,

ODD FELLOWS' HALL, 329 Montgomery street,
je30 3m San Francisco.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work o all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
je10 3m

GOOD NEWS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Teeth Extracted Without Pain

BY THE

ANÆSTHETIC SPRAY PRODUCER,

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

Partial to a full Upper Set of Teeth, for from $10 to $25, as usual. Filling with best Cement, $1; with Gold, from $1 to $3. All work warranted.

Office, 139 Fourth street, near Howard.
au4-3m J. P. CROWELL, Dentist.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

je17-3m

YANKEE NOTIONS

AND

FANCY GOODS!

MERCHANTS wanting Goods in this line should not fail to examine our stock, which is new and attractive, before buying elsewhere.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
jy21-3m Battery street, near Pine.

SKETCH OF ERNEST RENAN.

M. RENAN, author of the "Life of Jesus and the Apostles," was born in 1823. The Jesuits took him under their protection, and gave him a place in their school. He showed himself a slow but brilliant scholar. He was long in acquiring anything, but when it was acquired it was thoroughly mastered and assimilated. He not only knew what he had learned, but he polished it with his own intellect and made it shine. The reports periodically addressed to Paris upon the young men in the training school, directed attention to young Renan as a Levite destined to reflect the greatest honor on the church. Abbe Dupanloup (now the eminent Bishop of Orleans) was always on the watch to discover young men who promised to bring talents to the service of religion, and he read these reports with most careful attention. Struck by the constant commendations bestowed on young Renan he made him come up to Paris, where he could have him under his own eye. The abbe soon loved the young Levite with the tenderest friendship, and reckoned upon his attaining the highest honors of the church. When young Renan had stayed the proper time at the training school of St. Nicholas du Chardonnet, the abbe transferred him to St. Sulpice's School. It was while he was at St. Sulpice's School that Mons. Renan, after profound studies, came to the conclusion that the religion which he was to teach, and whose offices he was to celebrate, was radically false. He struggled long against this conclusion. Abbe Dupanloup and all the professors tried to argue with him, hoping to convince him of error. Ernest Renan turned his back on the sanctuary, and sallied forth from the quiet haven of St. Sulpice's Seminary into the great desert of Paris, alone, unfriended.

The moment he quitted St. Sulpice's Seminary he went to a teacher's office and got an usher's place in a small boarding school. Here his salary was table and lodgings—no money; but all his time was not taken up by the duties of usher. He could attend to lectures at the Sorbonne, and visit the great public libraries. He worked hard. When the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres offered a prize for a dictionary of the Semitic languages, he won it; and when it offered a prize for an essay on the study of Greek during the Middle Ages, he secured it too.

These academical successes introduced him to learned society in Paris, and four years after he quitted the seminary he resigned his place of usher to go to Italy, to make researches for the Academy of Inscriptions and Belles Lettres. On his return he was appointed as aid to the maker of catalogues of manuscripts in the Imperial Library, on the meagre salary of $300 a year. He soon received a permanent appointment at the library with a salary of $500 a year, which petty income was increased by the money received for his contributions to the Revue des Deux de Mondes and Journal des Debate, and for the sale of his work entitled "Philosophical Essays." As soon as his revenues increased, he married the daughter of Henri Sheffer—the nice of Ary Sheffer—and he was a happy man. He had now begun to turn his attention to his "History of the Origin of Christianity." The French Government gave him, in 1860, a mission of exploration in ancient Phœnicia, which was then unusually open to French travellers, for the French army then occupied the country. Upon his return to Paris he was appointed Professor of Hebrew at the College of France. The attacks he made on religion, even in his first lecture, raised so much indignation throughout France, that the Government was obliged by the pressure of public opinion to suspend his lectures. He continued in possession of the chair for two and a half years. The Government hoped he would resign, and tried to persuade him to do so. He refused, and was dismissed after the publication of the first volume of his "History of the Origin of Christianity." The Government, at one time, thought seriously of seizing this work, but was prevailed upon to keep aloof. You know how it sold. It is said Mons. Renan received $30,000 copyright from the sale of this one volume, and the demand it created for his other works put another $10,000 into his pocket. The Government offered him his old place at the Imperial Library, (where, I had forgotten to mention, a series of promotions had raised him to a place with a salary of $1,000 a year), but he declined to accept it. He devoted himself sedulously to the second volume of his "History of the Origin of Christianity," and before sending it to the press he visited the scenes where apostles (to whose career it is dedicated) lived and labored. He was absent twelve or eighteen months. His wife went everywhere with him. He set to work on the second volume on his return, and it was seven months going through the press, so numerous were the corrections he made; it is said he required eight proof sheets of every page before the work reached what he thought the utmost pitch of perfection which he could give it. He has a most tenacious memory, especially for words. He knows—beside Hebrew, Sanscrit, Greek, Latin and French—English and German thoroughly. You may easily imagine, from what I have said, he is a man of even temper, and quite agreeable. A friend, who met him several times at dinner, told me he was one of the most agreeable men he had ever met. He described the tones of M. Renan's voice and his perfect articulation as fascinating. I should have thought the monotonous tone of M. Renan's voice in conversation would have fatigued one in the course of several hours. My friend told me my supposition was erroneous. M. Renan is not a brilliant talker; at least he is not a brilliant talker after the fashion of M. Villemain or M. Victor Cousin and other brilliant talkers of the day. They shine in their happy bon mots, by their skill in juggling with words and phrases. M. Renan never made—he never so much as stumbled into a mot in all his life. He is intelligent, intellectual, often ironical—never witty. I add, to complete his portrait, he is awkward at all physical exercises. On horseback he is at the complete mercy of the horse; in the water, he has a millstone's alacrity of sinking; he never had a gun his hand. You see this the moment you lay eyes on him. He is short, thick-set, heavy, slow, awkward. He was never touched bodily by the graces, or mentally by grace. He plods, even in our streets, as if he were among furrows; walk he cannot. Whenever I have seen him I have thought he looked much more like a college tutor or head accountant than like an eminent literary man. He has a turn for no amusements. Chess, backgammon, dominoes, cards, he holds in equal aversion. His pastime is a good book, a comfortable chair by a warm fire, after a hearty meal. He has love for and knowledge of art, as he showed by his work on the 14th. His library is both handsome and comfortable. He has several children. They have all been baptized, and with their mother go regularly to church. He spends his summer chiefly at Sevres. The success of his new work will be great. The whole of the first edition (20,000 copies) were exhausted to supply booksellers' orders before it was published. The second edition of 20,000 copies is sold fast. The demand for the first volume ("The Life of Jesus") still continues. It is confidently predicted M. Renan will receive $200,000 at least from his history.

"The Ole Man's Dead, Stranger."—The author tells of a Virginian traveling in the same locality, who, on testing the whisky of his Arkansas host, found it rather raw and unpalatable, and mixed it in the shape of a "mint-julep," which was a novel idea to the Arkansan. The latter, however, was delighted with the new style of drink, indulged in it quite liberally, and learned the method of concocting it. The mournful result is told thus: "The ole man's dead, stranger." The Virginian continued on his journey toward Texas, and in due course of time set out to return. On arriving at the house before mentioned, he concluded he would call and renew his acquaintance with the friendly old host. Accordingly, he rode up to the gate, and seeing one of the boys of the family

The boy, with an air of the most perfect indifference, reslanding near, asked him: "How is the old gentleman, your father, my son?"

plied: "Why, the ole man's dead, stranger."

"Is it possible? How long since?"

"About two weeks, stranger."

"Ah! indeed! Pray, what was the matter with the poor old gentleman, my son?"

"Waal, now, stranger, I'll tell ye what it war. Thar war an old feller from Virginny, he 'com'd along this way last summer, and he jist ups and larns the ole man to drink greens in his licker, and you can bet your life on't it knocked him higher nor a kite."

Upon the Virginian's suggesting to the boy that it might have been possible that the bad quality of the whisky exercised a more deleterious influence upon his father's health than the mint, he replied:

"No, stranger, it war not the whisky, for we've allers used licker in our family, and though it made old mam powerful weak, yet it never phazed ole pop arry time—no, it war the greens, as sure as yer born."—Col. Maury's Army Life.

The Able-bodied Minister.—God provided a body for the soul of Adam, before he sent that soul into the world; and I have learned, if we want a soul to stay in its human body, we must keep the body in good repair. I know some people think that a minister of the Gospel should be as nearly spiritual, in all respects, as possible; and they find their ideals in those unfortunate clergymen, destitute of physical vigor; lean, pale, and ghostly, whose symptoms of dysdepsia they have mistaken for godliness. And I have known a few clergymen, who, falling into the same error, have tried to crucify the flesh by living on short rations; giving the lie to their appetites, when they had eaten exactly four ounces, by calling that a meal.—Rev. L. J. Fletcher.

Ladies can always depend, that for delicacy of touch, and adaptability to nature, Davidson's Circassian Bloom excels all other toilet dressings. And what is more, it renders the skin smooth, soft and delicate. Sold by all Druggists.

Meussdorffer, importer and dealer in Hats, No. 635 Commercial street, will open his styles to-day. Mr. M. has just returned from Europe with the latest style of hats, such as Chapeaux Mechanique, Sadowa, Fontainebleau, Palmerston, etc.

THE EDIBLE BIRD'S NESTS OF CHINA.

NOT only in their ordinary form, or acted upon by the culinary art, are the mosses employed as food; but one of the most admired luxuries of the table in China is the edible bird's nest formed from them. A small swallow, called, from his peculiar instinct in building this sort of habitation, hirendo esculenta, makes his nest from several of these species, and amongst others, it is said, from the Ceylon moss, in the highest and most inaccessible rocks, in deep damp caves. Craufurd tells us that none but those accustomed from childhood to the dangers it offers, can pursue the occupation of collecting the nests; for they are only approachable by a perpendicalar descent of many hundred feet, by ladders of bamboo and ratan, over a sea rolling violently against the rocks. When the mouth of the cave is attained, the perilous task of taking the nests must be performed by torchlight, by penetrating into the recesses of the rock, where the slightest slip would instantly be fatal to the adventurers, who can see nothing below them but the turbulent surf making its way into the chasms of the rocks. The high price given for these delicacies, is, however, a sufficient inducement for the gatherers to follow "this dreadful trade." The nests are formed of a mucilaginous substance; they resemble ill-concocted fibrous isinglass, and are described as of a white color, inclining to red; their thickness little more than that of a silver spoon, and the weight from a quarter to half an ounce. When dry, they are brittle and wrinkled, the size nearly that of a goose's egg. The qualities of the nest vary, according to the situation and extent of the caves in which they are found, and the time at which they are taken; if procured before the eggs have been laid, the nests are of the best kind; if they contain eggs only, they are still valuable; but if the young are in the nest, or have just left it, they are nearly worthless, being dark-colored, streaked with blood, and intermixed with feathers and dirt. After they are procured, they are separated from feathers and dirt, are carefully dried and packed, and are then fit for market. The best sort are sent to Pekin, for the use of the emperor. The labor bestowed to render them fit for the table is enormous; every feather, every stick, or impurity of any kind, is carefully removed, and then, after undergoing many washings and preparations, they are made into a soft delicious jelly; they are likewise served up in broths and soups; they have the reputation of being nutritious, and gently stimulating. The extravagant prices given for these nests by the Chinese render them a most expensive article of diet. The sale has become a monopoly of the government in whose dominions they are found. Meyen, in his Voyage Round the World, states that the Japanese had long ago discovered that these bird's nests are nothing more than softened sea-weed and that they now prepare the substance itself in an artist-like manner.—Dr. Sigmond, on the Ceylon Moss.

Speaking of Baths, it is in order to quote from a letter received per last steamer from a lady, now at the East, in which she says: "I went to Laight street (New York) to try a Turkish Bath; it did not come up to my expectation, by any means. I find no baths like those of Dr. Bourne. These people are behind our [meaning California] age." A New York gentleman who became acquainted with Dr. Bourne's baths while on a visit to San Francisco, on returning to New York writes thus: "In Laight street they have steam baths, and hoping to find the style similar to Dr. Bourne's baths, of your city, I gave them a trial; but such a woful disappointment! for although the place is a Water Cure, I found their baths totally different, being what they term the Turkish bath, and may the Turks live forever to take all of them. Give me those of Dr. Bourne." Such, too, is the feeling of all Californians at the East, who have ever enjoyed Dr. Bourne's baths, and their testimony is uniform and unanimous, that no baths are to be found either at the East, or in Europe or Asia, which compare with them; yet there are many contemptible persons in San Francisco doing all that malignity and falsehood can prompt them to do, to injure, and if possible, destroy them. Base persons, you have both the pity and contempt of Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street.

"The Science of Life, or How to Live, and What to Live For."—This is the title of an interesting and highly useful little book, published by Dr. Beck, of this city. It is especially adapted for the perusal of young men, nevertheless its truthful pages should be read by all, as they contain good, sound, healthy matter which can be easily understood and appreciated by every reader. This work is issued gratuitously on application to the Doctor, or will be sent free to any address on receipt of postage stamp or envelope addressed to Dr. Beck's office, 314 Kearny street, or post office Box 1599.

Dr. Beck is a member of several American and European Universities, and has published numerous works on Anatomy, Medicine, and Surgery His former connection with the principal "Anatomical Museums" of New York, Paris, London etc., combined with his experience in his profession render him a highly desirable person to consult, and we can confidently recommend him to the public.

Pianos.—The house of Knabe & Co cannot now supply its orders while making near fifty pianos per week. Their small factory has changed to an establishment which is certainly one of the largest in the United States. Their main building is five stories high, 95 feet front by 45 feet deep; the other is four stories, 110 feet by 30. Besides these there are two wings each 30 by 50 feet, and a large engine, lumber, and storage-houses. The whole manufactory is supplied by a vast collection of labor-saving machinery, some of which belongs exclusively, by right of invention, to the firm of Knabe & Co. Messrs. Frisbee & Scott, No. 3 Montgomery street, are sole agents for these pianos.—New York Tribune.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold hy all dealers, at $1.00 in large hottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for and take noue hut LYON'S, hearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot he otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervation, listlessuess, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaints they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymeu, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedeutary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met hy the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spavin, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Strains, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westhrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold hy all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky, and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off nd turning gray, and promotes its growth upon prematurely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.

E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Hearthurn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morhus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is reqnired. Its carefnl preparatieu and entire purity make it a cheap and reliahle article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no othe c7m

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his paymeuts of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace iu the paymeut of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is hut the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, hut without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not hy defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must he gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

PHOTOGRAPHY.—The pictures taken in this city are far superior to those taken in the East and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much hetter pictures look here than at home. The hest gallery to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high huildings surrounding it. The NEW YORK, on the east side of Third street, a few doors helow Market, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgamery street galleries.

ALL GOOD JUDGES OF PIANOS agree that Frishee & Scott have the finest and largest stock of Pianos in this city. They are agents of the celehrated firms of Calenherg & Vaupel, of New York, and Knahe & Co., Baltimore. There is certainly not an instrument equal to those imported hy them. Mr. Gusvav A. Scott pays, also, particular attention to having their stock of foreign and American sheet music equal to any New York store. They keep at No. 3 Montgomery street, Masonic Temple.

LADIES, ATTENTION!—Direct Importation from Paris.—Please recollect that there is only one Shawl House in California, J. D. Rohert. 119 and 121 Montgomery street, which receives direct, Genuine Square and Long Broche Cashmere Shawls of every description and price, from Rohert, Gosselin & Son, manufacturers in Paris. Don't make a mistake.

N. B.—Cloaks, Basques, Zouaves and Dresses of every description made to order in the latest style. Prices as cheap as possible.

JACOB SHEW & Co., No. 315 Montgomery street, near Pine, take First-Class Photographs, of all kinds, at the lowest scale of prices adopted hy the Associated Photographers. Photographs retouched in the highest style of the art.

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold hy us are warranted to he manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to he equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death he the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilhlains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallihle. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per hox.

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. D. D., Pastor Fourth Universaiist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," hesides heing a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teetb.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold hy all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,

je2 4m NEW YORK.

AYER'S

Cathartic Pills,

ARE THE MOST PERFECT purgative which we are able to produce, or which we think has ever yet been made by anybody. Their effects have abundantly shown to the community how much they excel the ordinary medicines in use. They are safe and pleasant to take, hut powerful to cure. Their penetrating properties stimulate the vital activities of the body, remove the obstructions of its organs, purify the blood, and expel disease. They purge out the foul humors which breed and grow distemper, stimulate sluggish or disordered organs into their natural action, and impart a healthy tone with strength to the whole system. Not only do they cure the everyday complaints of everybody, hut also formidable and dangerous diseases. While they produce powerful effects, they are at the same time, in diminished doses, the safest and hest physic that can be employed for children. Being sugar-coated, they are pleasant to take; and, heing purely vegetable, are free from any risk of harm. Cures have heen made which surpass belief, were they not substantiated hy men of such exalted position and character, as to forhid the suspicion of untruth. Many eminent clergymen and physicians have lent their names to certify to the public the reliability of our remedies, while others have sent us the assurance of their conviction that our Preparations comtribute immensely to the relief of our afflicted, suffering fellow men.

The Agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis our American Almanac, containing directions for the use and certificates of their cures, of the following complaints.

Costiveness, Billious Complaints, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Hearthurn, Headache arising from foul stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Morhid Inaction of the Bowels and pain arising therefrom, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, all Diseases which require an evacuant medicine. They also, by purifying the hlood and stimulating the system, cure many complaints which it would not he supposed they could reach, such as Deafness, Partial Blindness, Neuralgia and Nervous Irritability, Derangements of the Liver and Kidneys, Gout, and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the hody, or obstruction of its functions.

Do not he put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations which they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S and take no others. The sick want the hest aid there is for them, and they should have it.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco, and all Dealers.
s1-2m

THE CALIFORNIAN'S

SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Wentworth, Hohart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomh, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co.. 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyce & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine.
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Bosiness College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st.

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 Californin street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street,

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pin

LADIES' BIJOUTEERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenhlatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morsbead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, helow Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N.E. cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s. 527 Washington, ahove the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza. 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,

THE

Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,

ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

PACIFIC
BUSINESS COLLEGE,
751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

AN INSTITUTION designed to prepare boys, young and middle-aged men for the active duties of business in the shortest time possible and at the least expense. For "COLLEGE REVIEW," giving information, call at the College, or address E. P. HEALD, President.
au11 3m

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO
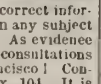
OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.
ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, - -	11,522,500
Annual Income, - - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,
Cor. Sansome and California streets, San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.
Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.
Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.
mediately on adjustment.
WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

THE



AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM
AT THE
State Fair of California,
The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING MACHINE within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,
General Agent,
111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE FLORENCE
SEWING MACHINE
RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.
my10-3m

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,
PROF. COHEN,
530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. je15 3m

EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND
IN USE!

THE ORIGINAL P. P. STEWART'S FUEL SAVING
Air-Tight Cooking Stoves,
FOR WOOD OR COAL.

IMPROVED IN 1861;
WITH NEW AND EXTRA LARGE FLUES, AND BY THE ADDITION OF THE CELEBRATED PATENT DOUBLE-SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.

Attention is Invited to the following Points of Superiority:

1. DURABILITY.—Lasting, with proper care, at least twenty years. Stoves are now in use that were set up in 1833.
2. MANUFACTURE.—Every portion of the Stove is thoroughly constructed. Each Stove is submitted to a critical test, and none leave our works unless completely and perfectly finished.
3. CAPACITY.—Baking, Boiling, Roasting, and all other culinary operations performed at the same time.
4. ECONOMY.—Saving the cost of the Stove in one year in the cost of fuel.
5. VENTILATION OF OVEN.—In the Stewart Stove alone, the front doors open directly into the oven, (protected by letters patent) securing a direct draft through the top of the oven by means of perforated holes in the doors and back flues. It will be borne in mind that, as the heated air always rises, this method of ventilation is the only one of any value whatever.
6. ENTIRE CONTROL OF HEAT.—The heat generated by the Stove may be held therein and used or thrown into the room at pleasure.
7. THE DOUBLE SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.—By which a compressing and inverting action of heat is obtained, and the oven more evenly and efficiently heated than by any other known invention.
9. HOT WATER RESERVOIR AND WARMING CLOSET.—Both useful and convenient, supplied by the waste heat and without extra fuel.
10. WATER BACK.—An arrangement for supplying hot water for the bath-room equal to any range.

Beware of numerous imitations in the market, many of which resemble the "Stewart" only in appearance, and none of them possess any of its peculiar qualities.

See that the name of P. P. STEWART is on each Stove. None other genuine.

For sale by CALEB M. SICKLER,
422 Kearny street,
Between California and Pike, San Francisco.
Repairs for Stewart's Stoves constantly on hand.
au25-4m

A CARD.

Great Sale of Fine Clothing.

OUR WHOLE STOCK OF FINE CLOTHING and Gents' Furnishing Goods, for the next
THIRTY DAYS,
At Prices that Challenge Competition.

IT MUST BE SOLD, TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,
Corner Bush and Montgomery streets, and corner Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.
au4

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,
San Francisco, Cal.

THE FOURTH ANNUAL SESSION of the above Institution commenced July 30th, 1866.

The age for admission is from seven to fifteen years. For those more than fifteen years of age, it will be necessary to have testimonials of good character from respectable parties.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25
No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance; also, such sum to be deposited as will be sufficient to pay the traveling expenses of the student to his place of residence, and other contingent expenses, such as hooks, clothes, etc.

No Student will be received without such deposit.

The terms are so reduced (less than one-half the usual charges in this State) that the Institution can be conducted only on a rigid cash principle; hence any failure in remitting the Pension will oblige the authorities of the College to charge ten per cent. additional, or forward the student to his parents or guardian.

Though it be a Catholic Institution, yet pupils of all denominations will be admitted, and their religious convictions respected; but, for the sake of uniformity all will be required to be present at the public religious exercises.

Bedding, towels, etc., will be furnished by the Institution, to defray the cost of which ten dollars will be paid, once only, by each pupil, as an entrance fee.

Each pupil is required to be provided with a neat black suit for Sundays, and two other plain suits, three pairs of boots, with sufficient linen, stockings, etc.

Five dollars will also be charged annually for medicines and medical attendance.
au4-1m REV P. J. GREY, President.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY

J. P. BOGARDUS AND C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street,

SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN

TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

OCCIDENTAL
INSURANCE COMPANY,
S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mb26-tf

TRY LE COUNT'S INK.

CORNER OF
Sacramento and Montgomery streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Post Office Address: Lock Box No 1477. je30 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S
Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine,
ap14-1y Agents for Pacific Coast.

MONEY TO LOAN!
MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,
53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, President

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper	$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right	05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand	02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100	05
Every additional $100, or fractional part	05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S.	02
Every additional $100, or fractional part	02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place	10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500	50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels	05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less	50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof	50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office	1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule	25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons	10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50	10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000	25
For every additional $1,000 or fractional part	25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such	25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100	05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y,	25
Certificates, other than specified	05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale	10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof	50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500	1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse	50
Ganger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr.	25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000	1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction.	50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons	5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels	25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500	50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less	01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1	02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof	05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof	05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof	1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon	25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries	10
To receive or collect rents	25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate	1 00
For any other purpose	50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof	50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft,	25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property	02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000	10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for	25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs	25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State	50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid	50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record	50
Warrant of distress—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100	50

TYLER BROTHERS,

NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,

SAN FRANCISCO,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

SCHOOL BOOKS,

STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

BLANK BOOKS,

PORTFOLIOS,

JUVENILE BOOKS,

FANCY ARTICLES,

CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we stamp with

INITIALS,

In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.

je23

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,

Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Capital fully paid in Gold Coin.....$500,000 00
Surplus, April 30, 1866..... 154,824 57

Total Assets.....$654,824 57

Insure against Loss or Damage by Fire, on Stores, Dwellings, Merchandise, Vessels and Cargoes in Port, and other insurable property.

$50,000 is the largest amount taken on any one risk. This Company reinsures whenever the risks are deemed too large for the locality.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY of STOCKHOLDERS

Under the Constitution and Statutes of California.

ALL LOSSES PAID PROMPTLY IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

W. B. BOURN, President.
D. J. STAPLES, Vice President.
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary. au17 3m

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY.

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order. au15

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,

mar24-6m Mai street Petaluma.

OCCIDENTAL

HOMESTEAD

Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

CAPITAL STOCK, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

THIS ASSOCIATION was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 409, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth. The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the TURK street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,
Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,
my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.
ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

MARKET STREET RAILROAD

CHANGE OF TIME TABLE.

ON AND AFTER AUGUST 1, 1865, Trains will start from the City and the Mission every hour: instead of every forty minutes, as heretofore.

Trains from the City will start at the odd hour, commencing at 6:30 A. M. and every hour thereafter until 11:30 P. M.

mh25 F. McCOPPIN, Superintendent

STOP THAT COUGHING.

SOME OF YOU CAN'T, AND WE PITY YOU. You have tried every remedy but the ONE destined, by its intrinsic merit, to supersede all similar preparations. It is not surprising you should be reluctant to try something else after the many experiments you have made of trashy compounds foisted on the public as a certain cure. but

NEWELL'S

PULMONARY SYRUP

is really the VERY BEST remedy ever compounded for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Consumption. Thousands of people in California and Oregon have been already benefited by the surprising curative powers of

NEWELL'S PULMONARY SYRUP,

and with one accord give it their unqualified approbation. We now address ourselves to all who are unacquainted with this, the greatest Panacea of the age, for the healing of all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, assuring you that has cured thousands, and it will cure you if you try it. This invaluable medicine is pleasant to the taste, soothing, healing and strengthening in its effects; entirely free from all poisonous or deleterious drugs, and perfectly harmless under all circumstances.

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

Certificates from many prominent citizens of San Francisco accompany every bottle of

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

REDINGTON'S

Flavoring Extract

ARE MADE FROM FRESH FRUITS. Each bottle holds twice as much as any other brand in the market, consequently they are the cheapest and the best. USE NO OTHER.

REDINGTON & CO.,
Agents for the Pacific Coast.

MARTHA WASHINGTON

HAIR RESTORER.

THIS IS A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY, and stands above comparison with any other article for the Hair ever brought before the public.

A PERFECT

Hair Restorer AND Hair Dresser

BOTH COMBINED IN ONE.

First—It is not a Dye.
Second—Will not Color the Skin.
Third—Will restore Gray Hair to a beautiful Black, Brown, Auburn, or whatever might have been its original color, and cause it to assume its former beauty.
Fourth—Will cure all Humors and Diseases of the Scalp.
Fifth—Will remove Dandruff and Scurf from the head, and keep the hair moist and silk like in its appearance as in youthful days.
Sixth—Will promote a healthy growth.
Seventh—Will prevent it from falling off, and cause it to grow on bald heads where there is life and vitality at the roots, but where these are gone there is no hope of success.
Eighth—The best testimony that can be given will be found inside of each bottle.

Warranted to do all we claim for it, or the money refunded after using two bottles. Try it and be convinced.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Price.....One Dollar.

SIMONDS & CO., Proprietors,
Fitzwilliam, N. H.
REDINGTON & CO., Agents,
San Francisco.

REDINGTON & CO.'S

Essence of Jamaica Ginger.

THIS VALUABLE PREPARATION, containing in a highly concentrated form all the properties of the Jamaica Ginger, has become one of the most popular domestic remedies for all diseases of the stomach and digestive organs.

As a tonic it will be found invaluable to all persons recovering from debility, whether produced by fever or otherwise, for whilst it imparts to the system all the glow and vigor that can be produced by wine or brandy, it is entirely free from the reactionary effects that follow the use of spirits of any kind.

It is also an excellent remedy for females who suffer from difficult menstruation, giving almost immediate relief to the spasms that so frequently accompany that period.

It gives immediate relief to Nausea, caused by riding in a railroad car, or by sea sickness, or other causes.

It is also valuable as an external application for Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, etc.

REDINGTON & CO.,
au4 6m Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE - - - - - - - - PROPRIETOR.
C. L. GRAVES - - - - - - - STAGE MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - - TREASURER.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON AND EVENING,
The Farce of
TOMMY AND SALLY.

Lady Don, as.....Sally
Harry Courtaine, as.....Tommy With Songs, Duets, etc.

To conclude with another new Burlesque, never before acted here, entitled MAZOURKA;
OR,
THE STICK, THE POLE, AND THE TARTAR

ON EONDAY AND TUESDAY, SEPT. 3d & 4th, ROB ROY,
With all the Original Music.
Lady Don, as.....Francis Osbaldistou
To conclude with MAZOURKA.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra,	$1 00
Reserved seats,	50c. extra
Parquet,	50
Upper Circle,	25

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,
Montgomery street.

Bianchi's Grand Italian Opera Troupe.

General Director.....J. P. Crowly
Treasurer.....A. Birrell

BENEFIT OF THE HEBREW LADIES' BENEVOLENT SOCIETY!
SATURDAY EVENING.....SEPT. 1,
Will be presented Donizettis Opera of Lucrecia di Lammermoor.

Lucia.....Signorina Elvira Brambilla
Edgardo.....Signor Morley
Enrico.....Signor Maneusi
Raimondo.....Signor Stanislaus Milleri

MONDAY—First Night of Donizetti's Graud Tragic Opera of BELISARIO,
In which Miss E. C. BRANNAN will make her debut.

CONDUCTOR.....MR. RUDOLPH HEROLD
Sceuery by Mr. Rogers. Costumes by Mrs Taylor.

Regular Subscription Nights, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.
Dress Circle, Orchestra and Parquette.....$1 00
Reserved seats, 50 cents extra.
Gallery.....50

☞ The Box Office is open from 9 A. M. for the securing of reserved seats for season tickets.

THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF NEW YORK,

AS GOOD A COMPANY AS ANY IN THE UNITED STATES!

INSURANCE on Lives on all plans and on as favorable terms as any other safe company. No Extra Premiums for Traveling to and from the East.

ACCUMULATED FUND.....$2,500,000

R. L. & F. OGDEN,
General Agents for Pacific Coast and Territories,
S. E. corner California and Montgomery sts.

Accidantal Insurance!

UNITED STATES CASUALTY INSURANCE CO.

Insurance against all kinds of ACCIDENTS. The Only Mutual Company in America.

Fifty Dollars per annum insures your life against death by accident for $10,000 for one year, and gives you $50 if disabled.

Five Dollars per annum insures you for $1,000 and $5 per week compensation.

Insurance for any period, or for a trip or voyage.

RATES as low as any good Company can afford.

R. L. &. F. OGDEN,
S. E. corner of California and Montgomery streets,
sl 3m General Agents for Pacific Coast.

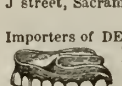
NATURE UNVEILED,
AT THE
PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

R. H. McDONALD. J. C. SPENCER.

R. H. McDONALD & CO., IMPORTING

Wholesale Druggists,
J STREET, SACRAMENTO,
AND
CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

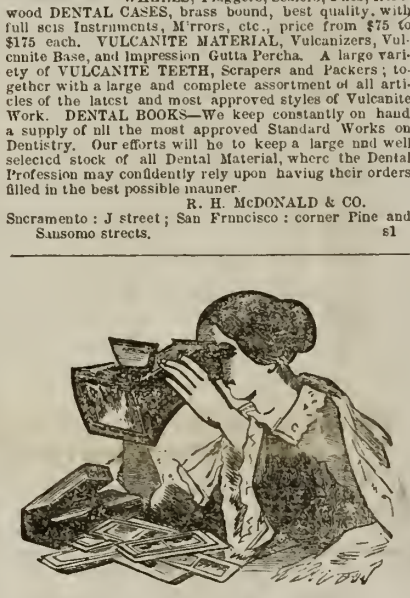
We respectfully beg leave to inform our customers and the public generally, that we have opened a House in the city of San Francisco, where we will be pleased to see as many of our old friends and customers as can make it convenient to call upon us. We shall keep at both places a large and well selected Stock of



DRUGS AND MEDICINES, SURGICAL INSTRUMENTS, DENTAL GOODS, FANCY ARTICLES, BRUSHES AND COMBS, SHOULDER AND BODY BRACES, LADIES' BANDAGES AND SUPPORTERS, GUM ELASTIC STOCKINGS, TRUSSES, PAINTS AND OILS, PATENT MEDICINES, HERBS AND EXTRACTS, BREWERS' AND SODA STOCK, CORKS, (large variety,) ASSAYERS' MATERIAL, BURNING OILS AND FLUIDS, PLASTER PARIS, MARBLE DUST,

Together with a large and complete assortment of all Goods kept in a well supplied Wholesale Drug Store.

We respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our Stock before purchasing elsewhere.



R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Sacramento and San Francisco.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
IMPORTING WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS,
J street, Sacramento, and corner Pine and Sansome sts., San Francisco,

Importers of DENTAL AND SURGICAL INSTRUMENTS, TEETH, GOLD FOIL, FORCEPS of all kinds, DENTAL CHAIRS, Hand and Foot LATHES, Brush, Cotton, and Corundum WHEELS, Pluggers, Scalers, Files, Rosewood DENTAL CASES, brass bound, best quality, with full sets Instruments, Mirrors, etc., price from $75 to $175 each. VULCANITE MATERIAL, Vulcanizers, Vulcanite Base, and Impression Gutta Percha. A large variety of VULCANITE TEETH, Scrapers and Packers; together with a large and complete assortment of all articles of the latest and most approved styles of Vulcanite Work. DENTAL BOOKS—We keep constantly on hand a supply of all the most approved Standard Works on Dentistry. Our efforts will be to keep a large and well selected stock of all Dental Material, where the Dental Profession may confidently rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.
Sacramento: J street; San Francisco: corner Pine and Sansomo streets. s1

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS OF California Scenery!

A Series of over
ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!
Illustrating the different Processes of MINING, the MAMMOTH TREES OF CALAVERAS COUNTY, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley. Views of the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast—PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE, and published by LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,
OPTICIANS,
317 and 319 Montgomery street, San Francisco.
N. B—Catalogues containing a complete list of Views sent to any part of the world, free of postage. s1-1m

MASON & HAMLIN'S

CELEBRATED CABINET ORGANS.
New styles, with Automatic Bellows Swell, at warerooms of agent.
A. KOHLER,
sl 3m No. 424 Sansome street.

PIANOS RENTED

FROM $5 TO $10 PER MONTH, at A. KOHLER'S,
sl 3m No. 424 Sansome street.

CELEBRATED BRADBURY PIANOS.

SIX OF THE BEST,
Just received and for sale by the agent,
A. KOHLER,
sl 3m No. 424 Sansome street.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE
Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S
LIST OF
Late Publications.

Ecce Homo: a Survey of the Life and Work of Jesus Christ.
Campaigns of the Army of the Potomac, by Swinton.
A Treatise on Ship Draughting, by Wm. Laister.
Trodden Down, a Novel, by Mrs. C. J. Newby.
Land at Last, a Novel, by Edmund Yates.
The Apostles, by Ernest Renau.
Christina Rossetti's Poems.
The Albert Nyanza, Great Basin of the Nile, by S. W. Baker.
Old Merchants of New York, by W. Barrett, Clerk
Life of Junius Brutus Booth, (the Elder) by his daughter.
Medical Recollections of the Army of the Potomac, by J. Letterman, M. D.
Constitutional and Party Questions,—S. A. Douglas.
Conversion of the Northern Nations, by C. Merivale.
Crums from the Round Table, by Joseph Barber.
Running the Gauntlet, a Novel, by Edmund Yates.
Who Goes There; or Men and Events, by 'Sentinel.'
The Language of Flowers, edited by Miss Ildrewe.
The Miniature Fruit Garden, by Thos. Rivers.
Goulburn's Sermons.
Map of the Seat of War in Europe.
Napoleon's History of Cæsar, vol. 2.
Fruit Culture, by Charles R. Baker.
The Crown of Wild Olive, by John Ruskin, M. A.
Four Years in the Saddle, by Col. Harry Gilmor.
Andersonville Prison, by Ambrose Spencer.
Resources and Prospects of America, by Sir Morton Peto, Bart.
Dictionary of the Chinese Language, by Rev. R. Morrison, D. D., 2 vols.
Mexico, Ancient and Modern, by M. M. Chevalier, 2 vols.
Vegetables and Flowers; How to Grow Them, by Elizabeth Watts.
Army Life on the Border, by Col. Marcy, with illustrations.
The Prison Life of Jefferson Davis, by Brevet Lieutenant-Col. J. J. Craven, M. D.
Life and Times of Andrew Johnson, written from a National Stand Point, by a National Man.
Storm Cliff, a Tale of the Highlands, by M. S. Walworth.
My Vineyard at Lakeview, by a Western Grape Grower.
Life of James Stephens and Fenianism.
The American Annual Cyclopedia for the year 1865.
Summer Rest, by Gail Hamilton.
Pictures of Country Life, by Alice Cary.
Miss Mulock's Poems—New Edition, Blue and gold.
Our Eternal Homes, by a Bible Student.
The Little Things of Nature, by Leo H. Grindon.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED,
ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
417 and 419 Montgomery street,
au25 San Francisco

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE FOR
Chief of Police,
P. J. WHITE,
OF THE FIRM OF P. J. WHITE & CO.,
au11 No. 412 Front street.

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE
FOR TAX COLLECTOR,
HENRY A. COBB,
OF THE FIRM OF COBB & SINTON,
jy21 NO. 407 CALIFORNIA STREET.

UNION CANDIDATE
FOR
City and County Attorney,
H. M. HASTINGS.

EIGHTH WARD.
FOR SUPERVISOR,
JACOB SCHREIBER.
s1-tf

DEMOCRATIC
City and County Ticket.

For Chief of Police,
P. J. WHITE.

For Tax Collector,
GENERAL H. A. COBB.

For Auditor,
WASHINGTON BARTLETT.

For Superintendent of Streets,
LEANDER WINTRINGER.

For City and County Attorney,
SELDEN S. WRIGHT.

For Public Administrator,
COL. M. C. SMITH.

For Fire Commissioners,
JOHN BARR, SIMON T. WALSH.

For Supervisors,

WARD		WARD
First	P. H. Daly	Seventh	Peter Wheelan
Third	W. B. Fairman	Eighth	Dr. J. W. Winter
Fifth	M. O'Neil	Ninth	Jas. B. Carson
Eleventh	F. McCoppin

For School Directors,

WARD		WARD
First	Michael Daly	Seventh	T. G. McGuire
Third	Peter Dempsy	Ninth	S. B. Thompson
Fifth	J. C. Shotb	Eleventh	Peter Jobuson

For Constables,

First Township	Samuel Bridgewood
Second Township	Cornelius Mooney
Third Township	William S. Jones
Fourth Township	Michael Hawkins
Fifth Township	Thomas Agnew
Sixth Township	John Kelly

ADDRESS
To the Voters of San Francisco.

We, the Members of the Democratic County Convention, respectfully addressing ourselves to the Voters of San Francisco, claim for the ticket we have nominated, your approval and support.

We have succeeded in securing gentlemen of irreproachable character and acknowledged fitness to serve as candidates. In making the selection, we have been careful that schemes for personal aggrandizement and mere political success should not shut out from view the future welfare of the community. The peace of the city, protection to property, and fidelity on the part of the custodians and dispensers of the public moneys, are the considerations which have controlled their deliberations.

We are persuaded that a change for the better can be made in the manner of administering the several Departments of the City Government; and this we believe to be the general conclusion in the public mind.

Whilst it is conceded that much credit was due, for a time, to those who managed our municipal affairs in an independent spirit, it is also contended that more recently they have ignored the former proper tests for official position, and have become mere partisans, intolerant in their views and prejudiced in their action. With this change in the spirit of their government, there has also come extravagance in public expenditures, oppression in their license system, and corruption in the police regulations. Reform is therefore needed in the City Government. This reform can be effected only through the ugency of the ballot-box. To that end we heartily invite the co-operation of the voters of San Francisco.

Nor should it be forgotten that the result of the approaching local election will, to some extent, affect all the social and monetary interests of our city. Moreover, it will exert an important influence on politics throughout the State; and, in order that the people may fully appreciate the political significance of the victory we fervently hope to achieve, we shall briefly declare the principles which our nominees adhere to, touching their duties and the great issues of the day.

We pledge them to a faithful discharge of the obligation their election will cast upon them.

We pledge them to an unwavering support of those principles of our Government which assert the supremacy and vindicate the dignity of the white race.

We pledge them to the doctrines of the equality of all the States of the American Union, and the right of each individual one to determine, under the Constitution of the United States, the qualification of its electors, and to provide for its local prosperity and domestic happiness in its own way; and

We pledge them to a firm adherance to the policy of the National Administration, looking to the defence of these great principles as the only means calculated to heal our differences, to secure for the Government the undivided affection of the people, and to the Union of the States, that freedom, prestige and power rightfully belonging to a great Republic; and, in conclusion, we declare that they approve of the call for a National Convention, and hope that beneficial results may come of its patriotic purpose.

Finally, we beg leave to say that the evasion practiced by the County Convention of the opposite party on these vital questions, is, in our opinion, designed to accomplish a great political fraud, and trifling with the intelligence of the people and the interests of the State. We condemn as dangerous, ill-timed, and characteristic of Radicalism, the letter and spirit of the address put forth by that body. It is but an appeal to the passions of party at a time when those powerful in war and successful in battle should be just and magnanimous in peace.

By order of the
DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION.
au18

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 16. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 8, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:
The Approaching Crisis in England.
A Recent French Religious Writer.
Obituary Notices.
Literary Gleanings and Gossip.
"Lion's Mouth."
Applications for the Position of Editor.
Capt. Jagger's Opinion on Opera.
The President's Bounty.
Poor Stricken Ones.
Amusements, Etc.

SELECTED:
Hazeley Mill, a Story.
Decided People.
African Elephants.
A Ride on a Cow-Catcher.
The Rocky Mountains and Denver.
The Last French Notion.
An Important Subject.
Paris Fashions.
POETRY.
Sleeping.

THE LAST FRENCH NOTION.

A GRAND banquet has been given at Lemardelay's, in honor of the official introduction of horse-flesh into the Paris market. Several horse-flesh shops have been opened in this city within a few days, and, accordingly, one hundred and eighty hippophagists assembled to celebrate the auspicious innovation. M. Quatrefages, of the French Institute, was in the chair. The dinner was composed mainly of the new article of food, and was pronounced to be fit for the gods. The horse-flesh soup, the horse-flesh sausage, horse flesh a la mode, horse-flesh pie, and lastly, fillet of horse-flesh, were devoured amidst general acclamations. Other dishes were served during the repast, but the guests declared the horse flesh so "superior" that they ate little else. At the dessert various speakers proposed toasts, and grew excited on the topic of the hour. The chairman toasted the "Hippophagic Committee," which has been fighting the battle of horse-flesh for the last six years; M. Duméril, representing the Acclimative Society, toasted the new food; M. Sibère thanked the committee in the name of the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals; Dr. Blatin, President of the Hippophagic Society, gave a general glorification of the same, as did the Marquis de Béthizy and other gentlemen. An enthusiastic working-man thanked the gentlemen interested in the "movement" for having introduced a "new and delicious element into the humble larder of the poor;" a rather hard saying, seeing that even a fine, fat young horse's flesh is admitted to be "firm" even by those who will by no means allow it to be "hard," that the flesh of old, worn-out horses is confessedly rather "firmer" than ordinary shoe-leather, and that, therefore, as the cost of a prime horse ranges from eight to a hundred times higher than that of an ox, we have no choice between the aforesaid shoe-leather and an outlay absolutely out of the reach of the laboring population. But this somewhat obvious reflection not appearing to suggest itself to the excited minds of the hippic revellers, the working-man's outburst had an immense success. M. de la Bédolliere, the veteran editor of Le Siecle, next sang two new songs, composed expressly for the occasion, and which, being regarded as extremely witty and appropriate, were applauded to the—chandeliers. The company then became generally jolly, and enjoyed the gathering so much that they remained together until near midnight. In spite of which brilliant demonstration, and the opening of the fine shops for the legal sale of horse-flesh (each joint "stamped" by the market inspectors, and thereby warranted to be "all right,") the unappreciating public is still asking itself, with a not very flattering expression of its nasal organ, "How near to starvation must I find myself reduced before I could contrive to swallow a first mouthful of this new species of butcher's meat?"—Paris Correspondent of the New York Nation.

CAPT. MAYNE REID'S style is thus successfully approached: Alonzo seized the maiden, leapt on his bare boned steed, and with a yell; disappeared from the wondering Apaches! Away, like lightning, swept the steed at about four miles an hour, till just when they had reached the forty-two mile-post on the confined prairc, they saw an object crouching behind it. The Jaguar of the wilds of Africay!' whispered Alonzo in stentorian accents. But, wait a bit—here goes! To bound from his steed, draw his knife, stab the jaguar to the heart, skin and dress it, catch up with his horse—now about sixteen miles distant—throw the skin around the lily shoulders of his dusky bride, was the work of about half a second.

THE ROCKY MOUNTAINS AND DENVER.

THE view of the Rocky Mountains from the divide near Kiowa creek is considered one of the finest in Colorado. From the breezy ridge, between scattered groups of pine, you look upon 150 miles of the snowy range, from the Sangro de Cristo to the spurs away toward Laramie. In variety and harmony of form, in effect against the dark blue sky, in breadth and grandeur, I know no external picture of the Alps which can be placed beside it. If you could take away the valley of the Rhone and unite the Alps of Savoy with the Bernese Overland, you might obtain a tolerable idea of this view of the Rocky Mountains. Pike's Peak would then represent the Jungirau, a nameless snowy giant in front of you Monte Rosa, and Long's Peak Mont Blanc. The altitudes very nearly correspond, and there is a certain similarity in the forms. The average hight of the Rocky Mountains, however, surpasses that of the Alps.

The situation of Denver is well selected. Were it nearer to the mountains, it would furnish a more convenient depot of supplies for the Clear Creek mining region, but it would not concentrate, as now, so many radiating lines of travel. It lies, apparently, in the center of the chord of a shallow arc of the mountains, governing the entrances of some half-a-dozen different canyons and overlooking a belt of farming land fifty miles by ten in dimensions.

Its prosperity, of course, depends on the activity of mining operations in the mountains. There is at present a stagnation, occasioned principally by the enormous price of labor. Although the new methods of reduction promise a much greater production of the precious metals, and fresh discoveries of gold, silver, copper and lead are being made every day, wages are so high that many companies have been forced to suspend business until the agricultural supplies at home and the gradual approach of the Pacific Railroad shall have brought prices down.

I should estimate the population of Denver at about 5,000. Probably no town in the country ever grew up under such discouraging circumstances, or has made more solid progress in the same length of time. It was once swept away by the inundation of Cherry Creek; once or twice burned; threatened with secession; cut off from intercourse with the East by Indian outbreaks; deprived of a great portion of its anticipated trade by our war; made to pay outrageously for its materials and supplies—and all this within seven years!

I was interested in noticing how attached the inhabitants are to the place. Nearly every one who had recently been East seemed rejoiced to return. Even ladies forget the greater luxuries and refinements of the Atlantic coast, when they see the Rocky Mountains once more. The people look upon this glorious Alpine view as one of the properties of the town. Every street opens (in one direction, at least) upon it, and the evening drives along the Platte or over the flowering ridges become as beautiful as any in the world, when the long line of snowy peaks flash down a brighter gold than ever was unpacked from their veins.

There are no manufactories as yet, except a brickyard and two flour mills—the latter driven by water-power. A good gray building stone is found about four miles off. The timber is all brought from the mountains, which, I fear, are in a fair way to become disforested. Coal, however, is coming into general use as fuel, several mines having already been opened in the neighborhood. It resembles the brown coal of Germany, burns freely, and is said to produce a great amount of gas. General Pierce, the Surveyor General, considers the coal-bed of the Rocky Mountains one of the largest in the world. Along the Smoky Hill there are indications of an uninterrupted supply all the way to Kansas.

I find myself constantly returning to the point which my eyes seek, with unwearied interest, whenever I lift them from the paper. Ever since my arrival I have been studying the mountains. Their beauty and grandeur grew upon me with every hour of my stay. None of the illustrations accompanying the reports of exploration, and other Government documents, give any distinct idea of their variety and harmony of forms. Nowhere distorted or grotesque in outline, never monotonous, lovely in color and atmospheric effect, I may recall some mountain chains which equal, but none which surpass them. From this point there appears to be three tolerably distinct ranges. The first rises from 2,000 to 3,000 feet above the level of the Plains; it is cloven asunder by the canyons of the streams, streaked with dark lines of pine, which feather its summits, and sunny with steep slopes of pasture. Some distance behind it appears a second range of nearly double the hight, more irregular in its masses and of a dark, velvety, violet hue. Beyond, leaning against the sky, are the snowy peaks, nearly all of which are from 13,000 to 15,000 feet above the sea. These three chains, with their varying but never discordant undulations, are as inspiring to the imagination as they are enchanting to the eye. They hint of concealed grandeurs in all the glens and parks among them, and yet hold you back with a doubt whether they can be more beautiful near at hand than when beheld at this distance.—Bayard Taylor, in the New York Tribune.

BLACK RAIN IN SCOTLAND AND ENGLAND.—The "black rain" showers, which are now so well known in Scotland, and about which the inhabitants of a part of Aberdeenshire are in the way of speaking with no greater astonishment, when one of them falls from a peculiarly-colored dark cloud, blackening materials exposed to it, than they speak of a white shower from a snowy cloud, have been at last recognized in England. Between the beginning of January, 1862, and the middle of January, 1866, there have been no fewer than eight authenticated black showers in Scotland. Seven of these fell in Slains and the extensive surrounding district. Two of them were accompanied with pumice stones, some of the balls of which measured eight to ten inches in diameter, and weighed upwards of a pound avoirdupois. The first four, including the Carluke shower, and the eighth, were contemporaneous with outbursts of Vesuvius, and the intermediate three with those of Etna. It has been discovered that England gets her share likewise of black showers, although she did not think that she was so distinguished. On the 3d of May of the present year (1866), at 11 A. M., and again at 4 P. M., the town of Birmingham and surrounding country were for three-quarters of an hour each time enveloped with black clouds producing darkness and rain. Accidents took place in the streets, vehicles were upset, and gas had to be lighted at some of the crossings, and nearly in all the places of business. A large quantity of black rain, similar to the Scottish, fell, and blackened rain water in tanks and clothes on greens, not only in Birmingham itself, but at rural places many miles distant, unaffected by soot and smoke, and even windward of that town. So far as known, however, no word has yet arrived of any volcanic outburst, although, judging from what has taken place in Scotland, a probability exists that some volcano has been in a state of activity, emitting its contents, whether it be heard of or not.—Aberdeen Journal.

DEMOLITION OF THE WALLS OF FLORENCE.—The work of demolishing the ancient walls of Florence has commenced. These walls, of different ages and styles, are in plan and circuit the same, the building of which was ordered by a decree of the Republic in 1283, and resumed, after many interruptions, in 1324, when they were fortified by barbicans and by square towers, 80 feet high, at intervals of 400 feet: also provided with a moat, of which no trace is left, and pierced by sixteen gates and posterns, eight of which were built up in the earlier years of Medicean government. Their actual circuit is five and three-fourth miles; they are still guarded by those high old towers, and for the extent on the southern side have an antique and picturesque aspect, elsewhere being quite insignificant and uninteresting, save in the mediæval gateways, four of which are in the fourteenth century; and one rebuilt in 1340, from the design of Andrea Pisano; but only one other retains its original height, with stories of deep-recessed archways, gaping, gloomy, and cavern-like, in dusky stonework on the inner side.—Athenæum.

HAZELEY MILL.

A STORY IN TWO CHAPTERS.—BY LOUISA CROW.

CHAPTER I.

A BUSY place is the old wooden mill at Hazeley from the rising to the setting of the sun, as the clacking wheels whirr steadily round to the music of the falling waters, and the miller's men bustle in and out, and up and down at their dusty labors.

And a cheerful place is the mill when the light of day is gleaming and glistening on the rapid stream beside; and wagons from the neighboring villages, or broadfaced farmers, in their chaise-carts, come to and fro to traffic with the wealthy miller: or tarry—for old acquaintance sake—on their way home from the town to discuss the rise in prices, or the latest news gathered there; or to have a social chat and cup of tea, with the miller's pleasant, hospitable wife.

But when night falls and work is over, the spot wears, to unaccustomed eyes, a dull and solitary aspect. On two sides the little river environs it closely; on the third the miller's garden and fields extend for a considerable distance; and on the other, the narrow highway alone separates the miller's domain from a few acres of woodland, the poor remnant of what had once been an extensive forest.

Not a house is nearer than a cluster of laborers' cottages, half-a-mile away; and the village of Hazeley, in itself but one straggling street, lies still further from the solitary mill. But those who once dwelt within it knew no fears. For years they had found shelter and safety under its roof, even when floods from the adjacent hills roared around the very doorstep, and isolated them for days from the dry ground beyond.

Their most troublesome visitors were but a footstore tramp, whose thanks and blessings were easily won by a seat in the porch, and a hearty meal; or—and this was but rarely—a gang of gipsies, whom the prudent dame, with a view to the safety of her hen-roost, while they encamped in the vicinity, was careful to conciliate.

Besides, Abel Weston, the miller, was large-limbed and strong-armed; and in the peaceful valley where he lived and prospered, greater crimes than the petty pilfering of saucy boys in the orchards or farm-yards were almost unknown

Katie Morris, from the time she was a merry active child, delighted to help Mrs. Weston in her garden, or peep with awe-delighted eyes into the mysteries of grinding and bolting, had been a member of the miller's household.

At first she was welcomed as an amusing visitor; then prized for her tender assiduities, when the dame's eyes began to fail, and her once active limbs to stiffen; and, eventually, as Katie was one of a large family, whose parents could scarcely contrive to maintain them all, it was arranged that she should receive regular wages for her willing services.

From thenceforth she resided entirely with the aged couple; and as she blossomed into fair womanhood, her light footfall and merry songs filling the house with pleasant sounds, the miller and his wife grew to love their protégé as dearly as if she were their own child.

But her friends were not without that frequent blemish—family pride. In Abel Weston's great Bible there were registered generations of staunch yeomen, who had intermarried with the most reputable and ancient families in the country; and Katie, who had never heard a reproachful word from her indulgent employers, saw their brows bent upon her sternly and disapprovingly, when their nephew and heir, handsome Hugh, so far forgot himself as to linger by her side in the porch at twilight, and to steal a kiss from her cheek as they parted.

Abel Weston could easily separate the young people, and he did so, by sending Hugh to London to see a little of the world, under the guardianship of a bustling trader, who claimed kinship with him. But would this root out the love with which Katie had inspired the lad? And if not, what was to be done?

Hugh was ardent and impetuous, and if aroused by aught he deemed unjust, or even ungenerous, obstinate to a degree. Against his choice what had they to urge but her poverty and her birth? They had well liked Katie, and she deserved that they should; but they never forgot that her mother was the daughter of a carter who had grown gray in their own service, or that her father—ay, here lay the greatest difficulty of all——

Abel Weston had his hobbies, as other men have; his violin, which he treasured and caressed, and played with the enthusiasm of a fanatic; and his politics.

A Conservative, as his sires had been before him, he staunchly upheld Church and State, and refused to believe that the party for whom he voted—whether in power or out of power—could ever do wrong. And his opinions and prejudices, strenuously adhered to, and always vehemently expressed, were sometimes rehearsed at the White Horse at Hazeley, where the wealthy miller was generally listened to with respect. But Harvey Morris, the father of Katie, a journeyman carpenter, in a paper cap and patched jacket, not only chose to consider himself superior to the farming men who sat in the tap, and so quaffed his occasional pint at the door of the bar, but joined in the conversation carried on by the favored few admitted to a seat within it. And not content with this intrusion, he had on more than one occasion ventured to contravene some of the miller's assertions; and to argue the rights and wrongs of the working-classes with all the rhetoric of an intelligent, but uneducated and dissatisfied man.

This Morris, with his radical notions and errors, must he be permitted to link himself with their family, and, perhaps, infuse his wild fancies into the mind of the young and enthusiastic Hugh? Abel Weston had begun by fostering a distaste for the saucy workman, whose noisy denunciations of the Government measures had shocked and disgusted him; but little by little the rancorous feeling spread until it deepened into hate; and in his wrath he declared to his grieving dame that he would sooner disinherit the boy than see him the husband of Katie Morris!

Katie was accounted by those who knew her best a high-spirited, quick-tempered girl; but now she bore changed looks and cold words uncomplainingly. To leave the mill was to quit Hazeley, and very possibly to see Hugh no more.

Besides, were not they who rebuked her his nearest and dearest relatives? and for his sake what could she not endure? By-and by—so she hopefully argued—they would see that the love which had sprung up in their bosoms was no light passion which would wither beneath the first cloud in the sky; and, subdued by her patience and Hugh's entreaties, his uncle would withdraw his tacit opposition, and they should be happy once more.

And thus it might have been, but for the interference of her father. Some gossip-loving neighbor seized the first opportunity of condoling with him on the sorrowful looks of his daughter, Hugh Weston's departure, and the miller's harshness.

His pride in arms that a slight should be cast upon his child, Morris threw down his plane, and without vouchsafing a comment to his officious and now half-alarmed informant, put on his jacket, and went to the mill.

At the gate he encountered Katie, on her way to the village shop; and drawing her across the road to the shelter of the wood, angrily questioned her.

"You have been in tears! Nay, no denials! These purse-proud Westons have cast your poverty in your teeth, and told you that you are no fit match for their nephew; is it not so?"

She attempted a faint disclaimer, but he would not listen to it.

"I have heard the whole truth of the matter, so why try to deceive me? Come home, child! Nay, you shall stay there no longer. Why, who and what are they to despise you? There is more sense in your little finger, Katie, than in all their shallow pates together! They shall pay dearly for their insolent treatment of you!" and he shook his fist menacingly in the direction of the mill.

"Who has been telling you this, father? I have made no complaints. Is it known in the village?"

"Ay, child, for it was there I learned it. Leave this house at once. There is food and shelter for you at home."

"No," Katie replied, spiritedly, "I will never be a burden to you, nor stay in Hazeley to be pointed at. I will go right away."

"That's my brave girl! Never fret for Hugh Weston! The lad's well enough, but there are better husbands to be had than he."

But, with the sound of that name, Katie's resolves melted away, and sitting down on a felled tree, she wept piteously.

Not knowing how to console her, Morris paced about, his ire increasing with every sob that burst from the lips of his daughter as she wept.

At last he broke out furiously: "I must be a blind fool, or I should have seen this long ago, and taken you away. But they shall repent every tear they have made you shed, as sure as my name's Harvey Morris! I'll have a day of reckoning with Abel Weston for this. Come home, I say, at once!"

"O, no, no, father!" she pleaded; "the dame is not well; I could not leave with no one at hand to help her. I will quietly say that you have bid me come away, and I promise you that some time in the evening I will let you know when I can be spared."

At first, Morris would not hear of this concession. The yearning tenderness Katie felt for those at whose board she had sat so long he could not comprehend, and was half disposed to rate her soundly for her want of spirit. But she was resolute; and, still muttering threats against those who contemned her, he plunged more deeply into the wood, too much discomposed to return to his daily labors.

Katie went on her errand; heard her delay crossly commented on without reply; and then faltered out her intention of quitting the mill.

Dame Weston clasped her feeble fingers and sighed piteously. The miller, although more moved than he would have confessed even to himself, heard her with apparent composure and satisfaction.

"It will be for the better, my wench," he said; "better for you, and for all of us. And you're going quite away? Right; quite right. Get into the town, and see a little more of life; and if you marry a decent steady lad, let's know, Katie, and the missus shall send ye a wedding-dinner, and I'll find something towards the house furniture."

"God bless ye, Katie, wherever ye go," said the old lady, tremulously. "I shall miss ye, sadly. I wish——"

She caught the warning look of her husband and paused; and, by common consent, Katie's future was not discussed again.

With an aching heart, the poor girl all through that day went slowly about the house, bidding a mute farewell to the cosy chambers her willing hands would arrange no more. On the morrow, when the wagon went to the town with a load of flour, the carter was commissioned to bring back with him an elderly cousin of Mrs. Weston's, who could take Katie's place for the present.

Ah! they would soon replace her. Perhaps when Hugh returned, another would be filling her duties so deftly that they would almost cease to remember her.

But where would she learn equal forgetfulness?

The mill had been her home so long, that even now, with her trunk packed for removal, and her sad and silent farewells said to those nooks in the garden and by the river, where Hugh had first whispered his love, it was difficult to realize that she was going away, and forever.

The evening closed in; the cloth was spread for supper, and Abel Weston, who had lingered in the counting-house until the last moment, came in to partake of it.

And now Katie remembered her promise to her father, and reached down her bonnet and shawl.

"Thee needn't hurry back, child," said the miller, with something of remorseful kindness in the tones of his voice. "If thee art a bit late, dame shall go to bed, and I'll smoke a pipe in the garden and wait for thee."

Katie's soul was too full of heaviness to make more than a brief reply to this unexpected offer; but she stooped over Mrs. Weston ere she departed, and kissing the old lady's wrinkled cheek, whispered an assurance that she would return in time to assist her up-stairs; an office that would never be hers again.

It was a relief to Katie to find the children a-bed, and her father out. From her mother she could procure the address of an old friend who resided at D——, a market-town twenty miles from Hazeley. Thither she would go, and seek a service in some secluded farm-house, where the name of Hugh Weston could never reach her.

Unceasing struggles with poverty, and wearying endeavors to support a large family honestly and decently, chafed and fretted Harvey Morris into murmurs at his hard fortune. But they had a different effect upon his wife; perhaps for the reason that he met them in his own strength, while she, with truer wisdom, sought the sustaining aid of a Divine arm, and learned in the only book she ever read, to be patient and hopeful.

From her sympathizing tenderness Katie won consolation; and when she rose up to depart it was with changed feelings, and a determination to emulate that dear mother's resignation and unfailing trust in Providence.

As she crossed the threshold a sudden thought made her pause and return into the kitchen. "Mother, I'll not go back along the road. Betty Jones is standing at her open door, and I don't care for her to see my swollen eyes. I'll run down the garden and cross the fields, and so home by the wood."

"It's a long round, and an unked (lonely) one," her mother dubiously remarked; but Katie was resolute, and with another hasty "God bless you!" she sped away.

The night was closing in sombrely, but Katie was familiar with the narrow track she had chosen, and trod it unerringly, even where the trees clustered thickly together, and threw their shadows darkly across it; and her thoughts were wandering in that blissful future, which her faith in Hugh's fidelity whispered was not impossible, when the tramp of heavy feet aroused her from her reverie.

Katie was no coward, and it was from no foolish timidity that she instantly stepped aside and crouched behind a convenient thicket. The same disinclination to betray her tears to the curious eyes of Mistress Betty Jones, now actuated her desire to avoid the rude stare of others, and she saw no harm in thus avoiding a threatened rencontre.

The next moment, three men, in the rough garb of the working-class, came hurrying by, huddling together, breathing loudly and quickly, and glancing fearfully to the right and to the left, as if some terrible shadow, which they vainly sought to avoid, was dogging their uncertain steps. Scarcely had they passed the hidden listener, when she started up, with the word, "Father!" upon her lips, for, on the one nearest to her, she certainly recognized in the dim twilight the old, but neatly-patched, jacket he commonly wore.

But without perceiving her they had gone on; and wondering a little at their haste, and the direction they were pursuing—for they were already far down a by-path leading to a bleak common beyond—she went on her own way to the mill.

A couple of hundred yards more, and the stile was reached; but here Katie stopped with an exclamation of surprise, for, fluttering on a bramble beside it, was the treasured India silk handkerchief which Mrs. Weston was in the habit of folding over her head as she dozed in her arm-chair in the evening.

Carrying it in her hand, and speculating as to how it came there, she ran across to the gate of the miller's garden, where she expected to find him awaiting her coming.

But Abel Weston was not there, and the house-door was closed and fastened. This was unusual, for the miller, accustomed to be much in the open air, seldom sought the fire-side in hours so mild as this fair spring gloaming.

Katie rapped for admittance, and the summons remaining unanswered, she stepped back to reconnoitre the chamber-windows. Was it later than she had imagined, and had they—now so indifferent about her—retired to rest?

If so, surely the key was hung in the porch, as it had sometimes been for Hugh; and, standing on tip-toe, she groped for the nail. It was empty; and now disposed to resent their seeming unkindness, she rattled the latch loudly and repeatedly, and then put her ear to the key-hole, and listened for the coming of the miller.

The ceaseless rushing of the water over the weir, and the steady ticking of the Dutch clock hanging in the nook by the dresser, alone broke the solemn stillness of the hour; for so calm was the night that even the leaves on the beech-trees opposite seemed to be at rest. But suddenly a low, lengthened groan, followed by a choking sigh, echoed through the quiet house; and Katie, with a shriek of terror, fled from the door, and down the lane to Hazeley.

CHAPTER II.

Pale as a corpse, breathless with running, and unconsciously retaining in her hand the silken kerchief, she reached the cluster of cottages already alluded to.

On a bench outside one of these, where a widow eked out the parish allowance by selling a variety of odds and ends, including table ale, two or three laborers were lounging to have a gossip and a neighborly pipe, when Katie appeared.

"To the mill! to the mill!" she frantically cried. "The door is fastened—I cannot open it—and some one is dying within!"

A few words put the astonished men in possession of what little she knew, and they began to don their hats and rouse up a sleeping blacksmith, whose services might be required to gain them admittance.

The widow had now heard the unusual stir, and she joined the group gathering around the terror-stricken Katie.

"Lordsakes, child!" she cried; "but you've hurt yourself, ain't ye? No? Why what's this on your pretty handkerchief?"

Aye, what indeed! The prudent and pitiful woman forcibly detained the frenzied girl, while the men—their faces blanched by this dark evidence of some fearful occurrence—hurried off to ascertain what had really happened.

It was well for Katie that, despite her struggles and angry remonstrances, those kind hands detained her; for fearful indeed was the sight that met the beholders, when they had burst open the door and entered the miller's living-room.

There had been spoilers in the home of the aged couple—spoilers and murderers. On his own floor, killed in defence of his hard earnings, lay Abel Weston; and his wife, in feebly endeavoring to protect him, had perished too.

Like one stunned by the vastness of the misfortune, stood Katie, insensible to the condoling and pitying speeches of those who crowded around her, chafing her cold hands and bathing her temples; until a simple, kindly-natured lad, who worked at the mill, in a burst of sorrow for the good old master and missus, mentioned the name of their absent nephew.

Then Katie awoke from her lethargy. "Hugh! Oh, Hugh!" she moaned, and bursting through the throng, ran wildly down the road towards Hazeley.

"She's gone to her mother's," said one to another. "It's best so, for she'll feel it sorely. Poor thing!"

Mrs. Morris divined something something amiss from her first glimpse of Katie's haggard looks, and throwing aside her work, she folded her arms about the trembling young creature.

"My child, my dear child, what is it?"

"Father!" gasped Katie; "where is he?"

Ere the mother could reply he entered, as ghastly as the girl whose eyes were fearfully surveying him.

With a shudder he raised his hands to the light, and without speaking, plunged them into a bowl of water.

"Katie! Harvey!" cried Mrs. Morris, her voice unsteady with apprehension. "What has happened? Harvey, why do you not answer? Where is your jacket?"

"I have lost it," he said sullenly.

"Lost it! But how?"

"No matter how. It is lost. Was it worth so much that you make so many words about it?"

"But there is something wrong. Oh, I am sure that there is! What is it?"

Ere a reply could be given, the tidings of the double murder were loudly told outside the window by one passer-by to another; and Katie and her mother clung together in a closer embrace, while Morris, sinking on a bench, hid his face in his hands.

When he looked up it was to exclaim in low tones, "For God's sake, Katie, never repeat to anyone the words I said this morning. Why do you look at me so dreadfully, child?"

He came towards her as he spoke, but with extended arms she repulsed him.

"Father, they came through the wood—the murderers! and I crouched down and hid until they had passed."

Her mother uttered a devout exclamation for her safety; but Morris eagerly questioned, "Did you know them?"

Katie flung herself on her knees.

"Oh, tell me it was not you! It was your dress, and I spoke your name as you went by. But no, you could not mean this when you said those fearful words! Father, father, say that you are innocent, or I shall die of shame and horror!"

The over-wrought girl now lay on the floor in an hysterical attack, and neighbors, who heard her cries and moans, hastened to proffer their assistance. But Morris, recovering his usual acuteness, civilly dismissed them, and aided his wife in conveying their miserable child to bed.

There for many weeks she lay in the delirium of a low fever, unable to reply coherently when questioned respecting her partial discovery of the murder; unconscious that when the doctor pronounced her recovery hopeless, Hugh Weston had stolen to her side to kiss her burning cheek, and that her own ravings, added to other circumstances unfavorably construed, had made Harvey a marked and suspected man.

No traces of the guilty parties, who had possessed themselves of a large sum of ready money, had been discovered.

It was surmised that, after securing the door and flinging the key into the mill-pool, they had made their way across the wood to some convenient retreat; but the absence of any evidence—no one but Katie having encountered them—involved the affair in mystery.

In vain did Hugh offer large rewards; no one came forward to claim them. And as time went on, the belief which had arisen, none knew how, that Harvey Morris was concerned in the murder, gained ground in Hazeley.

There were more than one ready to prove that he had gone in the direction of the mill that morning deeply angered with the miller: and an old woman picking up sticks for her fire, had partly overheard his conference with his daughter.

From that moment he had not been seen near Hazeley until nightfall; when, as the door of the miller's house was wrenched open, he had made his appearance without his jacket. And, in strange, and as it seemed, remorseful silence, he had assisted in raising the miller, who still breathed, and carrying him up stairs.

Where had he been all this time, and with whom?

So strong were the doubts of his innocence, that he was examined by the county magistrates; but his explanation, though improbable, was possible.

He frankly acknowledged the angry feelings he had cherished, and the idle menaces to which they had given birth; and alleged that, too much annoyed to resume his work, he had gone to a small, out-of-the-way public house on the road-side, where he drank deeply, spending all the money he possessed; and on awaking from the stupor which followed this unusual excess, had found the jacket on which he had pillowed his head, stolen. That, ashamed to return home by daylight or confess his folly to his wife, he had skulked about the wood until the evening, arriving at the mill on his way home, just in time to be among the first who entered.

Although many shook their heads over this tale, yet the man's previous good character obtained his release. But he grew moody and sullen as people began to avoid and point at him, and the men with whom he worked to utter covert insinuations, to which his readiness to resent them with his fists, only gave a deeper coloring.

"Mary," he said to his wife one night, "we must go away from here as soon as that poor child can be moved, or I shall be goaded into worse deeds than they accuse me of. Even you," he said, fiercely, "when Katie hid her face from me, shrink away too, as if you believed me guilty. God help a man when his own wife and children turn against him."

The faithful wife put her arm round his neck. "Don't speak so bitterly, Harvey! If now and then a dreadful fear has come over me, that you went to the mill that night to ask for Katie, and a quarrel arose, only tell me that it wasn't so, and I'll believe you."

"I didn't think that I should ever have to say to you, Mary, I'm an innocent man. You ought to know me better, if no one else does."

"Forgive me, Harvey," she pleaded; and putting his arms about her as she knelt beside him, the harrassed and depressed Morris forgot his manhood, and wept.

"We'll go away, Mary. Perhaps in some new home, where there's no one to throw this in my teeth, I shall get back my old spirit and work with a will. But I can't here! I'm like Ishmael; every one seems set against me. And though I try to keep a bold front to 'em, my heart gets heavy, and I'm sick of this struggle."

So it was resolved that Harvey should start on the tramp for work the following morning, and in the course of another week his family left Hazeley also. Katie, though fearfully weak, was recovering; and was equally anxious to bid farewell to the scene of so much sorrow.

Hugh Weston, who only heard of their projected departure an hour before it occurred, hastened to the cottage, and bent over the fragile form of her he loved.

"Katie, how can I let you go away from me? But it is only for a little while, is it? By-and-by I shall come and fetch you back."

"No, Hugh, no; I must never see you again. Even if we could resolve to forget your poor uncle's disapproval, you could not marry the daughter of the man whom people——" her voice died away in a sob.

"But I do not believe him guilty, Katie. He came to see me before he left Hazeley, and we did not part like men who mistrust each other. You will come to me by-and-by, dear?"

But she repeated her "No" with equal firmness. "For your sake, Hugh, it must not be. If ever my father is cleared, then—but in a little while you will marry some one more suited to you in station, and I mustn't wish it otherwise." However, Katie wept bitterly as she sobbed this.

Hugh said but little more, for she was evidently unable to bear the agitation it occasioned, but his last words were, "Trust me, Katie! We're not parting for ever, remember!"

And, in spite of her better judgment, she did trust him, and cherished a secret hope that they should meet again, even when a report reached her that Hugh had sold the mill and flitted to a distant country. Even when months elapsed, and no sign came from him. But these were not the days of the penny postage, and Katie felt herself amply rewarded for her faith and patience, when on her birthday, a parcel arrived by the carrier, containing a handsomely bound Church Service, and within its cover a tiny simple locket, which held a wave of Hugh's black hair.

Long before this, Harvey Morris had secured constant work at excellent wages; and Katie, restored to health, was the active and intelligent manager of a large dairy farm, belonging to a gentleman who owned a splendid estate in the vicinity of the town where her parents now resided.

And out of evil came good, in so many ways, that if she sometimes remembered the old home at Hazeley with a sigh of regret, it was always followed by self-reproach. Her father, no longer the idling dissatisfied man, but sobered and steadied by what had occurred, now labored assiduously for his family. Her mother had lost the haggard look of over-work and scant food; the boys, under better teaching and greater home care were developing into bright lads; and one of her sisters was in training under her own kind and steady supervision.

Perhaps such thoughts as these, mingled with some secret yearnings to know if Hugh still remembered her, were in Katie's mind, as a few weeks before her birthday again came round, she stood one soft summer eve watching the setting of the sun from the little flower-garden she called hers.

But she was not permitted to indulge them long. Mr.——, the gentleman who employed her, was about to leave England for a lengthened period, and she was to see him that night, and receive some final directions, etc.

So, gathering the wild roses and honeysuckles from the hedge-row as she went along, Katie, with a lad for a protector, went up the pretty lane which separated her domain from the garden, and entered the "great house" by the offices.

It was an hospitable mansion, and it was nothing uncommon to find vagrants seated on a bench outside, devouring the food unsparingly bestowed on all who craved it; and a ragged footsore man limped from it as she approached, and entering the lobby with a profusion of thanks and apologies, begged permission to light his pipe.

The good-natured cook brought him some matches, and he was about to turn away, when Katie, white and trembling with eagerness, clutched his arm. "Where did you get that jacket?"

The confused vagrant tried to slip away, but closing the outer door and bolting it, she repeated the question.

Seeing that the servants—both male and female—were beginning to gather around him, he told a rambling story of having bought it of a mate some long time ago.

There was falsehood in his shifting eye and stammering tongue, and she followed up the inquiry with another.

"Where are the men who went with you to Hazeley Mill the night Abel Weston was murdered?"

For a moment he was startled into silence; then, declaring with a blasphemous asseveration that he knew not what she meant, he thrust his pipe and tobacco-pouch back into his pocket, and, roughly pushing her aside, sought to escape.

But Katie seized and held him firmly. "Help!" she shrieked, "help me! This man is a murderer. I can swear to the pouch now in his possession! It was Abel Weston's; and he had it in his hand when I last saw him alive."

Mr. ——, who was magistrate, was quickly summoned, and Katie's prisoner spent that night in the county goal.

The excited girl flew rather than ran to the neat little dwelling in the outskirts of the town, where her family resided, and rushing into the room fell upon her father's neck.

"You have forgiven me long ago, have you not, for my cruel suspicions? and now, my own dear persecuted father, the whole world will know your innocence. One of the men, he who wore your jacket, is taken! How shall we find Hugh Weston?—he must be sent for."

"Hugh Weston is already here," said a well-known voice, and Katie started up to meet his loving embrace. "I should have been with you before this," the young man continued; "but at first the success of my new undertaking was doubtful. Now, there is a home waiting for my true-hearted Katie."

"But what is this about a man being in custody?" asked the impatient Morris, and his daughter told the full particulars of her providential meeting with one of those for whose crime he had so nearly suffered.

The prisoner, seeing his danger, turned Queen's evidence; and his accomplices were seized and punished for the brutal deed they had committed; the good folks for many miles around Hazeley flocking into the county town to witness the execution of these stolid, sullen murderers of the inoffensive and respected miller and his kindly wife.

When the trial was over, Hugh Weston talked of returning to his business, and it was an understood thing that he did not intend to travel alone. But Katie shook her head sadly when he urged her to fix the day for their nuptials.

"I would fain say yes," she faltered; "but the memory of those who loved us both is still very dear to me, and how can I do what I know would have angered them in their life?"

"Dear Katie," was the earnest reply; "in all that is right and just, I, too, will try to do what would have been pleasant in their eyes. But think you, that if they see us now, the same worldly motives that governed their objections to our union can influence them? Rather believe that their blessing hallows the love which time and trial has strengthened."

The argument was convincing; and after a brief visit to Hazeley, where the tears of the young couple fell fast as they wandered around the old house, and stood by the grave of Abel and Martha Weston, they were quietly united; from thence departing to found a new family of Westons in a valley as green, and beside a river as brisk and clear, as the never-forgotten stream that still turns the weather-stained wheels of Hazeley Mill.—Once a Week.

Degrading Superstition in Sweden.—At a late execution in Scania a vast crowd was assembled, some of whom endeavored to become possessed of some drops of the blood of the victim, thinking they would so obtain a specific against epilepsy, cramp and other diseases. It was even observed that a family in the higher ranks of society, in a large town, had gone from some distance to the place of execution for the express purpose of obtaining this talisman, which they were most eager to procure as a remedy for one of the children who has been grievously afflicted. Immediately after the execution the crowd pressed around the scaffold, and the military guard had great difficulty in keeping them off; but no sooner had the troops and the police been withdrawn than men and women rushed forward and scraped the ground with their hands that they might collect some of the bloody earth, which they subsequenty crammed into their mouths, in the hope that they might thus get rid of their diseases.

Sunstroke and Shade.—Sunstroke is to be found in the bottom of a glass of whisky oftener than in the open sun. The shade is far more harmful, all told, than the bright light of the sun. None of us get as much of its heat and light as we require. It drives away paralysis and rheumatism; newly magnetizes the animal being; pours a new reservoir of electric power into the veins; and revives what has become slow and sluggish in the shade. We live in the shade more than we ought. The sun should not be shut out of houses as it is. It being the source of all life and strength, we are criminally at fault by declaring our purpose to have none of it, to have as little to do with it as if it were an enemy. It is generally something besides the sun that produces sun stroke.

An Affecting Incident in Court.—About the middle of last month, a woman thirty years of age appeared before a Paris court of justice, mixed up somehow or another with a cause on trial. She was very beautiful, and her beauty seemed more fascinating from the simplicity of her costume. The judge examined her. "It appears, madame, from the information before the court, your youth was extremely dissipated." "The information is, unfortunately, but too true, your honor." "Nevertheless, it appears your conduct has been irreproachable since 1860." "Aye, aye! and the reason is plain—my daughter was born that year." The tone and manner of the woman in giving this answer thrilled the court and audience and won her cause.

The son of Madame Ristori, the actress, has been named captain for his gallant conduct at the battle of Custozza.

A RIDE ON A COW-CATCHER.

It was past seven o'clock in the evening when we left Toledo for Detroit, a distance of sixty-five miles. E. H. Field was conductor, and Charles Luce stood engineer. The night was blacker than a black cat's back, but the road was smooth, and the train a mighty fast one. The first station out from Toledo we coaxed Bob Langan, of the Detroit Daily Free Press, to try a night-ride on the cow-catcher in front of the engine to get up a new sensation! Bob said he had as soon ride inside, but, not wishing to see our neck broken alone, he said yes, and us two clambered on, braced our feet, leaned back, tied a handkerchief about the throat, buttoned our coats and were ready. No one knew that we were on ahead. The bell rings—Chuff—chuff—chuff—chuff—chuff—chuff-chuff-yuf-yuf-yull-ff ff-ff ff ff-f-f-f-f-f-f! And away we go like a cannon shot from a mortar. How the steam talked to the engine, and the engine growled as if it wanted to sleep but could not! The valves sucked and pounded in the huge one-eyed devil behind us! The iron steed of pandemonium seemed like a ghost of some furnace let loose for noon, as we struck out for Detroit. Gracious! How dark the night was! Black clouds hung low ahead of us, and the gloom was like that which envelopes the damned. Like the head of a nerveless man the engine shook from side to side as we roared, rumbled and rushed on. The great goggle eye—the bright headlight—threw a circle of illumination a few rods ahead, showing the narrow track and the spider-web like rails, looking in the darkness no bigger than telegraph wires. And how the engine went! The half circle of light on ahead of us spread away but could not escape. The huge engine was behind its confines—and such a roar. How like an angel the reflection of the great lamp sped ahead of us—how like a black devil came the train thundering behind as if determined to capture the gloom-piercing fugitive!

On and away! How the patch of light fled ahead! How like a spirit of light it pierced the darkness as truth pierces error! Over the ground; ever on the track; now over some bridge; now close in a cut; now over a culvert, jumping like a fawn; now brushing past a hill; now revealing a house or barn, a wood pile or a station, on went the fugitive, and behind it thundered and rumbled the iron monster!

But 'twas glorious! Not a word could be spoken. It was hold on or death. No time for jokes or foolishness. This playing "knuckle down" with death is no boy's pastime. A broken rail, an obstruction, a misplaced switch, a creature on the track, a coming engine on the wrong time, and into the earth, stones, or timber would have gone the cow-catcher at the rate of twenty six miles an hour, and into eternity would have passed two Democratic editors, without as much as "by your leave, gentlemen!"

The sky and the earth were lost in the black horizon! The groves, fields and houses seemed to shoot past us as if bent on being somewhere on time to a second. The darkness hung like a pall ahead of us, only pierced at the edge by the reflection of our lamp. The track all the time seemed to be pointed down hill at an apparent angle of twenty degrees. It seemed as if the end of the road was but five rods ahead, and we were just ready to make a frightful leap into some dark, yawning, horrible gulf. A lump of brimstone to have smelled of would have completed the picture! As it was, the objects we passed seemed like ghosts, devils, damned spirits, goblins and hobgoblins!

Every second it seemed as if the end of the road was but just ahead of us. Lights flashed for a moment, and were gone; houses were shot by in a twinkling. Lights in windows seemed like lightning-bugs, and vanished into dark air as if fearing annihilation by the monster on whose chin we were riding; while his single eye gleamed in hate, and his open mouth on the top of his head laughed its hellish ha-ha-ha-ha! in fiendish delight!

How we rode, still seemingly down an inclined plane; still rushing after the golden glimmer ahead; still rubbing our face on the cheek of death, yet no more fearing it than the infant fears death while asleep on its mother's breast. We had faith! The form and features of a loved one seemed to be ahead of us smiling and saying by her smile that he who had pluck would surely win the race! We never thought it possible to be killed, but we did decide how we should jump in case of an accident. Station after station—over the culverts, the bridges, past the fields, through the cuts, around curves, through swamps, over stretches of level country, past mile posts—ever in the same cloud of darkness we rushed. The night wind whistled by us, cold and keen. The stations came and went as down into the blackness of night we rushed at the rate of a mile in a fraction over two minutes! But it was glorious! The hair fairly stood erect when the hat would be removed from our brow, and in a kind of delirious fancy it seemed as if it would be fun to die and surprise folks up yonder by rushing in upon them at their devotions, and telling them we had an item in advance of the train! and that a whole lot of slow people were close behind us, but not in time to secure front seats!

"Detroit!" And here we were without an accident, safe and sound, in advance of the train, having gained on it since we left Toledo. The engineer wanted to know who we were as we leaped or rather eased ourself down from the cow-catcher to run almost in his arms, while Bob disappeared on the other side of the train. We gave the man some name, and walked off while he stood lecturing us, and while some old fogy, nervous passengers, said that no money would tempt them to such a bit of fun as riding about sixty miles in a dark night on a cow-catcher. Let those who have no fear of death, who have clear consciences, and perfect faith, try it some time and see if it does not make them think of a trip through the inferno during recess for noon.

Brick Pomeroy.

AMUSEMENTS.

Lady Don has drawn another good week's business at the Opera House during the present week, the attractions having been Rob Roy on Monday and Tuesday evenings; Rural Felicity—Buckstone's lively and entertaining little comedy, exceedingly well-dressed and acted by all who took part in it—and the burlesque of Mazourka on Wednesday and Thursday evenings. Tommy and Sally and the above named burlesque was the bill last evening for the benefit of the Independent Hibernia Green's, who were greeted with a full house and treasury.

This afternoon Brough's new burlesque entitled Prince Florizel, or, The Winter's Tale, will be brought out. Gray's famous Beggar's Opera, one of the first operas ever produced on the English stage; and the relrains of which were popular with our grandmothers in their girlhood, and yet live in the nursery rhyme books of the present day, will be produced tonight, with the original music. On Monday and Tuesday evening the bill will consist of the musical comedy of The Black Domino, by Charles Mathews, in which all the principal gems of Auber's opera of Le Domino Noir will be sung by Lady Don, and the new burlesque of Prince Florizel.

Metropolitan Theatre.—On Saturday evening of last week Lucia di Lammermoor was performed to an overflowing house for the benefit of the Hebrew Ladies' Benevolent Society, which must have realized a very handsome addition to its resources. The cast of the opera, and its admirable interpretation, were the same as on two occasions already noticed.

Belisario was produced on Monday evening, furnishing an opportunity for the debut of Miss E. C. Brannan in the character of "Antouina," a part not so well suited for the purpose, we should think, as some others in which we hope to hear her during the season, the music being rather too heavy for her voice and style. In a musical point of view, however, her success was quite encouraging, and proved that she not only knew her part thoroughly, but was entirely capable of executing it with delicacy and precision; while her acting, though too intense and nervous, (as is very natural with a débutante of keen artistic temperament,) promised abundant material for culture and experience to work upon. Neither too lifeless on the one hand, nor too brazenly confident on the other, she is a singer who will surely, in our opinion, win success by dilligent application. We hope to have an early opportunity of hearing her again. The other characters in Belisario were ably sustained by Signora Bianchi, Signori Bianchi, Mancusi, and other members of the troupe.

Norma was given on Wednesday evening, with the same cast as on two previous occasions. Some of the concerted pieces were rendered with great spirit, and the leading artists were twice called before the curtain; but there were several mistakes arising from carelessness, which somewhat marred the performance; and the chorus and orchestra were several times quite out of tune.

Last night the first representation of Rossini's immortal Il Barbiere di Siviglia was given to a crowded house, and will be noticed more fully in our next issue. This evening Crispino a la Comare will be repeated.

Female Taste in Dress.—Taste in dress can scarcely lead its possessor astray, and is indeed, a moral guide. It is full of reminders and admonitions; nor can a woman dress herself in perfect taste without a distinct knowledge of her personal defects. A hundred fashions are pretty and charming in themselves; but she knows they are not for her, and resists them. They are forbidden by something in figure, complexion, station, age or character, which, though not flattering to her vanity, she does not permit herself to forget. Passion for dress is profuse and extravagant; taste in dress is full of wise, philosophical economies, knowing that the merit of decoration is not in its elaborate richness or expense, but in its adaptation. Taste in dress is essentially moderate and self-collected; never forgetting that the object of dress is not to exhibit itself, but its wearer; that all that the most splendid toilet has to do is to set off a noble, graceful, and winning presence, and itself to be lost in a pleasing or effective, or, it may be, dazzling general impression. Passion for dress is always intent on what others will think—or taking some new eye by storm; taste has self-respect, and, before all things, must satisfy its own notions of propriety and grace.

LITERARY GLEANINGS AND GOSSIP.

[This department is not designed to be strictly "critical," and will not supersede our usual book reviews; nor will it be limited to notices of new publications:]

"TRIED AND TRUE, OR LOVE AND LOYALTY," is the title of a new novel founded upon the war, by Mrs. Bella Z. Spencer, a lady well known in literary circles at the East, who has very recently become a resident of San Francisco. It is stated in the N. Y. Tribune of August 8th, that the first edition was exhausted in two weeks after its issue, a fact which would seem to afford evidence that the book contains elements of popularity. The scene of the story is laid in the South, which was the residence of the author from her early childhood up to her sixteenth year. During the progress of the war she also made frequent visits to the army of the South West, spent several weeks at Paducah during 1862, and afterwards spent two summers at Corinth; during the second of which her husband served as chief of staff under Gen. Dodge, then in command. During this time she says: "Many visits were made to the sick and wounded, and the miserable Refugees who swarmed through our lines. Many were the long horseback rides into the country, passing fearlessly beyond our pickets to any place which our fancy might select; and it is to such a life I owe what knowledge I possess of the suffering, wrong, and oppression of a people whose position was worse than that of the slave."

The following extracts will furnish an idea of the author's style, and the general character of the book:

AMONG THE WOUNDED.—A HOSPITAL SCENE.

She knelt beside a heavy, giant like fellow who lay with his bright eyes wide open and twinkling restlessly. A ball had passed through his right hand; that must be dressed first; then a deep flesh wound in the arm just above the elbow. These done he moved with some difficulty and displayed another flesh wound upon the right shoulder, beginning to canker for want of proper attention. "You see I couldn't git to that myself," he said grimly, "I fixed the others up in some sort o' shape; but this one was too high up."

"Do you tell me that you have had no one to care for you since receiving those wounds?"

"Nary! What's the use? I lost a power o' blood among 'em, but then I was a sight stronger than any of the other fellers round, an' I told the medicine chaps tc let me alone an' tend to 'em."

"You are a brave, unselfish man, and deserve to be rewarded! What regiment do you belong to?"

"Berge's sharpshooters. But you never mind. I don't want no promotion; I'm fightin' fur my ole woman an' the chillen, an' don't need to be paid fur it. Guess if we was all officers, thar wouldn't be any men to fight."

"Hurrah! you're a trump!" shouted a wild young fellow, lifting himself upon his sound arm to look at his comrade. "I say, Stevens, you'll wear a Corporal's bars before you know it, old fellow."

Those around laughed; Stevens grunted.

"Don't want 'em."

"A Lieutenant's then; they'll be better."

"Don't want 'em."

"A Captain's."

"Don't want 'em."

"Suppose, then, you take a Colouel's."

"Don't want 'em."

"What do you want, I'd like to know?"

"Want you to shet up yer jaw an' let a feller alone. If ye need 'em, I give ye all my chances to put a feather in yer cap."

"Now I think I have finished," said Astrea taking up her sponge and basin. "I hope you feel comfortable."

"Not quite," and he drew one foot up slowly. "I guess the rebs found my heels in spite of me, as they shot one purty nigh off." Astrea removed the bandages and revealed a terrible wound. A piece of shell still remained in it, which must have caused untold agony.

"I cannot dress it until this is out. Can you bear to have a slight operation? It is a wonder it is not past all help. I am not sure, indeed, that we can save your foot now."

"Hope there aint any more," spoke a quiet voice a little beyond them. "I should think a few mere shots would have left nothing of you."

"You see the advantage of being big," answered Stevens, stoutly. "It gives more space to work on, an' still leaves something fur the doctors."

"What is this you are saying, my man?" and Doctor Clarke stopped beside him.

"Nothing o' consequence; but I think this lady wants you to do something or other."

Astrea looked up.

"Here is a piece of shell in this wound which must come out," and she displayed it. He looked at the foot and then at the man.

"I think I heard somebody call you a 'trump' a moment ago. That is no name for you, if you have borne all this without complaint. I suppose you would not mind having it out, now?"

"As ye please."

The next extract shows that Gen. McPherson, so long a resident of San Francisco, is introduced into the story; in which, however, he makes one or two much longer speeches than most of his acquaintances will think quite characteristic of him:

A FREIGHT-TRAIN OF REFUGEES.

General McPherson rose and excused himself. He was superintendent of the military railroads at that time, and it was necessary for him to be present at the arrival and departure of every train.

Standing at the front windows, our party watched the train as it came in from Iuka, loaded heavily with freight and swarming with human beings black and white. Major Thornton laughed aloud as he saw the comical figures the poor wretches made as they began to clamber from their perches to the platform. They were but half-clothed, stiff, and cramped by their long ride in such an uncomfortable position. Huge bundles of clothing and bedding had been piled upon the top of cotton bales, and the smaller children, both white and black, were literally packed between them, as the only mode of travelling safely, never daring to move lest they should fall from the train. The little creatures had become perfectly helpless, and when set upon their feet, were unable to stand. Some cried piteously, while others sank mutely upon the floor, putting on most ludicrously long, grave faces.

"Look at McPherson," exclaimed Thornton suddenly. "I told him he would have a chance to exercise his benevolence."

They saw the General reaching up to aid an old negro who had been vainly striving to descend from his high seat. Catching the old man's arm he steadied him carefully until he was safely landed upon the platform. Then came the old woman, creeping over her bundles and in danger of falling with each new essay, until the General weary of delay, caught her in both hands and lifted her bodily from the train. A shout of laughter from Major Thornton caused him to look up reproachfully, his grave face expressive of genuine pity for the miserable beings thrown thus upon his mercy. That look showed him two other figures, and one face bright with approving smiles, while the other grave and sweet, was wet with tears which rolled slowly down her cheeks. It was enough. Had he needed any other reward than the approval of his own conscience, he found it in that brief glance, and the picture it left in his memory.

Ten Years of a Lifetime is the somewhat unsuggestive title of a new work of fiction by Mrs. Margaret Hosmer, of this city. Those who have read The Morrisons—much the best novel yet achieved by any California writer—will be pretty sure to extend a cordial welcome to a new book from the same author, and they will find in the present volume all the characteristics that made its predecessor so attractive. The style is very much above the average standard for popular fiction, and the characters are well conceived, and vigorously drawn. The following graceful bit of character-sketching and dialogue will furnish a good idea of the "quality" of Mrs. Hosmer's new book:

ADDIE'S IDEAS OF ART.

The dust was no sooner gathered up, and the little threshold mat laid in place again, than a slow and cautious step was heard upon the stairs, and an old man, with a bent head, apparently lost in thought, came quietly up and turned at the landing coming towards the open door. He had a mild, absent-looking face, with large, gentle, brown eyes, and a small, child-like mouth, that was fresh and rosy enough for a girl. His hair was very gray, but he was neither shrivelled nor wrinkled, and had a pleasant, cleanly look about his plain dress that was in unison with his fresh complexion and sweet and cheery voice. Addie recognized him with some displeasure and annoyance. "There now," she said, pettishly, "you're come back, so you are, just as I was beginning to get you dusted, and Kitty will blame me, and say I wasn't hurrying; and I don't want her to do so, for fear she won't take me out to-night."

The old gentleman glanced at the girl in mild surprise, then he laughed pleasantly. "Oh, you are afraid I'll be in your way," he said, "but I promise you I won't. I would go out again, but I had forgotten a bit of sky I promised for to day, and so I came back to get the colors ready, or I shall not have it in time."

"Ha, ha, ha!" laughed Addie, merrily, "I like to hear you talk, Mr. Siebert; it seems so funny to say you promised a bit of sky, as if any one could give a piece of heaven to any one else. But yours don't seem the least like the real thing, so I suppose it don't matter what or how you call it. Why don't you give it the deep-water look it has when you try to pierce it with your eye, so soft and clear and endlessly deep, while yours is a thick coat of blue, that would crack or scale away, but never melt under your look as the real sky does. Can't they do it at all?"

The painter stroked his chin while he followed the child's glance out of the open window.

"No," he said, softly and thoughtfully, "I have never seen it. God made the sky, my cricket, and man mixes paints."

"That isn't it," said Addie, decidedly, "and I'll tell you why. God made women and children, but you paint prettier ones, I think. They don't look like the real, but they're far, far prettier."

"Some day," said the artist, laughing, "I shall paint you, and then you'll do me justice, and not be so hard a critic."

"Could I be painted?" cried Addie; "would I make a picture? Oh, it would be such a funny one. I never saw such thin, brown hands in a painting and I wouldn't have them, either. I should make you do a beautiful, white, slender pair, with plenty of rich lace round the wrists."

"They wouldn't be true hands, then, cricket," said the painter, who had thrown off his coat in favor of a short jacket, in which he was now busy compounding colors, "and you know that is why you object to my skies."

"No, that is not it," said Addie, in strong dissent; "it wasn't because the sky you paint isn't like the real, because if you had made it prettier than the real one I shouldn't have minded it a bit. What I think is, that if you touch anything you ought to improve it; so I don't mean to be painted to look as I am, you know, but prettier—just as I would be if I could."

The great event, however, in the literary world, so far as works of fiction are concerned, is the appearance of a new novel by the author of Adam Bede and Romola. Felix Holt, the Radical, will in no wise detract from "George Elliot's" reputation. It is a production of amazing originality and power, and contains elements of a much wider popularity than most of the author's previous efforts. We believe there is no difference of opinion at all among judicious critics as to "George Elliot's" title to the very first place in the highest rank of contemporary female novelists. At any rate, it would, we think, seriously perplex the most ingenious literary advocate to frame an argument designed to dispute her absolute right of precedence. For subtlety and vigor of thought, for genuine healthy strength, both in the main idea and in all its collateral outgrowths, this novel is, to say the least, fully equal to the best of the day, whether produced by man or woman. But proof by example is better than mere critical disquisition, and our readers will judge for themselves as to the kind of stuff "George Elliot's" latest effort is made of by the following excerpts, though they can of course furnish no idea of the larger merits of the book, in the way of plot, and the delineation and gradual development of character:

THE MOTHER'S LOVE.

"Day after day, year after year, had yielded blanks; new cares had come, bringing other desires for results quite beyond her grasp, which must also be watched for in the lottery; and all the while the round-limbed pet had been growing into a strong youth, who liked many things better than his mother's caresses, and who had a much keener consciousness of his relation to her; the lizard's egg, that white, rounded, passive prettiness, had become a brown, darting, determined lizard. The mother's love is at first an absorbing delight, blunting all other sensibilities; it is an expansion of the animal existence; it enlarges the imagined range for self to move in: but in after years it can only continue to be joy, on the same terms as other long-lived love—that is by much suppression of self, and power of living in the experience of another."

The following sentences, selected almost at random, have the weight of apothegms, and are of a quality rarely found in novels: "A woman's hopes are woven of sunbeams; a shadow annihilates them."

"Under protracted ill, every living creature will find something that makes a comparative ease; and even when life seems woven of pain will convert the fainter pang into a desire."

"Truth-vendors, like medicine-vendors, usually recommend swallowing. When a man sees his livelihood in a pill or a proposition he likes to have orders for the dose, and not curious enquiries."

Felix Holt's brief and brusque criticism of Byron is judiciously put into the mouth of a young Radical:

"A misanthropic debauchee, whose notion of a hero was that he should disorder his stomach and despise mankind. . . . be a gentleman of unspeakable woes, who employs a hairdresser, and looks seriously at himself in a glass . . . his Corsairs and Renegades, his Alps and Manfreds, are the most paltry puppets that were ever pulled by the strings of lust and pride."

We should like—did space permit—to give our readers a specimen of the amazingly nervous dialogue that abounds in this book, and that exhibits a closer approximation to the dialogue of Scott than is to be found in any of our contemporary novelists; but we must close with a single additional quotation:

WHAT IS STRENGTH?

"The stronger will always rule, say some, with an air of confidence which is like a lawyer's flourish, forbidding exceptions or additions. But what is strength? Is it blind willfulness that sees no terrors, no many-linked consequences, no bruises and wounds of those whose cords it tightens? Is it the narrowness of a brain that conceives no needs differing from its own, and looks to no results beyond the bargains of to-day; that tugs with emphasis for every small purpose, and thinks it weakness to exercise the sublime power of self-renunciation? There is a sort of subjection which is the peculiar heritage of largeness and of love; and strength is often only another name for willing bondage to irremediable weakness."

Among the more noteworthy publications received here by the last two steamers, and to be found at the great bookstores on Montgomery street, are the following:

"History of the Atlantic Telegraph," by Henry M. Field, D. D.; "Six Months at the White House with Abraham Lincoln," by F. B. Carpenter; "Venetia Life," by William D. Howells; "Inside, a Chronicle of Secession," by Geo. F. Harrington; "Culture of the Grape," by W. C. Strong; Elster's Folly," by Mrs. Henry Wood; "Spare Hours," by John Brown, M. D., second series, Boston, Tickner & Fields, containing fifteen articles, essays, and criticisms on various subjects; "New Physiognomy, or Signs of Character," by Samuel R. Wells, with more than one thousand illustrations, New York, Fowler & Wells, an interesting collection of very good portraits whether one accepts the theories of the author or not; "The House by the Churchyard," a novel, by J. Sheridan Le Fame, author of "Wylder's Hand," "Uncle Silas," etc., New York, Carleton; "Royal Truths," by Henry Ward Beecher, Boston, Ticknor & Fields, reported from an English collection of extracts from Mr. Beecher's Sermons, which went through six editions before Mr. B. ever heard of the book; "The Montanas, or Under the Stars," a romance, by Sallie J. Haucock of Kentucky, New York, Carleton; "Our Neighbors in the Corner House," a novel, by T. S. Arthur, New York, Carleton; "English Travellers and Italian Brigands," a Narrative of Capture and Captivity, by W. J. C. Moens, map and illustrations, New York, Harper & Brothers; "Our Refugee Household," by Mrs. Louise Clack of Louisiana, New York, Blelock & Co., a war romance: "The South," Its Battle-Fields and Ruined Cities, a Journey through the Desolated States and Talks with the People, by J. T. Trowbridge, author of "Neighbor Jackwood," "Cudjo's Cave," etc., full page illustrations and maps, Hartford, L. Stebbins.

THE income returns in Chicago foot up less than two-thirds as much as they did one year ago.

SLEEPING.

THE violet eyes lie shaded deep,
Beneath the white lids closing;
The cheeks flushed faint with rosy sleep,
The dimpled hands reposing—
The sweet red lips held half apart—
Smiles coming and retreating;
God bless and keep the little heart,
Within the white breast beating,
As baby sleeps.

The tiny, restless, busy feet
Lie still in cradle nestling—
The clinging arm full white and sweet
Upon the pillow resting;
Close out the burst of noise and glare—
Harsh sound, and harsher seeming—
And let the soft, sweet Summer air
Float gently through his dreaming,
As baby sleeps.

And life and time go hurrying on,
Their varied meshes weaving;
And Heaven is lost, and Heaven is won,
And joy gives place to grieving,
The Summer comes, the Summer flies,
And brings the Autumn's glory—
While still my darling's violet eyes
Repeat the same old story—
That baby sleeps.

I sit and muse, while yet apace
The future years are winging,
And think what gifts of love and grace
Their hidden hands are bringing;
What paths the little feet may tread—
What work the hands be moulding—
What crown awaits my darling's head,
When heart and soul unfolding,
No longer sleep.

Ah! hope has many a fairy theme,
From her sweet lips unfolding—
And life has many a golden dream,
That some fond heart is holding:
But none so glad as those that rise,
In light and beauty blending,
To shine before a mother's eyes,
Above the cradle bending,
While baby sleeps.

Boston Pilot.

DECIDED PEOPLE.

AT first sight it may perhaps appear somewhat odd that self-satisfaction should be impartially distributed throughout all classes and orders of mind, that, as Hume puts it, it should be alike within the reach of the wise man and of the fool. It would seem only in accordance with the eternal fitness of things that there ought to be some sort of proportion between the consciousness of merit and the success which has called it forth; that, for instance, a statesman who has served his country should enjoy a stronger sense of self-esteem than a tradesman who has invented a patent for destroying fleas. As a matter of fact, experience points rather the other way. The more self-satisfied a man is, the more difficult it is, as a rule, for others to see what he has to satisfy him; and we may perhaps go further than Hume's statement that self-satisfaction belongs both to the wise man and the fool, and add that the fool generally gets the lion's share. A little reflection, however, shows that the too frequent disproportion between self-satisfaction and desert, however paradoxical in theory, in practice works well. In life there is so much more of what is commonplace than of what is heroic, there are so many more fleas to be destroyed than States to be saved, that the world would never get through its everyday work if each workman put no more than its just value upon his own share. The poor Frenchman who killed himself rather than live a grocer might have been a highly useful member of the body politic if he had believed that the welfare of society depends chiefly upon the delicate adjustment of its sugar to its sand, and that there is no nobler calling than that of parcelling out tea and figs; just as Molière's dancing-master believed that "la danse" is the mistress of all arts, because it teaches to avoid "false steps"—dangerous alike to kingdoms and quadrilles. The more twopenny and trivial a man's duties, the greater perhaps the need for his belief in his own importance to the State, if he is to discharge them con amore. A cock will crow all the more lustily if he believes, despite the satirical Mrs. Poyser, that the sun has risen for the express purpose of hearing him. Some such theory of self satisfaction is certainly wanted for various cases in which there is a fussiness of self-glorification bearing no sort of proportion to the achievement which has called it forth. And the mistake of this fussiness is that, by claiming more merit than it deserves, it provokes, by a natural reaction, the desire to concede to it less merit than is really its due.

It is a great thing to be able to decide off-hand what you will have for dinner, without risking a twinge of remorse at discovering too late that, having ordered roast, you are after all more likely to enjoy boiled; a great thing to be able to decide that on Wednesday fortnight you will take the 5.40 train, conscious that, through fair weather and foul, you will adhere to your decision; a great thing to be able to determine, after five minutes' conversation with a stranger, whether you mean to hate him or like him for life. There is no end to the small uncertainties and doubts which people are spared who are never at a loss what course to take. No one would dare to question the merits and advantages of decision if decided people were only content to take something like a fair estimate of their own superiority, and to leave weaker brethren alone. But their unconscionable aggressiveness forces even the mildest nature into rebellion, and obtrudes irreverent doubts as to whether their superiority is really so great as they would wish us to believe. They cannot find language to express their contemptuous pity for the unhappy man who, as they phrase it, "does not know his own mind;" who can leave it an open question where he is going to dine, and who, if he were told that his single vote would determine the fate of the Ministry, would anxiously inquire the latest moment at which it would be necessary for him to decide whether he ought or ought not to bring the Opposition in. Such a man is, in their eyes, a poor, weak creature, with no settled views, a sort of asinus Buridani, perpetually starving between two bundles of hay, because he cannot make up his mind which bundle to choose. It is this wholesale and one-sided contempt that provokes the question whether after all, there is not someting to be said for the much-abused weakness of indecision. In the first place, we are inclined to suspect that indecision comes in for a good deal of undeserved contempt merely because few people are at the pains to discriminate between the two very different sources from which it springs. There is an indecision of the moral and of the intellectual nature, and though the two are in themselves as distinct as they well can be, they are in their results so similar that they are too commonly confounded, and each has to bear the praise or dispraise really due to the other. Perhaps the commonest kind of indecision is that which is due to a defect of the moral nature. It is certainly the commonest among young people, although by no means confined to youth. There are persons whose whole happiness in life seems to hang upon the approbation of others, who cannot speak or move without considering whether this or that neighbor will like their looks and gestures, and who are cut to the quick if they hear that Mr. A. pooh-poohs their conversational powers, or Mrs. A. sneers at their clothes. The agonies which undergraduates and school-girls endure from causes of this kind will perhaps never be fully revealed until the Judgment Day has laid all human weaknesses bare; for the sufferings are not of a kind to command respect, or even to conciliate sympathy, and the more therefore the victims suffer, the less likely are they to make their sorrows known. Mr. Dickens illustrates this temperament, with his usual powers of broad and humorous caricature, by the overwhelming difficulty Mr. Toots experienced in deciding whether he ought or ought not to button the last button of his dress waistcoat. Having formed no fixed principles of art, or having at least no confidence in his own ubility to apply them to dress-clothes, Mr. Toots weakly took his tone from his fellow-guests, and, as each arrival displayed a fresh arrangement of buttons, was kept playing wildly upon his waistcoat, as if it had been a musical instrument. Indecision of this sort is no doubt a poor sort of quality enough, and may deserve all the contemptuous pity which decided people heap upon it. It has its root in fear—the undue fear of what our neighbors may think or say of us; and it would be well for the world if it were never found in persons older or more experienced than Mr. Toots. Unluckily the old gentleman in the fable, who was so anxious to please everybody that he pleased nobody, has too commonly his counterpart in real life. Macaulay gives a vigorous sketch of such a character in General Conway, who, "afraid of disobliging the King, afraid of being abused in the newspapers, afraid of being thought factious if he went out, afraid of being thought interested if he stayed in, afraid of everything, and afraid of being known to be afraid of anything," presented a laughable mixture of great physical courage with the weakest moral timidity. An undecided character of this kind is no doubt a fair object for compassion or mirth.

But there is another sort of indecision which is purely intellectual, not moral, or which, where it is related to the moral nature, is so as the result of excessive conscientiousness, not of undue fear about the opinions of others. A man may be utterly and helplessly at a loss what course he ought to take in a given case, without even bestowing a thought upon the verdict likely to be passed upon his conduct by his fellows, or at any rate without allowing the verdict to have more weight than a rational man will always assign to it. Rapid decision may be a proof rather of weakness than of strength. The mere faculty of keeping the mind fairly balanced between two or more courses implies a certain degree of intellectual power which some are wholly without. Whately complains that there are "persons who can no more refrain from deciding immediately, and with full conviction, on one side of a question, than they could continue to stand, after having lost their equilibrium, in a slanting position, like the famous tower of Pisa." They cannot keep the mind erect in statiouary suspense. The case resembles that of a man walking along a very narrow plank, who must fall if he attempts to stand still, unless he is a bit of a Blondin, and knows how to balance himself. The quick jump of such people to a conclusion does not imply that their conclusion is a good one, but that they cannot rest without some conclusion or other. It is a significant fact that women, whose education is far less fitted than that of men to develop this power of preserving mental equipoise, are usually loudest in their praises of decision. In some the admiration amounts to a frantic idolatry, which will not tolerate a hero unless he be decided, even though he be only a decided donkey. We remember in a lady's novel coming upon a hero whose very railway-rug bore testimony, by its strong straight lines of black and gray, to his character for decision, and of course the rich and beautiful heroine fell down straightway at his feet and worshipped—probably feeling, like the opossum in the American story, that a man whose resolution determined even the pattern of his railway-rug must sooner or later bring her down, and that she may as well save him trouble by at once capitulating. If this be true of railway-rugs, it is awful to reflect how much more applicable it must be to clothes; and that a man's chance of securing a rich and beautiful heroine may be lost, and his happiness wrecked, merely because—thanks to a feeble-minded tailor—an irresolute pattern is permitted to wander vacillatingly down his legs. It must have been a woman that invented the story of the recluse who, suddenly resolving upon matrimony, rang the bell, and proposed to the cook. The cook, cursed with the fatal weakness of indecision, hesitated; so he rang the bell a second time, and proposed to the housemaid, who accepted him on the spot, and, as the just reward of her decision—herein lies the moral of the tale—lived happily ever afterwards. It is no doubt a very lucky arrangement that women should set so much store upon decision, inasmuch as it is usually their province to deal with minor matters of life, about which it really signifies very little how they are decided, so long as they are decided somehow. A habit of mind once formed cannot always be used or laid aside just as the occasion requires, and a man constitutionally prone to ponder over all the bearings of an important question is apt, from mere force of habit, to spend an absurdly disproportionate time over questions which ought to be settled off hand. Hence the readiness with which a man of sense resigns himself to the guidance of a woman in the lesser concerns of life. The intrepidity with which she at once takes upon her own shoulders the responsibility of ordering the household, arranging six months beforehand the autumn tour, or conducting a delicate dispute on the question of precedence with the doctor's wife, makes her invaluable to him. Unhappily, the same fatal law of habit which afflicts him with ridiculous hesitation in matters trivial gives her perilous promptitude in matters grave. If he takes an absurdly long time in choosing his dinner, she often takes as dangerously short a time in making a choice which may affect her happiness for life.

Self-satisfied people decide easily, for the simple reason that, be their decision what it may, it is sure to please them. If the results turn out badly, so much the worse for the results; the decision itself was their own, and therefore must be sound. There are people who seem gifted with the power of getting satisfaction out of any thing or action whatsoever, provided it belongs to themselves. They will tell you that they never give a penny to a beggar, or that for twenty years they have eaten roast beef on Sunday, with the air of men who by so doing have laid their fellow-creatures, not to say their Creator, under a special obligation. Their simple creed is a personal optimism; whatever they do is best. Their attitude towards indecision differs from that of the man who cannot remain in suspense between two conclusions, for they never even wish for more than one.—London Saturday Review.

THE NEEDLE GUN.—It is certain that the fire of the needle-gun is terrible in its swiftness. In the assault against Klum all the leading officers and men fell as they pushed up the hill. I have been told that a cavalry regiment breaking into a charge at the distance of 600 yards had been so pelted with the hail of these bullets that more than one-third of every squadron in front, horses and men, were down before they could deliver a sabre cut; that the second line, tumbling about over the men and horses of the first squadron, were similarly smitten with annihilating fire: and that when the regiment withdrew on the flanks in disorder, the plain over which they had advanced was piled with their corpses."—Dr. Russel, in the London Times.

THINK.—Thought engenders thought. Place one idea upon paper—another will follow it, and still another, until you have written a page. You cannot fathom your mind. There is a well of thought there which has no bottom. The more you draw from it, the more clear and fruitful it will be. If you neglect to think for yourself, and use other people's thoughts—giving them utterance only, you will never know what you are capable of. At first your ideas may come out in lumps—homely and shapeless; but no matter—time and perseverance will arrange and refine them. Learn to think, and you will learn to write; the more you think, the better you express your ideas.

PARIS FASHIONS.

A LETTER from Paris reports the following changes in the world of fashion :

A few weeks ago, ladies who could afford to wear large nine or ten flounced muslin petticoats discontinued their crinolines. Of course this made but very slight difference in the circumference either at the bottom or top of the skirt, as all the petticoats were so gored as to be quite plain on the hips. The weather is now so warm that so great a weight of skirts would be unbearable ; therefore, at the present moment, under thin dresses, one thick petticoat and two thin ones are worn over a small crinoline, under thick skirts two petticoats, the one next the cage being always white. There are two forms of crinoline worn,—one round and rather short for out-of-door dresses when looped up ; the other rather larger, and with a train, for indoor dress or when the skirt is allowed to rest on the ground. The petticoats are now so much shown that they are generally more ornamented than the dresses. For morning-toilets, they are generally made either of the same material as the dress and paletot, or of cachemire, the color of the ornaments on the dress. For more dressy occasions the petticoats are made of white or colored silk. The petticoats worn under thin dresses are most elegant,—little gauffeced flounces edged with lace ; perpendicular tucks, alternating with embroidered insertion of Cluny ; medallions of embroidery or guipure, over colored ribbons ; in short every day introduces some new and elegant manner of trimming them. When the dress is looped over a petticoat for out-of-door wear, the petticoat should not touch the ground, but be merely a short distance from it. In some cases the under-skirt is made full length, with a train, but then it is intended for a double skirt, and not merely a petticoat.

For morning wear the paletots are almost always of the same material as the dress. They are sometimes made loose and short, with or without a hood, but always with sleeves. With this form, a white body is worn with the skirt. When there is a body the skirt, to obviate the necessity of wearing an extra covering out of doors, a pepulum basque is made separate from the body, and, being sewn on to a narrow ribbon, is fastened round the body under the waistband. The small black cachemire loose paletots, spotted with beads, are not now so elegant or so fashionable as the small circulars of the same material, ornamented with beads, or edged either with a bead fringe or a lace flounce.

Muslin and other thin dresses are generally accompanied by mantles of the same. These can be made either circular cloaks, only reaching just below the waist, or small paletots quite loose or demi ajuste, according to the taste of the wearer. When made in these materials, the waistband should never be worn outside.

THE MAELSTROM.—Much has been written concerning this famous whirlpool, which lies off the coast of Norway. A recent examination by an official commission appointed by the Government of Norway, report the following facts concerning its true nature : "When the wind is steady, and not too violent, boats may venture upon it at ebb-tide in summer, when it is still for about half an hour. At the point half way between flood and ebb, it is most violent, and boats would then be in danger. At certain times, it may be passed at any state of the tide by steamers and by large ships with a steady wind. But in winter and in storms it would be highly dangerous for any vessel to attempt to pass the Maelstrom. Its direction and violence are in a high degree dependent on wind and weather. When there blows on the sea a storm from the west, the stream in winter runs continually to the east at the rate of six knots an hour, without changing its direction with the rising or falling tide ; and, if at such a time the tide is rising, the stream becomes excessively violent, and entirely unnavigable for steamers or any other craft. At certain states of the wind and tide in winter, the whole stream boils in mighty whirls, against which the largest steamer could not successfully contend. Those whirls, however, would not draw vessels to the bottom, as was formerly believed, but would destroy them by dashing them against the rocks, or, in case of small vessels, by filling them, and thus causing them to founder."

The old stories of the terrors and dangers of the great whirlpool are thus proved incorrect. Indeed it has very little of terror to the inhabitants of the coast, who laugh at the tales of travellers concerning it.

ITALIAN CITIES.—The population of the eight principal cities in the kingdom of Italy at the beginning of this year is thus stated in a recent official document :—Naples, 447,065 : Turin, 204,715 ; Milan, 196,109 ; Palermo, 194,463 ; Genoa, 137,986 ; Florence, 114,363 ; Bologna, 109,305 ; Messina, 103,324.

A NEW HAVEN company has begun the manufacture of a compressed stone for building purposes. It is made of sand, pulverized quartz, and silicate of soda, and hardens within twenty-four hours from the consistency of paste to the solidity of stone.

AN IMPORTANT SUBJECT.

ONE of the most important as well as one of the most interesting things to every landholder is the proper arrangement of his residence. Especially is this so to persons living in the suburbs of our cities, or on farms. They are very careful to have their dwellings as neat and handsome as their means will admit, and spare no expense to make them comfortable and pleasant. But there is one thing about which they are not careful, and which is always a fruitful source of disease, and that is the location of their dwellings. They generally select the most beautiful and attractive spot, not reflecting that this is not always the most healthy location.

For the benefit of those of our readers who may be interested in this subject, we purpose laying before them a few practical hints concerning the matter.

The great cause of unhealthy houses is the prevalence of a noxious gas known as miasm, which is generated from decomposed vegetation, through the action of heat and dampness. From what is known concerning this gas we can assert that miasm prevails in hot weather ; that miasm cannot exist as a cause of disease in cold weather ; and that miasm exists only as a cause of disease at a heat of over eighty degrees Farenheit which is required to reduce the vegetation to a state sufficient to produce the gas. In dry localities it cannot exist, because all three of the conditions of dampness, vegetation, and heat, are necessary to its presence. Therefore, if one builds in a dry, well drained locality, his house will be healthy. If he builds over a "filling," on "bottom-land," "made lands," where streams of water have been in the habit of depositing mud and vegetable matter, he will certainly have sickness in his family, unless a system of perfect draining is resorted to.

Ponds, sluggish streams, marshes, or dam meadows near a dwelling, will produce disease if the prevailing winds blow from them to the house, thus carrying the miasm to the dwelling. Miasm is not supposed to pass a swift-running stream, and hence, if you build near a watercourse, take the high, rolling side in preference to the low one, no matter how fertile the latter may be.

Again, if building on an elevation, let it be on an abrupt steep hill, rather than on an eminence which slopes gradually to the water. The latter is more beautiful, it is true, but it is also more dangerous. Miasm is generally checked in its course by a bold bluff, but it rolls up a sloping hill like a cloud up a mountain. A thick hedge or row of trees, at least a hundred yards from the dwelling, sometimes forms a guard against malaria ; and the thicker and higher it is, the better.

If you cannot drain a pond situated in dangerous proximity to your house, it is best to keep it covered with two or three feet of water, as miasm cannot rise through such a depth of water.

Thus, to sum up what we have said, it will be seen that miasm cannot cross a wide, rapid stream ; that it is absorbed by thick, living, luxuriant foliage ; that it cannot travel against the wind ; and that it cannot ascend a steep, high hill.

Every one should try to make the ground upon which their houses are built perfectly dry, and should exercise a similar care for the country surrounding their homes.

Miasm being a gas is of course influenced by heat and cold. The latter condenses it, and causes it to sink to the ground ; the former rarefies it, and causes it to rise. In the early and late portions of the day, therefore, it is most dangerous, being at an elevation at which it can be breathed by man. In the warmer parts of the day it is too high to be injurious.

In the South the people living in the sickly regions are exempt from the effects of malaria provided they are careful to use a very simple means of protection. Each one there has a cup of hot strong coffee, with milk, brought to his bedside before he rises in the morning. This strengthens and fortifies the system, and enables it to resist the effects of the malaria.

The habit of sitting in the open air very early in the morning, and late in the afternoon, is dangerous, because at those times the miasmatic vapors are so near the ground that they may be breathed.

By a proper care, and a little thoughtfulness, the dangers arising from this terrible enemy, which is present in almost every portion of our country, may be avoided, and we may escape the many fevers and other similar diseases to which we are now subject.

"EARLY rising contributes as surely to personal beauty as the dawn does to the beauty of the world." We have some doubts about this, but if you persist in taking the advice of the poets and literary men, most of whom never see the sun rise themselves, be sure and eat a cracker and drink a cup of hot coffee before you venture out, particularly if you live in a fever-and-ague country.

IN consequence of the singular success of his paper, Emile de Girardin has given a dinner to the newspaper men of Paris. We hope to be able to observe a similar occasion in regard to THE CALIFORNIAN some time.

LOVE OF BEAUTY IN THE FRENCH.—It is quite certain that unless you go into the very haunts of vice, where misery is born and bred, you will never see any in Paris. The boot-black, from the peculiar nature of his occupation, appears to be on less familiar terms with soap and water than any other of the human family, and in England and America holds his rags and dirt as prerogatives. But the Paris boot-black is always a man ; he is always clad in a uniform generally of blue plush, and any lady might shake hands with him without glove and without fear. His box is very large, and he carries a camp stool, which supersedes the necessity of balancing on one leg during the process of polishing. When asked what is due them they invariably reply :

"What you please."

The fee is about five cents, but I tried one once with a one cent piece, to see how much sincerity there was in his "what you please." Off came his hat—down went his bow—and you might have supposed, by his actions, that I had given him a franc.

The workmen have also a uniform, or they all dress alike with white pants and blue blouses. Instead of poor stuff, in fluttering rags of every hue, vests wrong side out, and grandfathers' coats on small boys, one sees in the French laborers, a respectable and really picturesque company. I think there must be some law against rags, for the very beggars wear the same white pants and blue frocks, cheap and coarse, but decent looking until entirely worn out. The women who sell gritcracks at street corners, and even the fat fishmongers in their greasy stalls, looking fresh and blooming as possible in their white caps and clean calico. The very herrings seemed graceful under their touch, though they had arms like Amazons. It was wonderful to see into what a garden the vegetable market could be transformed, merely by the arrangement of carrots and cabbages. Workmen, fishmongers, beggars and all had flowers. It does not seem like real life. You are constantly saying, "this is theatrical," "this is like ideal state life, where everybody is romantic. Is it possible that these are real men and women, or is all a dream that so bewilders me."

Then you walk through the gardens of the Tuileries again, where hundreds of women have brought their families to pass the day under the shades of the trees. There the children of the rich and the poor play together, but there is no squabbling or rolling in the dirt, no screams of delight or of fear. —Boston Traveller.

PROGRESS IN THE PRINTING ART.—While in Philadelphia, the other day, we saw realized the dream of inventors for the last hundred years—a printing press that is self-feeding and capable of working both sides of a sheet at the same time.

It is well known to all conversant with printing in the slightest degree, that hitherto it has been necessary, upon the most improved presses, to have manual assistance in laying on the sheets to be printed, while a double impression has been thought hardly possible. Sometimes as many as six or eight persons are employed in the former service, especially on the cylinder or fast presses now so common for daily papers of large circulation, like the Express. But for the press of which we speak, which is in the Inquirer office, and which is the invention of William Bullock, of Philadelphia, the paper is fed by machinery in continuous sheets, each about one mile long, is printed on both sides at the same time, and is cut off and piled in regular heaps, without any manual aid. The Bullock press prints fifteen thousand copies of the paper on both sides, equivalent to thirty thousand single impressions per hour. To superintend this press requires one pressman and two assistants.

In this connection it may be mentioned that there is in Philadelphia an establishment for the conversion of poplar wood into paper, which is also a great success. The patentee of the process is John Dinou. The pulp works are very extensive. The great feature is the economy in the chemicals, which disintegrate the wood and bleach the pulp.

Excellent printing paper is made with thirty per cent. of wood pulp and twenty per cent. of straw pulp. From twelve to fifteen tons of wood pulp are turned out daily. The works have but recently gone into operation. A poplar tree has been converted into paper in the space of five hours.—Commonwealth.

THE Dutch village of Brock sets an example to the world. It is said to be kept so clean that boys are hired to scare away the flies from the principal streets. The inhabitants hate dirt ; and one woman, we are told, died of pure chagrin because she could not scour a black man white. Washington Irving gave a quaint description of the universal spotlessness of the place. He said no vehicle of any kind was permitted to approach nearer than the outside edge of the village, lest it should defile the well-scoured pavements. The cows, when driven home from the rich pastures for the winter, were provided with well-built houses, painted and maintained in perfect order, the floor being scrubbed and polished every day. What a refuge Brock would be in cholera times, with none of the long accumulated dirt of New York, and none of the Church Street odors of Boston—a retreat as romantic as the Happy Valley of Rasselas.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. BOGARDUS, C. H. WEBB. } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 8, 1866.

WANTED.—Agents to canvass the city for THE CALIFORNIAN. Apply at the office, 532 Merchant street.

FULL volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $4 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

TRAVELLING AGENT.—MR. O. P. TRUESDELL is our authorized Agent to receive subscriptions, and appoint agencies for THE CALIFORNIAN.

THE APPROACHING CRISIS IN ENGLAND.

IT must for some time have become clear to the perception of all thoughtful persons who take pains to keep themselves informed in regard to public matters, that England is rapidly approaching the verge of a great political crisis. For several years symptoms have not been wanting that have unmistakably indicated the necessity of speedy reform as the only means of averting bloody revolution. English character differs from French character, yet both partake of the passions and the infirmities common to our nature. Causes similar to those that led to the French Revolution may produce the violent subversion of the existing order of things in England, and some at least of those causes are already at work.

Unless we mistake greatly, the formidable riot in London of July 23d, is destined to become as important a historical event as the collisions between the townspeople and the soldiers in Boston, that preceeded the battle of Lexington.

Perhaps the most ominous feature of the whole affair, was the method and deliberation with which the people set themselves to oppose the government. The English masses have always been characterized by a reverence for law that verged upon superstition. No matter how grievous the oppression to which they were subjected, no matter how insufferable the provocation; like Sampson in Romeo and Juliet, they have been fain to say to the powers that be, "We do not bite our thumbs at you," unless they could enjoy the clear assurance that "the law is on our side."

But this blind respect for authority seems to have been strangely weakened of late. There is an inquiring, questioning, self-respecting and self-asserting spirit abroad among the lower orders of the English people that is well calculated to create uneasiness among the "privileged classes." It is evident from the details of this great London riot that a sinister Jacobinical feeling has been aroused, which has less respect for the constable and the magistrate than for abstract id as of right and justice. This state of things is very un-English, and it bodes no good to a system whose only safeguard has long been the hereditory veneration of an oppressed and suffering majority for certain traditional ideas. Evidently the English masses have, to a certain extent, become Americanized. When the leaders of a London "mob" have come to making argumentative speeches, in which they talk about "trying the question whether the parks are the property of the Crown or of the people, it is time to prepare for changes compared with which all previous reforms are of slight consequence. But perhaps the most significant circumstance connected with the riot, is to be found in the tone of John Stuart Mill's speech on the occasion in the House of Commons. Mr. Mill thought that "the noble Lords and honorable gentlemen on the ministerial side of the House did not fully estimate the seriousness of the occasion, and the direct consequences that might result from the step which they had taken. * * * Already the newspaper scribes, who were supporting the Government, were declaring that no open air meetings ought to be tolerated in the metropolis. He advised the Government to adopt that declaration, and he promised them that in such an event they would have to encounter resistance of a very different kind from that they had as yet encountered."

This language admits of no other interpretation than as a distinct threat of revolution in case the Government shall dare to attempt to enforce its own view of the question at issue; and it is such language as has not been used in the House of Commons by any Englishman during this generation. Coming from such a man as Mr. Mill, it must be considered as possessing no ordinary significance.

A RECENT FRENCH RELIGIOUS WRITER.*

A MORAL and religious Frenchman would be an anomaly in modern civilization. Morals and religion appertain particularly to the conduct and business of life. Their growth is the result of inward culture and experience, but it is the culture and experience of the heart, for they depend for their development comparatively little upon the presence or strength of the intellect. The French are eminently an intellectual people. The domain of their research is without any limit, and whatever is the impression of their lives, their active intellect does not find any subject without the reach of their contemplation. They are a people of ideas and theories, and they are great in whatever department they indicate as a proper field for abstract thought. They are especially great in those departments which are the fields of pure thought unsullied by the interference of any passion or sentiment of the heart. In the mathematical sciences no other people claim an equality with them. In the natural sciences they have furnished some of the most eminent names in history. In philosophy they have produced the most eminent thinkers; and among the most prominent schools of philosophy to-day are found those which acknowledge French scholars as their heads. And it will not be generally denied, that in the departments of the sciences and philosophy, our libraries would not be complete or supplied with its most valuable contributions without a selection from eminent writers of France.

The French, however, do not confine their intellectual researches to these studies. They confess with infinite courtesy the existence of the heart, but it is rather one of the ornaments than a part of the substance of true life, a subject fit only for the most delicate and polite allusion, but concerning which no urbanity of expression is to be taken as pure and genuine feeling. They have really no comprehension of the sentiment of love or the domestic affections, and, reasonably enough, no word for "home," which is based upon the active existence of those sentiments. We do not look into their literature for the highest poetry, for although the French mind has been sufficiently exercised in that direction, yet into the best poetry there are elements whose source is the human heart, and therefore they have failed to produce any great poem which can be favorably compared with any of the grand epics which are found in the other languages of Europe. The French people have never, as we might expect, given their best thought to the study of religion or theology; and for the best works upon either of those subjects we should select from the writers of other people's. Not that that people have not had their ideas of religion, their theologic dogmas, their national church establishment, their religious revolutions, their "persecutions for righteousness' sake," but these have not arisen out of the longing desires of the individual hearts of the people, but were rather the natural products of the restless intellectual action of the people—the concordance of the active mind of France upon the great subjects of religion and theology, with its activity upon those topics of inquiry, which it has most readily and congenially pursued. If occasionally a work of a strictly religious character has appeared in French literature, it will be found to be less the manifestation of great religious ideas than the restless aspiration for the complete development of a scholastic thought—the anxious inquiry into the true solution of an intellectual problem.

The volume upon "The Apostles" is the second which M. Renan has put forth in the pursuit of his studies into the History of the Origin of Christianity. The first volume upon "The Life of Jesus" left the minds of men sufficiently prepared for the reception of any work however startling in its tone and development. As a religious work, "The Life of Jesus" was generally confessed to be entirely without the sympathies of people educated to believe the long settled dogmas of the church. By religious veterans it was considered false in its theories of Christ, unsustained by the facts of history, dangerous in its conclusions, and in its teachings prejudicial to the success and interests of the Christian Religion. As an intellectual product, it was the work of one of the most learned scholars of France, singularly fascinating in its style, startling in its bold interpretations of history, unique in its conclusions concerning the force and circumstance of Jesus' life. It was the feat of a mental harlequin, whose every successive movement was startlingly queer though dangerous, and left many with the impression of a wonderful exhibition of intellectual gymnastics.

Those who found any intellectual want met by the first volume of M. Renan will read the present volume with avidity, and will be but a little less pleased than before. That the volume will have numerous readers there is no doubt, for besides those whose religious wants are met by intellectual solutions of old problems, and who are in accord with the thought of Renan, and those who would keep pace with the progress of religious thought, others will grasp it as a piece of the forbidden fruit, the sweeter for being so. To say the volume is equally dangerous with the first would be the surest endorsement to those who have never known any intellectual freedom, and who will run the risk of danger in the taste of the bewildering cup.

From the study of M. Renan's "Life of Jesus," the reader goes away impressed with the stature of a man—not a God—with such a stature of Jesus as few, who had not given the years of intense thought of the author to the subject, would ever by their own logical deductions have obtained. The study of "The Apostles" leaves on the mind somewhat new impressions, but less vivid and less startling than that which necessarily follows a careful pursuit of the author's studies in the former volume. M. Renan promises and has already in press the third volume of his "History of the Origin of Christianity," which is the "Life of Saint Paul." The present volume intimates Renan's opinion of that person who has figured so largely in Christian history. It is a safe deduction from our knowledge of his works already published, that the Paul of Renan will not be the Paul of the catechism, and will not resemble in an eminent degree any of the individuals who have been canonized and indicated upon the calendar of the Saints.

*THE APOSTLES.—By Ernest Renan—membre l'Istitute—author of "The Life of Jesus," etc., etc., translated from the original French. New York: Carleton, Publisher, 413 Broadway. Paris: Michel Levy Freres. San Francisco: A Roman & Co.—1866.

OBITUARY NOTICES.

THE phrase, "He occupies a nameless grave," has a sad sound. The feeling which prompts people to erect a stone "in memory of" a relation or friend who has passed from earth, is a very natural one. They are unwilling that the memory of one who was dear to them while on earth should perish. The same feeling often prompts editors of newspapers to write obituary notices. Sometimes it were better that the editor should not call in the public to share his grief over the death of a friend. An obituary notice, which was in very bad taste, appeared in the local column of the Alta on Thursday. The telegraph brought the news that a gambler was shot by his mistress in a drinking saloon in Chicago. There was nothing in this intelligence to excite the sorrow of the public of San Francisco. We find an attempt to stimulate their grief in a paragraph in the local column in which the virtues and good deeds of George Trussel, the gambler, are set forth: "He was a young man of fine natural abilities, fine appearance, and pleasing address, and had he put his talents to a proper use, he was capable of doing credit to any profession and adorning any position in respectable society. Some time since he shot one of the editors of the Chicago Times, on account of an attack upon him, made by that paper, but did not inflict a fatal wound. Like William Chapman, who was killed in this city, he had at least two traits of character worthy of admiration—devotion to his country and liberality."

The fact of the subject of this obituary notice having attempted to murder one of the editors of the Chicago Times does not, in our estimation, nor in the estimation of the public, we imagine, add lustre to his character. He did not, we are told, inflict a fatal wound. The worst effect of an obituary notice of this description, is that many an honest man on reading it will think to himself "I wonder whether I shall get an obituary notice in the newspapers when I die," and on reflecting that in consequence of living a moral and respectable life, and not by his bad deeds, bringing himself prominently before the public, he will not receive this honor, as he considers it, he will probably feel discontented. Besides this, it is wrong for the sake of letting the public know that George Trussel possessed private virtues to draw their attention from his public misdeeds. It is really of very little consequence to the public whether this gambler was—as most gamblers are—liberal, or penurious, and of as little importance whether he loved his country or no. Far better would it have been to let the public draw a moral from the facts that George Trussel was a gambler, kept a mistress and was shot by her in a drinking saloon, than to attempt to weaken it by publishing an apologetic obituary notice of him in the Alta California.

THE OLYMPIC CLUB ELECTION on Monday last was a very spirited affair. The members' Regular Ticket, a model of taste and typographical neatness, bore on its reverse a cut of a number of Olympians propelling a huge ball inscribed with "The Opposition, how it goes out!" which proved to be prophetic, as the Regular Ticket was elected throughout. The following officers were chosen to serve for the ensuing year: President, David Wilder; Vice-President, Arthur K. Hawkins; Treasurer, Henry B. Russ; Secretary, Frank E. Brown; Leader, Joseph Mansur; Directors, Sidney Smith, E. M. Furbush, T. R. Butler, and F. A. Sacket.

THE municipal election that took place on Wednesday was characterized by a degree of quiet and good order, rare even in San Francisco. The total vote polled was 13,193, being about 1600 less than the number of voters duly registered on the poll lists.

NEW BOOKS.—We have received from A. Roman & Co., a number of new publications which will be duly reviewed in our next issue.

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"The gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me"
A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I will aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO.

More Who Want to be Editors.

The Proprietor of the Californian:

DEAR SIR:—I once had literary tastes and aspirations, which if indulged and cherished, would have made me the great Poet, or the great Historian of my country. But literary fame is not contemporaneous power; and it is for POWER—for predominance and mastership in practical affairs in my own day and generation—that my soul thirsts. Not to write books over which posterity shall pore, but to be the leader of a great party, the idol of a nation, and, to some extent, the shaper of its destinies, is the object of my ambition. As a boy, I thrilled with the exhilarating consciousness of powers such as are bestowed on none but the most richly gifted of our race.

Meditating alone one Autumn afternoon, like Hervey "among the tombs," in the picturesque cemetery of my native Springfield, when but a boy of twelve, I surveyed the whole field of human activity, weighed the relative value of all the objects of mortal ambition, and deliberately chose my career. In that moment of spiritual exaltation every path seemed open and every goal accessible. The dazzling round of power, in every shape in which it has held forth its seductive lure to the mightiest minds seemed fairly within my grasp. I had but to choose between the conqueror's laurel-wreath, the poet's bays, and the civic crown of the orator and the ruler; I had but to choose; and the role of an Alcibiades or a Pericles seemed more glorious to me, than that of a Homer or an Alexander. I would rather be a Gladstone than a Wellington or a Tennyson, a Clay than a Longfellow or a Grant. And so my destiny was determined. I resolved to become President of these United States, and I shall be. But as a stepping-stone to the White House, my more immediate object is to become Senator from California. Still I am no dreaming enthusiast. I believe in the use of means—and I am using them. I cultivate all men who can be useful to me; I sedulously practice that facility of approach that opens every avenue to popularity. I am a Mason and Odd Fellow, a Sunday School teacher, a church member, a man of society, and also Grand Commander of the Temperance Legion, and a Director of the Liquor Dealers Association. I am President of the Mercantile Library, of the Ladies' Protection and Relief Society, of the Young Men's Christian Association, of the Protestant Orphan Asylum, (in accepting which last position, I am not sure that I did not make a mistake, as it might have a tendency to alienate the Irish vote) besides being Vice President or Director in seventeen other corporate bodies, including the Spring Valley Water Association, the Metropolitan Gas Company, the Building and Loan Society, the Nicholson Pavement Association, the New Idria Mining Company, together with five Life and seven Fire Insurance companies. I was also contemplating running for the position of Foreman of Engine Company No. — at the time of the passage of the ordinance abolishing the Volunteer Department.

And I have not sought these honors—at least not directly. They have been thrust upon me. I have been invited, pressed, importuned, besieged to accept prominent positions in every club, order, company, incorporation, or body, social, religious, literary, military, benevolent, or monetary on this coast; and I am quite unable to understand why I have not been solicited to occupy the vacant editorial chair of THE CALIFORNIAN. Not that I could dream for a moment of accepting it—but then I should have like to have had the pleasure of modestly declining it, and telling people that I had done so. For I would strengthen my connection in the literary field, and am not unwilling to have it understood that I could shine in the sphere of polite letters, were it worth my while to make the attempt. Pericles did not despise literature or the arts, and Pericles is my great exemplar. I remain, Respectfully yours, W. H. L B-RN-S.

P. S. You will perceive from the above, that you can safely tender me the position. I shouldn't accept it, but would appreciate the compliment and might send you some legal advertising.

W. H. L. B.

Proprietor Californian:

Ere I resolved to cross the literary Rubicon—unlike the all-dominating Roman, between whom and "Kuzzilbash" I flatter myself there is scarce the dimmest suggestion of a parallel—I meditated deeply, for—par parenthese—a meditative tendency is with me a congenital idiosyncracy, and indeed, my earliest infant wailings, are said to have differed from the shrill clamors of average babyhood, and to have indicated a mildly æsthetic and contemplative nature. But n'importe; I wander, revenons. The question is concerning the CALIFORNIAN, and a literary career. Oft of late, has this been the theme of my more pensive musings, as I glide "to and fro," in the San Jose train, now eyeing dreamily the flitting landscape, and now inhaling with lungs dumbly protesting and recalcitrant the irrespirable gases exhaled from a just-butchered vitality; I allude, of course, to the pestilence-engendering cattle pens and shambles on Brannan street, that our Board of Supervisors, devoid alike of conscences and noses, will not abate as nuisances, until the awful advent of that dread missionary from Asia, whose evangelism we fear and flee from. But again I wander. I admire your journal, and, were there adequate assurance against editorial duties disturbing one's dolce far niente, or, remotely and by subtle indirect—I might indeed, perhaps, at least in certain sense, say by subtle impalpable influences, interfering with the ménage of my establishment—I say were there assurance against this, I should not experience the waverings of a balanced mind. Of my special fitness for literary pursuits why speak? Who that knows me would question it? The attraction of such a career for me consists in the avenue it opens for one who would fain be æsthetically useful and ornamentally happy. In consequence of an organization naturally delicate, a perhaps over-sensitive temperament, together with the "high art" cultus which I have enjoyed (including the refining influence of foreign travel and the exhaustive study of French literature) in consequence of these things, I often experience a certain repulsion for the dull drudgery, or the angry collisions incident to legal practice, and * * * * Of my style I need not speak. You are familiar with my writings, and not improbably know portions of them by heart—they are often quoted by the paragraph by cultivated persons, particularly by young ladies in the higher conversational intercourse of our better society. Possibly, however, you have not discovered by analysis that my style is modelled upon that of Charles Lambe, Irving, Curtis, Ik. Marvell, and Frank Bret Harte, with a slight dash of Dickens, and the faintest possible reminiscence of Lawrence Sterne, combining, as it does, the chief graces of each, it is as might be expected, superior to either. In short, I am assured by impartial and judicious friends that I need not shrink from a comparison with any living writer of our tongue in that fine vein of composition which combines the pensive charm of sentiment with dim suggestions of graver thought, and in which the beauty of the idea gains by the exquisite felicity of the phrase, as a rare gem by a beautiful setting. "Kuzzlebash" awaits your reply. Au revoir.

Yours musingly, R. C. R-G-S.

To the Proprietor of the Californian:

MY VERY DEAR SIR:—Amidst these scenes of Nature's exuberance and the dazzling beauty of concatenataneous and proportionate form of national development; away here, in the heart of our California Sunny South, under my own vine and fig-tree, with none to molest or make afraid, my amicular and visual organs have been struck by an announcement, apparently authoritative, that the glowing and now locally historic and majestic hebdomadal which illuminates with iridescent but fortunately not crepusculine rays our literary horizon, stands vacilating upon the borders of hesitation as to a choice of some noble intelligence, some appointed instrument, who shall fill its editor's chair.

Far from me be the thought that because a Webb once filled that chair it is web-footed, and that hence as a sequent corollary no person but a sailor should be its future occupant, or that the editor sh be a "duck of a man," or even that he should be Web's-terian. Such fancies and conceits little befit a serious application for a responsible position, and would illy correspond with that reputation which I have gained, more in the austere realms of the severe and exacting Themis, than within the idealistic boundaries of Momus, or the enchanting and Circe like walks where Apollo's votaries lead the fated life of voluptuous delight, in the magic circle of a necessitated poesy, breathing a purer than Thessalian air beneath a brighter empyreau than domes the dwelling of the Gods

"Where high Olympus shrouds
His hundred heads in Heaven and props the clouds."

Suffice it to say—I mean business. Without any of the complacent and voluble palaver of self congratulating sufficiency—I offer my services. Yours Truly,

A. B. C. D. E. J. C. K-W-N.

Captain Jaggers' Opinion of "Belisario" and of Opera in General.

MR. EDITOR:—On Monday night I went to the opera for the first and last time in my life. I've settled my impressions of opera. I like good acting and I like good singing; but I'd rather take 'em separate, as I do my brandy and water, and not so confoundedly mixed up that each spoils the other. This is how I came to go: A young lady who boards at our boarding-house was to make her "daybew," (as a young coxcomb who sits next me at table calls it) at the Metropolitan. The same genius asked me a year or so since, soon after the appearance of Victor Hugo's great novel, whether I had read Less Miserables. Of course all our boarders turned out strong on the occasion. There were at least forty of us in the dress circle. The opera announced was Belisario, or "Bully Sawyers" as Dickens' "literary man with a wooden leg" read the name of the unfortunate old Roman. Well, our "dayhootont"—that's my accomplished little neighbor's pronunciation—came out strong they say, but I'd a deuced sight rather hear her in the parlor. Where's the sense, I should like to know, of that fringe of fellows in red shirts and white stockings, without anything to speak of in the way of trousers, ranged along one side of the stage all in a row, with another row of women in fancy-colored petticoats ranged opposite them, the whole lot bawling and squalling like sixty, standing there bolt upright and looking on, while all manner of things, from murder to love-making, are being perpetrated right under their noses? Can anything under heaven be so ridiculously preposterous as to see a couple of burly fellows rigged up like harlequins, gesticulating like lunatics, and jawing away at one another "most musically," in minims, crotchets, and demi-semi-quavers, each seeming all the while to be trying to beat the other in making faces, turning out his toes, and showing his calves to the best advantage?

And who's green enough to believe that the people go to see and hear this sort of thing because they like it? Not I for one. I saw at least fifty down-town fellows of my acquaintance—merchants, lawyers, and others, who grinned and bore it like an Indian at the stake—but don't talk to me about their liking it However it's the fashion, and there are plenty of people who would go about with a convict's ball-and-chain to their legs if it should become fashionable, especially if the chain was of a taking pattern, and the ball gilded.

Yours Truly, CAPTAIN JAGGERS.

A Query for The "Times."

O, "Daily Times;" O, "Daily Times;"
When are you to be born?
Or are you really coming out
The small end of the horn?
D-ws has distilled quite long enough
Thy spirits pure to "catchee;"
And B-rt-n long has packed in salt
The impatient Jim McCl-tch-y.

The President's Bounty.

The Examiner, on Thursday, promulgated what appears to us to be a novel idea. It says that "the Radical Convention," in this city, forbore to take sides in their address on the question of reconstruction and:

"This enabled the army of unprincipled officials who, while feeding upon the bounty of the President, with black-hearted ingratitude, are consulting with his enemies and stabbing him in the dark, to vote the instincts of their natures. They thus not only worked against the National Union Democratic ticket, but gave all of their influence to that of the Radicals. When we consider the army of these unprincipled ingrates that swarm in the Custom House, Mint, Postoffice, Revenue Department, etc., we can well estimate the amount of that influence."

We really were not aware, until we saw it so stated in the Examiner, that the Government officials were "feeding upon the bounty of the President." We did not know that the pay which they drew for their services from the United States Government was in reality "the bounty of the President" Under any circumstances, the present office-holders can scarcely be said to be feeding on President Johnson's bounty, as he did not appoint them. As to the Custom House, Mint, Postoffice, and Revenue Department officials being "unprincipled ingrates," we must join issue with the Examiner. As the bountiful President has already given most of these "ingrates" notice to quit, and will assuredly oust all the others, we cannot see that they have very much to be grateful for. "The instincts of their natures" led them, of course, to vote against President Johnson's policy, after they knew that he considered it part of his policy to discharge them, and intended that they should no longer "feed on his bounty."

Poor Stricken Ones.

The Post office is a house of mourning. The telegraph having brought the news of the removal of Perkins, every clerk in the office is an embodiment of grief and rage. We claim the consideration of the public for these unfortunates. Bear with them for a little while. Do not inquire for your letters oftener than is absolutely necessary. It irritates them. They are in a dreadful condition. When you inquire for a letter now the clerk looks at you with an expression which seems to say, "who are you talking to? I've never been introduced to you." Then, remembering that he is still, for a short time longer, a public servant, he makes a savage thrust at the pigeon-hole in which your letters are placed, and if he finds there is no letter for you, turns sharply round, says "no!" and gives you a look of deadly hatred which means "and you knew there was no letter for you, d—n you!" You shudder and walk away, thankful that the window through which the letters are delivered is too small for any but a very thin man to get through. Bear with them; poor fellows! What will they do when they are turned out of the Post office? They have forgotten how to dig, and their brief term of office, while it has taught them absolutely nothing, has rendered them useless for industrial pursuits. Don't worry them. If you could hear the groan which surges up from the heart of one of those stricken clerks, and bursts in a dislocated imprecation in his throat when he sees a man come to break in upon his sorrow by asking for a letter, you would wait until two or three had arrived and then ask for them all at once. There will be a new set of clerks in there soon: nice, civil, stupid, hoobyish fellows who will smile vacantly in your face when you call for a letter, and then proceed to examine the letters in every pigeon-hole, seriatim, reserving the one which contains yours for the last. When the new clerks are appointed those who have not lock-boxes will do well to appoint one afternoon in each week which they can devote to getting their letters, Then they can invest in four bits' worth of peanuts and have quite a "nice time" while their letters are being searched for.

Acrobatics Extraordinary.

The Omnibus Railroad Company, a week ago yesterday, announced that their fares would be reduced, and that the tickets of other companies would not be received. The "other companies" immediately published a card stating that their fares would also be reduced, and tickets exchanged between themselves, but not with the Omnibus Company. The latter, thus left out in the cold, required but three days to discover that their Japanese policy of non-intercourse—the pet hobby of some of their directors from the start—was a total failure; and announced on Thursday morning that "tickets of all the city railroads would be received." So complete a summersault, taken in connection with the fact that a certain name was dropped from the Board of Directors at a recent election, shows that the Omnibus Railroad Company is at last freed from the dictation of a narrow-minded but heretofore powerful clique, and will probably be managed hereafter, like other street railroads, with due regard to the interest and convenience of the public.

Prison Pens.

Many suffered severely from the horrors of "Prison Pens" during the war. Alas! the whole country suffers now from prison pens. Hundreds of volumes containing the diaries of Union prisoners are forthcoming, and the misery which will be inflicted on hapless readers by these prison pens is terrible to think of.

THE BULLETIN, in an editorial devoted to the New York Round Table and its recent sensational article on "Female Drunkenness," says some very just and by no means flattering things of that pretentious journal. The fact is, the Round Table is evidently aiming at the position of a sort of literary Police Gazette, and sticks at nothing which promises to give it notoriety; compared with its enormous pretensions, its actual performance is like Gratiano's grain of wheat in the bushel of chaff; or as the Bulletin felicitously puts it, from the first number "there has been a great deal of trumpeting outside the booth," while "the show within was not remarkably original or striking." If a publication of this unmistakable charlatan character is in truth accepted at the East as a high literary authority, the fact speaks ill for the taste and discrimination of the public on the Atlantic side.

DR. RUSH, a celebrated American physician, writing in relation to the practice of medicine, says; "We have done but little more than multiply diseases and increase their fatality." DR. BOURNE, the Water Cure Physician, says that of his own personal knowledge, the result of more than a quarter century of close observation that DR. RUSH was justified in making so grave a charge.

WISHING BAD LUCK.—Knight's Landing is a very nice place. They had a foot-race there, the other day, for a cool hundred. The Independent says a beautifully dressed young lady, sitting in front of a ten-pound waterfall, saw one of the wind-splitters come on the course, clad in tights. They fitted him so well that the fair damsel conceived he was out-doing Menken and the Georgia major. She put her hands up to her face and, peering through her fingers, screeched out, "Why, you ua-a-a-sty man! I hope you won't win."

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

To various ponts:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omuibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46, steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage.
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 30, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

DR. HUMPHREYS'

Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of infants	25
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Billious Stomach	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, bliud or bleeding	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Eularged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life	$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.

Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE Proprietor

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR

COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH,

CONSUMPTION,

And all Diseases of the

CHEST AND LUNGS

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc., soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic Company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

The following steamships will be despatched on dates as given below:

SEPTEMBER 10TH,
CONSTITUTION, Capt. E. S. Farnsworth, connecting with ARIZONA, Captain Maury.

SEPTEMBER 18TH,
COLORADO, Capt. J. T. Watkins, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt Gray.

SEPTEMBER 29TH,
SACRAMENTO, Capt. J. M. Cavarly, connecting with the OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Weir.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

☞ The splendid steamship COLORADO will be despatched for CHINA on TUESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1867, for HONGKONG via HONOLULU and KANAGAWA, carrying Passengers, Mails and Freight.

Passengers and Freight will also be taken for SHANGHAE—to be forwarded from Kanagawa by steamer leaving within a few days.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON TUESDAY, - - - SEPT. 25,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight; and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

CALIFORNIA

Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA.....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar23 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

R. H. McDONALD. J. C. SPENCER.

R. H. McDONALD & CO., IMPORTING

Wholesale Druggists,

J STREET, SACRAMENTO,
AND
CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

We respectfully beg leave to inform our customers and the public generally, that we have opened a House in the city of San Francisco, where we will be pleased to see as many of our old friends and customers as can make it convenient to call upon us. We shall keep at both places a large and well selected Stock of

DRUGS AND MEDICINES, SURGICAL INSTRUMENTS, DENTAL GOODS, FANCY ARTICLES, BRUSHES AND COMBS, SHOULDER AND BODY BRACES, LADIES' BANDAGES AND SUPPORTERS, GUM ELASTIC STOCKINGS, TRUSSES, PAINTS AND OILS, PATENT MEDICINES, HERBS AND EXTRACTS, BREWERS' AND SODA STOCK, CORKS, (large variety,) ASSAYERS' MATERIAL, BURNING OILS AND FLUIDS, PLASTER PARIS, MARBLE DUST,

Together with a large and complete assortment of all Goods kept in a well supplied Wholesale Drug Store.

We respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our Stock before purchasing elsewhere.

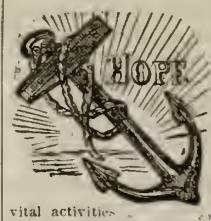
R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Sacramento and San Francisco.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

IMPORTING WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS,

J street, Sacramento, and corner Pine and Sansome sts., San Francisco,

Importers of DENTAL AND SURGICAL INSTRUMENTS,



TEETH, GOLD FOIL, FORCEPS of all kinds, DENTAL CHAIRS, Hand and Foot LATHES, Brush, Cotton, and Corundum WHEELS, Pluggers, Scalers, Files, Rosewood DENTAL CASES, brass bound, best quality, with full sets Instruments. Mirrors, etc., price from $75 to $175 each. VULCANITE MATERIAL. Vulcanizers, Vulcanite Base, and Impression Gutta Percha. A large variety of VULCANITE TEETH, Scrapers and Packers; together with a large and complete assortment of all articles of the latest and most approved styles of Vulcanite Work. DENTAL BOOKS—We keep constantly on hand a supply of all the most approved Standard Works on Dentistry. Our efforts will be to keep a large and well selected stock of all Dental Material, where the Dental Profession may confidently rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.
Sacramento: J street; San Francisco: corner Pine and Sansome streets. s1

AYER'S

Cathartic Pills,

ARE THE MOST PERFECT purgative which we are able to produce, or which we think has ever yet been made by anybody. Their effects have abundantly shown to the community how much they excel the ordinary medicines in use. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. Their penetrating properties stimulate the vital activities, remove the obstructions of its organs, purify the blood, and expel disease. They purge out the foul humors which breed and grow distemper, stimulate sluggish or disordered organs into their natural action, and impart a healthy tone with strength to the whole system. Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of everybody, but also formidable and dangerous diseases. While they produce powerful effects, they are at the same time, in diminished doses, the safest and best physic that can be employed for children. Being sugar-coated, they are pleasant to take; and, being purely vegetable, are free from any risk of harm. Cures have been made which surpass belief, were they not substantiated by men of such exalted position and character, as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Many eminent clergymen and physicians have lent their names to certify to the public the reliability of our remedies, while others have sent us the assurance of their conviction that our Preparations contribute immensely to the relief of our afflicted, suffering fellow men.

The Agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis our American Almanac, containing directions for the use and certificates of their cures, of the following complaints:

Costiveness, Billious Complaints, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heartburn, Headache arising from foul stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Morbid Inaction of the Bowels and pain arising therefrom, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, all Diseases which require an evacuant medicine. They also, by purifying the blood and stimulating the system, cure many complaints which it would not be supposed they could reach, such as Deafness, Partial Blindness, Neuralgia and Nervous Irritability, Derangements of the Liver and Kidneys, Gout, and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the body, or obstruction of its functions.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations which they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S and take no others. The sick want the best aid there is for them, and they should have it.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
s1 2m and all Dealers.

PROBATE COURT of the city and county of San Francisco, State of California.

In the matter of the Estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors

It appearing to this court from the petition this day presented and filed by Robert L. Harris, the guardian of the estates of David Whipple and William Whipple, minors, praying for an order of sale of the real estate belonging to his said wards, that it would be beneficial to the said wards that such real estate should be sold at private sale.

It is hereby ordered that the next of kin of said wards, and all persons interested in said estate, appear before this court at the court room thereof, at the court house, in the city and county of San Francisco, on Monday the 10th day of September, 1866, at eleven o'clock A. M., then and there to show cause why an order should not be granted for the sale of such estate.

And it is further ordered that a copy of this order be published at least three successive weeks before said hearing of said petition in THE CALIFORNIAN, a newspaper printed and published in said city and county.

Dated August 10th, A. D., 1866. M. C. BLAKE,
au11 4t Probate Judge.

THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE

SOCIETY OF NEW YORK,

AS GOOD A COMPANY AS ANY IN THE

UNITED STATES!

INSURANCE on Lives on all plans and on as favorable terms as any other safe company. No Extra Premiums for Traveling to and from the East.

ACCUMULATED FUND.....$2,500,000

R. L. & F. OGDEN,
General Agents for Pacific Coast and Territories, S. E. corner California and Montgomery sts.

Accidantal Insurance!

UNITED STATES

CASUALTY INSURANCE CO.

Insurance against all kinds of ACCIDENTS. The Only Mutual Company in America.

Fifty Dollars per annum insures your life against death by accident for $10,000 for one year, and gives you $50 if disabled.

Five Dollars per annum insures you for $1,000 and $5 per week compensation.

Insurance for any period, or for a trip or voyage.

RATES as low as any good Company can afford.

R. L. &. F. OGDEN,
S. E. corner of California and Montgomery streets,
s1 3m General Agents for Pacific Coast.

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

MARY SMITH, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, be awarded to Plaintiff, and for general relief.

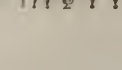
And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney, 535 Clay street. } je30 3m

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN, that in pursuance of the order of the Probate Court of the city and county of San Francisco, in the State of California, made on the 26th day of July, 1866, in the matter of the estate of Andrew Robeson, deceased, the undersigned, administrator with the will annexed of said deceased, will sell at private sale to the highest bidder for cash in United States gold coin, in two parcels, subject to confirmation by said Probate Court, on or after Tuesday, the 11th day of September, 1866, at twelve o'clock noon of that day, at the counting room of Aldrich & Merrill, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county, all the right, title and interest of said Andrew Robeson, deceased, at the time of his death, and all the right, title and interest that the said estate has, by operation of law or otherwise acquired, other than or in addition to that of said deceased at the time of his death, in and to all those certain two lots of land situated in said city and county and described as follows, viz: 1st. Commencing at a point on the west side of Mason street, 77 1 2 feet northerly from the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets; thence running northerly along said side of Mason street 60 feet; thence at a right angle westerly 77 1 2 feet; thence at a right angle southerly 60 feet; and thence at a right angle easterly 77 1 2 feet to the point of beginning. 2d Commencing at a point on the north line of Ellis street, 117 1 2 feet westerly from the northwest corner of Mason and Ellis streets; running thence westerly along Ellis street 20 feet; thence at a right angle northerly 60 feet, thence at a right angle easterly 20 feet; and thence at a right angle southerly 60 feet to the place of beginning. And said administrator will receive offers or bids for said property from this date till said 11th day of September, 1866, at 12 o'clock noon, at said counting room of Aldrich & Merrill, Nos. 204 and 206 California street, in said city and county. EDWARD F. STONE,
Administrator with the will annexed of Andrew Robeson, deceased.
San Francisco, August 11th, 1866. au11-td



NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—Estate of WILLIAM MACMICHAEL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, administrator with the will annexed, of the above named estate, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against William MacMichael, deceased, to exhibit the same, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at his place of business, No. 12 Post street, Masonic Temple, in the city and county of San Francisco.

San Francisco, August 18, 1866.

THEODORE L. SCHELL,
Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of William MacMichael, deceased.
WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Administrator. 5t

PIANOS RENTED

FROM $5 TO $10 PER MONTH, at A. KOHLER'S, s1 3m No. 424 Sansome street.

QUINCY HALL,

545, 547, 549 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE LARGEST CLOTHING EMPORIUM in California. The daily sales from the establishment is a sufficient guarantee that the prices are less than those of any other house on the Pacific coast. Here you also find clothing of the best of California Cloth, both for Wholesale and Retail trade. Also, particular attention paid to making up fine clothing to order. jy21

E. M. Tubbs & Co. Peterboro' N.H.

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA IS WARRANTED TO RESTORE GRAY HAIR TO ITS ORIGINAL COLOR ERADICATE DANDRUFF AND HUMORS from the SCALP & PREVENT BALDNESS. Try a Bottle. Proprietors.

RING'S VEGETABLE AMBROSIA

IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale and retail, by

JOHN F. SNOW,

Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,

je23 San Francisco.

MEAGHER, TAAFE & CO.,

IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS OF

DRY GOODS, LINENS,
FURNISHING GOODS,
YANKEE NOTIONS,
FANCY GOODS, ETC.

AGENTS FOR THE

MOUNT VERON DUCK COMPANY

NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.

RETAIL HOUSE, - - - NO. 9 MONTGOMERY STREET,

jy21-3m Lick House.

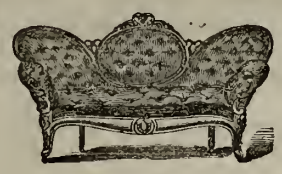
MR. AND MRS. COGILL

AND SONS,

Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,



On Bush st., adjoinin Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. au5-3m

FURNITURE

AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!

LATEST STYLES!

The Best Workmanship,

AND

LOWEST PRICES!

AT

Goodwin & Co.'s

FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,

Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.

ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

HEUSTON,

HASTINGS

& CO.

The Fashionable Clothiers

OF

SAN FRANCISCO,

Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE

STOCK OF

CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT

REDUCED PRICES.

je17-3m

FIREMAN'S FUND

Insurance Company.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,

Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Capital fully paid in Gold Coin	$500,000 00
Surplus, April 30, 1866	154,824 57
Total Assets	$654,824 57

Insure against Loss or Damage by Fire, on Stores, Dwellings, Merchandise, Vessels and Cargoes in Port, and other insurable property.

$50,000 is the largest amount taken on any one risk. This Company reinsures whenever the risks are deemed too large for the locality.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY of STOCKHOLDERS

Under the Constitution and Statutes of California.

ALL LOSSES PAID PROMPTLY IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

W. B. BOURN, President.
D. J. STAPLES, Vice President.
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary. au17 3m

AMERICAN HOTEL,

Main street. - - - Petaluma.

mar24-6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!

STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late great INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

C. WIEDERHOLD & CO.'S

Piano Warerooms,

685 Market street, corner of Third,

WILL BE OPEN ON AND after SATURDAY, Aug. 25th, EVENINGS, till 8 o'clock.

SOLE AGENTS FOR

J. B. DUNHAM'S,

F. C. LIGHTE & CO.'S,

GEO. STECK & CO.'S, and

ERNEST GABLER'S

CELEBRATED PIANOS.

We will be in constant receipt of the above fine Pianos, which we warrant equal to any imported, and ask our friends and the public to call and examine for themselves. au25-3m

THE Accidental Insurance Co,

OF NEW YORK,

ISSUES POLICIES INSURING AGAINST INJURIES OF all kinds, and death resulting from accident.

In case death does not result from the injury, the insured receives a weekly compensation as long as he is disabled (not to exceed twenty-six weeks.)

Policy.	Premium.	Weekly Compensation.
$1,000	$ 5 00	$ 5 00
$2,000	$10 00	$10 00
$5,000	$25 00	$25 00
$10,000	$50 00	$50 00

SEA VOYAGE POLICIES,

Covering risk to New York, cost $2 per $1,000.

☞ No Medical Examination required.

Life Insurance.

CONNECTICUT MUTUAL

LIFE INSURANCE CO.,

HARTFORD, CONN.

For Policies, or further information, apply to

A. D. SMITH & CO., Agents,

Northwest corner Montgomery and Secramento streets

au4 3m

GRAND OPENING

OF THE

Circassian Saloon,

Corner of Dupont and Pacific streets,

(Formerly "Diana Saloon,")

ON SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1866.

NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT!—Magic and Gymnastic Feats, free of charge.

☞ The best of WINES, LIQUORS, LUNCH, and CIGARS always on hand.

N. B. Fine Vocal Music, Polite Waiters, etc.

au11 1m

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?

IF YOU DO, GO TO

411 CLAY STREET,

BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by

M. D. CARR & CO.

je30-3m

J. PEIRCE,

FURNITURE AND

Bedding Warerooms.

Nos. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,

NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,

Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street,

je16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,

SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,

Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,

No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,

SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Metal Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.

je10 3m

GOOD NEWS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Teeth Extracted Without Pain

BY THE

ANÆSTHETIC SPRAY PRODUCER,

WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

Partial to a full Upper Set of Teeth, for from $10 to $25, as usual. Filling with best Cement, $1; with Gold, from $1 to $3. All work warranted.

Office, 139 Fourth street, near Howard.

au4 3m J. P. CROWELL, Dentist.

NATHANIEL GRAY,

UNDERTAKER,

CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,

641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB

Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.

je17-3m

YANKEE NOTIONS

AND

FANCY GOODS!

MERCHANTS wanting Goods in this line should not fail to examine our stock, which is new and attractive, before buying elsewhere.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,

jy21-3m Battery street, near Pine.

AFRICAN ELEPHANTS.

THE African elephant, the Elephas africanus of Cuvier, may be described as follows: The height of the males when full grown is about twelve feet at the shoulder, and that of the females about three feet less; in length they average from eighteen to twenty feet. The skin is rough and destitute of hair, and of a black or dark ash grey color. The head is rounder and the forehead more convex than in the Asiatic species, the ears long (often exceeding six feet in length) reaching down to the legs and overlapping at the back of the neck, thus covering the place usually occupied in India by the mahouts or drivers. Both sexes carry tusks of from eight to ten feet in length and curved upwards (in some Indian specimens the tusks are curved downards.) The teeth have certain lozengeshaped prominence on them which distinguish the species from the Asiatic variety, as well as from the six fossil varieties recognized by osteologists. The toes are invariably five on each foot, not three as stated in some works on natural history.

After many careful inquiries among hunters, both European and native, at the Cape, the writer has been unable to learn that any peculiarities have been there noticed beyond those dependent on age and sex. The absence of distinctive peculiarities in different individual elephants, at least in South Africa, would appear to be confirmed by the fact that in the dialects of the Kaffir tribes there is but one word for the elephant, viz: "Inhlovu," (signifying primitively a huge or mighty one) although they (the Kaffirs) have distinct names for many species of animals which have only recently been recognized by naturalists, and some of which have not yet found their way into works of reference; we may instance the black, blue, and white varieties of rhinoceros, two varieties of eland, several of gnus, and others.

As we approach the equator the size of the elephant appears to diminish. Captains Grant and Speke, and the missionary Krapff on the east coast, and Mr. Winwood Reade and M. du Chaillu on the west, speak of the elephant as from eight to nine feet in height only, and as carrying tusks weighing from forty to sixty pounds. The latter gentleman remarks that the finest ivory on "the coast" is furnished by the elephants found in a small tract of country directly under the equator. No cause can be assigned for the peculiarity. These tusks are externally of a shining coffee color, some almost black, but when sawn open they are of that peculiar hue known as "green" ivory, which is supposed to preserve its whiteness, when once bleached, longer than any other. The tusks of the elephants further south, we may remark, are occasionally found of 110 to 120 pounds weight, 70 to 80 pounds being an ordinary weight per tusk for full-sized bulls.

General de Lima, the former Portuguese Governor of Mozambique, told Sir E. Tennent that having been commissioned to procure a pair of tusks of the largest size for the cathedral at Goa, he, after immense difficulty, procured two, one weighing 180 and the other 170 pounds English. These tusks we believe, now form a cross (they were nearly straight throughout their length) over the high altar in the cathedral at Goa. They are the largest of which we have any record, one spoken of by the late Mr. Gordon Cumming as having been in his collection, weighing 173 pounds, ranking next.

Having thus glanced at the external characteristics of these animals, we must now say a few words on their habits, as far as they have been observed.

No altitude seems too lofty or too chill for them, if it afford the luxury of an abundant supply of water. In many parts of the Cape Colony, where these animals are still to be found, and where once they roamed in vast herds, not only are the night-frosts severe, but in winter we have seen the snow lie for days on the ground several inches deep—a circumstance certainly not in accordance with the popular idea of "Afric's burning shore." The best, indeed the only account we have seen in print, is given by Mr. Gordon Cumming, in his "Five Years of a Hunter's Life," from which we have in part extracted the following details:

The elephants are found in small herds under the leadership of one or more bulls. In some cases the old bulls are found singly or in pairs, while the younger ones remain long in the company of their mothers. The elephant's food consists of branches, leaves, and the roots of trees; the destruction of the latter, even when of great size, by these animals, being enormous. They also consume a variety of bulbs, of the situation of which they are advised by their exquisite sense of smell. To obtain the latter, they tear up the ground with their tusks, (the use of the elephant's tusks was long a moot point with zoologists), and Mr. Cumming remarks whole acres may be often seen thus ploughed up to a considerable depth. This fact appears to have been known to Pliny, who mentions it when speaking of the Indian variety.

They are particular in frequenting the freshest and most verdant parts of the forest, while their peculiar habits and the noiselessness of their step and motions, even in the thickest cover, causes them to be less often observed than almost any other game animal. Their favorite haunts are often in the most secluded spots in the forest, at a long distance from water. About sun down they leave their mid-day haunts, and commence their march towards the water, perhaps twelve or twenty miles distant. Arriving here an hour or two before midnight, they quench their thirst, and cool their bodies by spouting over them large volumes of water; they then resume the path to their forest solitudes. About midnight the bulls frequently lie down and sleep for a few hours, usually selecting for that purpose the side of one of those huge antheaps which are here often forty feet in diameter. The deep impression of the under tusk on the ground usually found in these cases, proves that they lie upon their sides. Mr. Cumming, however, states that females, and even the males in positions of danger generally sleep in a standing position, resting against a tree or bank.

Although the young remain long with their mothers, the oft-repeated tale of the devotion of the latter to their young must be ranked, it would seem, with the numerous other fables of which the elephant has been the theme. In an interesting paper on the Asiatic variety, in the Philosophical Transactions for 1793, Mr. Corse pointed out the incorrectness of this belief. "If a female elephant (he wrote) were separated from her young for two days only she never seemed to acknowledge it after, although the young one would evidently recognize its mother." Sir Cornwallis Harris, to whose work we have already referred, describing the attack on a large herd of elephants in the Matabile country (many hundred miles N. E. of the Cape Frontier) says, "Much has been said of the attachment of elephants to their young, but neither on this occasion nor on any other, did we perceive even the smallest concern for their safety; on the contrary, they left them to shift for themselves." He, however, relates a touching instance of the attachment of a young one to its dam, and of its apparent docility and friendliness towards man. "On the following day," he continues, "on visiting the glen which had been the scene of our exploits during the early part of the action, a calf about three and a half feet high walked forth from the bush and saluted us with mournful cries. Entwining his little proboscis round our legs, and demonstating his joy at our arrival by a thousand ungainly antics, he accompanied our party to the carcase of his dam. The conduct of the quaint little calf was now quite affecting, and elicited sympathy from every one He ran round his mother's carcase with every demonstration of grief, piping sorrowfully, and essaying to raise her with his tiny trunk." Sir C. Harris adds, he was almost persuaded never to kill another elephant.

The domestication of the elephant, and particularly of the African variety, is a point on which we possess but little reliable information. The elephant is mentioned once only in holy writ. (in the book of Maccabees), and according to Sir Gardner Wilkinson, like the camel, never appears on Egyptian remains, although the camelopard, (the very existence of which was so stoutly denied by some "savans" within the memory of persons still living) and other of the larger game animals are occasionally portrayed in connection with subjects relating to Ethiopia.

Elephants, supposed to be of the African species, we know were used in the first Punic war. According to Polybius, Hannibal had eighty at Zama. Sallust mentions that Sextius, the Quæstor of the Proconsul Calpurnius, seized thirty warelephants at Vacca from Jugurtha. It has, however, been questioned with some show of probability whether these elephants and their conductors were not from the east, and not of the native breed. Medals representing the performances of elephants in the Roman amphitheatres have also come down to us; and on these the peculiarities of the African type are so well marked, as to leave no doubt that the art of taming the African species was practised in the days of the Cæsars, although now long since lost.

Sir C. Harris writes, "The barbarous tribes that people South Africa have never dreamt of the possibility of rendering this lordly quadruped servicable in a domestic capacity. and even among the Cape Colonists there exists an unaccountable superstition that his subjugation is not accomplishable. His capture might however be readily effected, and as he appears to possess all the intelligence of his Asiatic congener, the only difficulty which would present itself within our territory would be the want of sufficient food for his support; an opinion in which Dr. Livingstone appears to concur. Kolben, a Prussian writer who resided long at the Cape, to which he proceeded in 1705, states that an elephant was used in moving a stranded vessel on shore in Table Bay during his stay in Cape Town, but we think it probable that this animal had been brought from the Dutch possessions further east, and was not of the African breed. Elephants from Coromandel were introduced about thirty years afterward in the French colony on the Isle of France (Mauritius) but the expense of their keeping made the experiment a failure. It were much to be desired that some efforts should be made to utilise these noble animals before the reckless war of extermination now carried on against them has caused the race to become extinct. Great as has been the destruction of these animals in Ceylon, the circumstance of the females being there devoid of tusks and consequently worthless, has not been without an important effect in preserving the breed. In Africa, on the contrary, where both sexes carry tusks alike, the animals are destroyed with the most reckless disregard to size, age, and sex.

The amount of ivory imported annually into Great Britain is very large; the proportion from Africa is, however, difficult to ascertain. Mr. Frank Buckland, in his "Curiosities of Natural History," first series, has given some interesting information on the subject of ivory, with a few extracts from which we will conclude.

Ivory, he says, from India, Siam, Ceylon, North Africa, and the Cape, has in each case its characteristic peculiarities. The rats gnaw the African ivory, more especially that which, from its hue when cut, is called the "green" ivory, while they will not touch the latter, not containing enough gelatine to make it worth their while.

Rats are thus useful to the ivory turner in two ways, in assisting his judgment in choosing the ivory, and also in laying bare the under substance of the tusk, which is overlaid by the "bark" or outer covering.

Tusks brought from North Africa are covered with small cracks. This ivory is said to be brought on camels' backs across the desert; the camels are unladen at night and the tusks placed on the ground. The next morning while still moist with the heavy dew, they are placed unwiped on the camels' backs again, and are again exposed to the hot sun of the desert. This alternate heat and moisture causes the numerous cracks, which, however, strange to say, are more numerous inside than they are on the outer covering or bark.

According to Mr. McCulloch, ivory is divided into five classes—from seventy pounds weight and upward, to all under eighteen pounds weight—known as "scrivellos." The price in the English market varies according to quality from 15*l.* to 32*l.* per 112 pounds. C.

How a Noble Dog Got Out of the Pound.—The New York Evening Post says:

On Monday an interesting incident occurred at the Pound. A boy fell from the dock outside the inclosure into the East river, and a man who had brought a large dog, but had not entered the Pound, happened to be standing near. He dropped the rope by which he held the dog, for a moment, in order to take his coat off, so that he might rescue the boy. The dog, released, plunged into the river before the man had fairly begun to remove his clothing, and seizing the boy by the arm, dragged him to the dock, from which he was easily taken from the water. The prints of the animal's teeth could scarcely be seen in the boy's flesh. The dog made no effort to escape, but was led into the Pound. When the daily drowning was performed, this dog was not killed; and he was kept for three days in consideration of his services. His owner not then appearing, he was awarded to one of the friends he had made by the fortunate leap by which he rescued the child and saved his own life.

It is not great wealth, nor high station, which makes a man happy. Many of the most wretched beings on earth have both. But it is a radiant, sunny spirit, which knows how to bear little trials and to enjoy little comforts, and which thus extracts happiness from every incident of life.

The New York Tribune, in an article on Pianos says: "Knabe & Co., like all first-class makers, manufacture all classes of Pianos, grand, square, and upright. They lay no claim to remarkable inventions, they simply make fine Pianos upon established principles, which they have worked upon and elaborated up to a point of peculiar and special excellence. By this means they have secured a pure, full and equal tone, in quality melodious, rich and sonorous. Their square Pianos possess all these qualities, and are much sought after. The experiment of introducing them in competition with the New York and Eastern Pianos, by establishing a branch salesroom in New York, has proved successful beyond all expectation. To supply the demand they are now adding a new five story building to their manufactory at Baltimore, making their entire frontage of 436 feet of five story buildings—one of the three largest and most perfect Piano-forte manufactories in the world." Messrs. Frisbee & Scott, No. 3 Montgomery street, are the sole agents in California for these superior instruments. *

To Purify the Blood.—Many medicines are compounded for this purpose. They are all a sham and a swindle, so far as the accomplishment of that end is concerned. Common sense should teach that pure blood is created by pure food, pure water, pure air, a healthy stomach and lungs, and a clean, active skin. This is the way that Dr Bourne creates pure blood, and he seems to be the only physician, out of hundreds in this city, who has either brains or honesty to do it or acknowledge it—No. 10 Masonic Temple Post St., San Francisco. *

The sick are cured with rapidity, and in a most pleasant manner, by Dr. Bourne, 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, San Francisco. *

Ladies, Respect, Preserve and Develop your charms by using that perfection of a toilet wash, Davidson's Circassian Bloom. Sold by all Druggists. *

Without medicine, bleeding, blistering or plastering, Dr. Bourne effects most extraordinary cures—No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, San Francisco. *

Cures guaranteed in rheumatism, neuralgia, tic doloreux, fever and ague, etc., under a very pleasant system of treatment, by Dr. Bourne, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, San Francisco. *

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.

A toilet delight. Superior to any cologne. used to bathe the face and person, to render the skin soft and fresh, to allay inflammation, to perfume clothing, for headache, etc. It is manufactured from the rich Southern Magnolia, and is obtaining a patronage quite unprecedented. It is a favorite with actresses and opera singers. It is sold by all dealers, at $1.00 in large bottles, and by DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York, Wholesale Agents.

Lyon's Magnetic Insect Powder will exterminate Fleas, Ticks, Roaches and all insects almost instantly. Its reputation is well known, and hence has been counterfeited. Inquire for and take none but LYON'S, bearing the stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., and the signature of E. LYON.

"OUT OF SORTS" expresses the feelings of many that cannot be otherwise described. Languor, weakness, enervation, listlessness, sleepiness, melancholy, want of appetite, etc., compose a class of ailments greater than all others combined. It is exactly for these indescribable complaints that PLANTATION BITTERS are prepared. It is for the relief of these same complaints they have become so famous. Hence it is that they are so extensively used by clergymen, merchants, ladies, and persons of sedentary habits. They are as pleasant to the taste as they are beneficial to the Stomach. The extent of their sale is almost incredible.

Intrinsic virtue alone could ever insure the success met by the Mexican Mustang Liniment. For Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Cuts, Bruises, Burns, Swellings, etc., upon man, or Spavin, Ringbone, Poll Evil, Scratches, Strains, etc., upon beasts, its effects are instantaneous, soothing and wonderful. It saves time, suffering and expense to have it always in the house. None genuine unless in a steel plate label, with signature of G. W. Westbrook, and having stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., over top. Sold by all dealers.

Lyon's Kathairon is a most delightful article as a Hair Dressing—to eradicate scurf and dandruff, to keep it clean, soft and silky, and the head cool. It also prevents the hair from falling off and turning gray, and promotes its growth upon prematurely bald heads. It is sold by all dealers.

E. THOMAS LYON, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER—for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, Flatulency, etc., where a warming stimulant is required. Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. Ask for "LYON'S" Pure Extract. Take no other c7in

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

EMPEROR MAX has received important news from his vrow, Carlotta; though his having no children, accounts for his not having heard that at C. A. FLETCHER'S, No. 1 Montgomery street, can be found the largest and most elegant assortment of BOY'S CLOTHING there is in the city. Boys' Suits as usual made to order from a superior line of Cloths and Cassimeres, always on hand, after the regular Eastern Fashion Plates, received monthly; this being the only Boys' Clothing House in receipt of them. A large assortment of Gentlemen's Fine Clothing and Furnishing Goods, Traveling Trunks, Valises, etc., at all times, and at the most reasonable rates.

PHOTOGRAPHY.—The pictures taken in this city are far superior to those taken in the East and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The best gallery to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The NEW YORK, on the east side of Third street, a few doors below Market, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries.

LADIES, ATTENTION!—Direct Importation from Paris.—Please recollect that there is only one Shawl House in California, J. D. Robert. 119 and 121 Montgomery street, which receives direct, Genuine Square and Long Broche Cashmere Shawls of every description and price, from Robert, Gosselin & Son, manufacturers in Paris. Don't make a mistake.

N. B.—Cloaks, Basques, Zouaves and Dresses of every description made to order in the latest style. Prices as cheap as possible.

ALL GOOD JUDGES OF PIANOS agree that Frisbee & Scott have the finest and largest stock of Pianos in this city. They are agents of the celebrated firms of Calenberg & Vaupel, of New York, and Knahe & Co., Baltimore. There is certainly not an instrument equal to those imported by them. Mr. Gusvav A. Scott pays, also, particular attention to having their stock of foreign and American sheet music equal to any New York store. They keep at No. 3 Montgomery street, Masonic Temple.

JACOB SHEW & Co., No. 315 Montgomery street, near Pine, take First-Class Photographs, of all kinds, at the lowest scale of prices adopted by the Associated Photographers. Photographs retouched in the highest style of the art.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.

"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

"THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR HOW TO LIVE, AND WHAT TO LIVE FOR."—This is the title of an interesting and highly useful little book, published by Dr. Beck, of this city. It is especially adapted for the perusal of young men, nevertheless its truthful pages should be read by all, as they contain good, sound, healthy matter which can be easily understood and appreciated by every reader. This work is issued gratuitously on application to the Doctor, or will be sent free to any address on receipt of postage stamp or envelope addressed to Dr. Beck's office, 314 Kearny street, or post office Box 1599.

Dr. Beck is a member of several American and European Universities, and has published numerous works on Anatomy, Medicine, and Surgery His former connection with the principal "Anatomical Museums" of New York, Paris, London, etc., combined with his experience in his profession render him a highly desirable person to consult, and we can confidently recommend him to the public. *

FRAGRANT SOZODONT FOR THE TEETH

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D.D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. D. D., Pastor Fourth Universalist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
je2 4m NEW YORK.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial streets.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil, Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Cogbill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co., 9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Buyce & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slossou & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent, 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co., N.E. cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S.W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pin

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Roscublatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morsbead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. F. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.
T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured just as speedily as was Mr. Sparrow, whose testimony is given below, and is only the echo of hundreds of other cases. Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street entrance:

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may be registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must be so arranged that the same can be conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will be charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will be forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid by stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where printed and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

PACIFIC BUSINESS COLLEGE,

751 MARKET STREET,
(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)
SAN FRANCISCO.

AN INSTITUTION designed to prepare boys, young and middle-aged men for the active duties of business in the shortest time possible and at the least expense. For "COLLEGE REVIEW," giving information, call at the College, or address E. P. HEALD, President.
au11 3m

THE NORTH BRITISH AND MERCANTILE INSURANCE CO

OF LONDON AND EDINBURGH.

ESTABLISHED, 1809.

Capital, - - - - - -	$10,000,000
Accumulated Funds, March 6, 1865, -	11.522,500
Annual Income, - - - -	2,827,290
Deposit in California under State law, -	$75,000

GENERAL AGENCY FOR THE PACIFIC STATES AND TERRITORIES,

Cor. Sansome and California streets, San Francisco

Insurances effected at the lowest rates on buildings of both Brick and Wood, throughout the State, whether occupied as Stores, Dwellings, or Warehouses, together with their contents.

Also, VESSELS in port, with or without their Cargoes.

Also, QUARTZ MILLS and MACHINERY.

mediately on adjustment.

WM. H. TILLINGHAST, Agent.
my19

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM
AT THE
State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

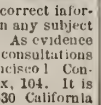
If there is a FLORENCE SEWING-MAchine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,
General Agent,
111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.



THE

SEWING MACHINE
RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.
my10 3m

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. jc15 3m

EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND IN USE!

THE ORIGINAL P. P. STEWART'S FUEL SAVING

Air-Tight Cooking Stoves,

FOR WOOD OR COAL.

IMPROVED IN 1861;

WITH NEW AND EXTRA LARGE FLUES, AND BY THE ADDITION OF THE CELEBRATED PATENT DOUBLE SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.

Attention is Invited to the following Points of Superiority:

1. DURABILITY.—Lasting, with proper care, at least twenty years. Stoves are now in use that were set up in 1838.

2. MANUFACTURE.—Every portion of the Stove is thoroughly constructed. Each Stove is submitted to a critical test, and none leave our works unless completely and perfectly finished.

3. CAPACITY.—Baking, Boiling, Roasting, and all other culinary operations performed at the same time.

4. ECONOMY.—Saving the cost of the Stove in one year in the cost of fuel.

5. VENTILATION OF OVEN.—In the Stewart Stove alone, the front doors open directly into the oven, (protected by letters patent) securing a direct draft through the top of the oven by means of perforated holes in the doors and back flues. It will be borne in mind that, as the heated air always rises, this method of ventilation is the only one of any value whatever.

6. ENTIRE CONTROL OF HEAT.—The heat generated by the Stove may be held therein and used or thrown into the room at pleasure.

7. THE DOUBLE SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.—By which a compressing and inverting action of heat is obtained, and the oven more evenly and efficiently heated than by any other known invention

9. HOT WATER RESERVOIR AND WARMING CLOSET.—Both useful and convenient, supplied by the waste heat and without extra fuel.

10. WATER BACK.—An arrangement for supplying hot water for the bath-room equal to any range.

 Beware of numerous imitations in the market, many of which resemble the "Stewart" only in appearance, and none of them possess any of its peculiar qualities.

See that the name of P. P. STEWART is on each Stove. None other genuine.

For sale by CALEB M. SICKLER,
422 Kearny street,
Between California and Pine, San Francisco.
Repairs for Stewart's Stoves constantly on hand.
au25 4m

A CARD.

Great Sale of Fine Clothing.

OUR WHOLE STOCK OF FINE CLOTHING and Gents' Furnishing Goods, for the next
THIRTY DAYS,
At Prices that Challenge Competition.

IT MUST BE SOLD, TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner Bush and Montgomery streets, and corner Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.
au4

ST. MARY'S COLLEGE,

San Francisco, Cal.

THE FOURTH ANNUAL SESSION of the above Institution commenced July 30th, 1866.

The age for admission is from seven to fifteen years. For those more than fifteen years of age, it will be necessary to have testimonials of good character from respectable parties.

TERMS.

Board and Tuition per session, (of 10 to 11 months) $175
Washing, Mending of Linen, etc., for same period, 25

No extra charges, save for Music and Drawing, which are three dollars a month each.

In case of withdrawal, (except for sickness or parents leaving the country,) the party will forfeit a quarter session, or the remaining portion of the half term.

The Pension to be paid at least half-yearly in advance; also, such sum to be deposited as will be sufficient to pay the traveling expenses of the student to his place of residence, and other contingent expenses, such as books, clothes, etc.

No Student will be received without such deposit.

The terms are so reduced (less than one half the usual charges in this State) that the Institution can be conducted only on a rigid cash principle; hence any failure in remitting the Pension will oblige the authorities of the College to charge ten per cent. additional, or forward the student to his parents or guardian.

Though it be a Catholic Institution, yet pupils of all denominations will be admitted, and their religious convictions respected; but, for the sake of uniformity all will be required to be present at the public religious exercises.

Bedding, towels, etc., will be furnished by the Institution, to defray the cost of which ten dollars will be paid, once only, by each pupil, as an entrance fee.

Each pupil is required to be provided with a neat black suit for Sundays, and two other plain suits, three pairs of boots, with sufficient linen, stockings, etc.

Five dollars will also be charged annually for medicines and medical attendance.

au4 1m REV P. J. GREY, President.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY

J. P. BOGARDUS AND C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchant street
SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN

TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

OCCIDENTAL INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
J. GREENEBAUM, Vice President.
B. ROTHSCHILD, Secretary. mh25 tf

TRY LE COUNT'S INK.

CORNER OF
Sacramento and Montgomery streets,
SAN FRANCISCO.
Post Office Address: Lock Box No 1477. je30 3m

THE LIGHT OF THE WORLD.

DR. MAGGIEL'S Pills and Salve.

These Life-giving remedies are now, for the first time, given publicly to the world. For over a quarter of a century of private practice the ingredients in these

LIFE-GIVING PILLS!

Have been used with the greatest success. Their mission is not only to prevent disease, but to cure. They search out the various maladies by which the patient is suffering, and re-invigorate the failing system. To the aged and infirm a few doses of these valuable PILLS will prove to be

A VERY FOUNTAIN OF YOUTH,

For in every case they add new life and vitality, and restore the waning energies to their pristine state. To the young and middle-aged, they will prove most invaluable, as a ready, specific, and sterling medicine. Here is a dream realized, that Ponce-de-Leon sought for three hundred years ago, and never found. He looked for a fountain that would restore the old to vigor and make youth ever

AN ETERNAL SPRING!

It was left for this day and hour to realize the dream, and show in one glorious fact, the magic that made it fair.

THESE FAMOUS REMEDIES

Cannot stay the flight of years, but they can force back, and hold aloof, diseases that might triumph over the aged and the young. Let none hesitate then, but seize the favorable opportunity that offers. When taken as prescribed—

FOR BILLIOUS DISORDERS

Nothing can be more productive of cure than these Pills. Their almost magic influence is felt at once; and the usual concomitants of this most distressing disease are removed. These remedies are made from the purest

VEGETABLE COMPOUND.

They will not harm the most delicate female, and can be given with good effect in prescribed doses to the youngest babe.

FOR CUTANEOUS DISORDERS

And all eruptions of the skin, the SALVE is most invaluable. It does not heal externally alone, but penetrates with the most searching effects to the very root of the evil!

Dr. Maggiel's Pills

Invariably cure the following diseases:

Asthma,
Bowel Complaints,
Coughs,
Colds,
Chest Diseases,
Costiveness,
Dyspepsia,
Diarrhœa,
Dropsy,
Debility,
Female Complaints, Fever and Ague
Headache,
Indigestion,
Influenza,
Inflammation,
Inward Weakness,
Liver Complaint,
Lowness of Spirits,
Ringworm,
Rheumatism,
Salt Rheum,
Scalds,
Skin Diseases.

NOTICE.—None genuine without the engraved trade-mark around each pot or box, signed by Dr. J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton st., New York, to counterfeit which is felony.

☞ Sold by all respectable Dealers in Medicines throughout the United States—at 25 cents per box or pot. R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Corner Sansome and Pine,
ap14 1y Agents for Pacific Coast.

MONEY TO LOAN!

MONEY TO LOAN

On City Real Estate, Dwellings, Factories, Shipping and Merchandise, for such time as may be agreed for. Deposits received in small or large sums, at interest, by the CALIFORNIA BUILDING, LOAN AND SAVINGS BANK,
53 California street, (one door from Sansome street.)
my THOMAS MOONEY, President

UNITED STATES STAMP DUTIES.

AS AMENDED MARCH 3, 1865.

CAREFULLY REVISED AND CORRECTED FOR THE CALIFORNIAN.

PENALTIES.

Penalty for making, signing, or issuing any instrument, document, or paper of any kind whatsoever, without the same being duly stamped, for denoting the duty hereby imposed thereon, $50; and the instrument shall be deemed invalid and of no effect; or for counterfeiting stamps or dies, $1,000, and imprisonment to hard labor not exceeding five years. For making, signing, issuing, accepting, or paying any bill of exchange, draft, order, or note without stamp, $200. For selling proprietary cosmetics, matches, photographs, etc., without proper stamps, $10. For removing stamps on these articles, $50.

STAMP DUTIES.

Agreement Contract or Appraisement, not otherwise specified, each sheet or piece of paper..$0 05
Assignment of Mortgage, Lease, or Policy of Insurance, same as original instrument. Assignment of Patent Right..... 05
Bank Checks, Drafts or orders, exceeding $10, at sight or on demand..... 02
Bills of Exchange, (inland,) or draft otherwise than at sight or on demand, or promissory note except bank notes for circulation,) or any memorandum, check or receipt, or any evidence of an amount of money payable on demand or at a designated time, for a sum not exceeding $100..... 05
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 05
Bill of Exchange, (foreign,) or letter of credit, drawn in, but payable out of the U. S., if drawn singly, the same rates as inland bills of exchange, or promissory notes.
If drawn in sets of three or more, for each bill of the set, where the sum shall not exceed $100 or its equivalent in any foreign currency in which such bill may be expressed, according to the standard value fixed by U. S. 02
Every additional $100, or fractional part... 02
Bill of Lading, or receipt for any merchandise or effects, to be exported to a foreign port or place..... 10
Bill of Sale, conveying any ship or vessel, or any part thereof, where the consideration does not exceed $500..... 50
For every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bill of Sale of personal property other than ships or vessels..... 05
Bond, indemnifying any person for the payment of money, where the amount recoverable is $1,000 or less..... 50
For every additional $1,000, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Bond for the due performance of the duties of any office..... 1 00
Bond of any other description, except such as may be required in legal proceedings, or used in connection with mortgage deeds, and not otherwise charged in this schedule..... 25
Charter-Party, ship, vessel or steamer, not over 150 tons, $1; 150 to 300 tons, $3; 300 to 600 tons, $5; over 600 tons.....10 00
Certificate of Profits, or any memorandum showing an interest in property, or accumulations of any incorporated company, for a sum not less than $10 nor exceeding $50..... 10
Exceeding $50 and not $1,000..... 25
For every additional $1,000 or fract'nl part 25
Certificate of Damage, and all other certificates or documents issued by Port Wardens or Marine Surveyors, or other persons acting as such 25
Certificate of Deposit, not exceeding the sum of $100, 2 cents; exceeding $100..... 05
Certificate of stock in any incorporated comp'y, 25
Certificates, other than specified..... 05
Contract, broker's note or memorandum of sale of goods, stocks, bonds, exchange notes of hand, real estate, or other description of property, issued by any person acting as a broker, for each note or memorandum of sale..... 10
Deed or Conveyance of Real Estate, value not over $500, 50c.; every additional $500, or fractional part thereof..... 50
Entry of Goods at any custom-house, value not over $100, 25c.; over $100 and not over $500, 50c.; over $500.....1 00
For the withdrawal of goods from bonded warehouse..... 50
Gauger's Returns, quarterly, for quantity not over 500 galls. gross, 10c.; over 500 galls. gr. 25
Insurance (Marine, Inland and Fire) policy or renewal, premium not over $10, 10c.; $10 to $50, 25c.; over $50, 50c.; Life policy, under $1,000, 25c.; $1,000 to $5,000, 50c; over $5,000.1 00
Lease of lands or tenements, rent not over $300 per annum, 50c.; each add'l $200 or fraction. 50
Manifest, cargo to foreign port, registered tonnage not over 300 tons, $1; over 300 and not over 600, $3; over 600 tons.....5 00
Measurer's Returns, for quantity not over 1,000 bushels, 10c.; over 1,000 bushels..... 25
Mortgage, Trust deed, or personal bond for payment of money, $100 to $500, 50c.; each additional $500..... 50
Each assignment of mortgage, lease or policy of insurance, or renewal of the same, is subject to same duties as the original.
Medicines or Preparations, Perfumery and Cosmetics—Every package, box, bottle, etc., retailing for 25c. or less..... 01
Each additional 25c. or fractional part thereof, up to $1, 1c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof, over $1..... 02
Playing Cards—Each pack, price not over 18c., 2c.; from 18 to 25c., 4c.; 25 to 50c., 10c.; 50c. to $1, 15c.; each additional 50c. or fractional part thereof..... 05
Photographs, Ambrotypes, Daguerreotypes or Sun Pictures, upon each, retailing for 25c. or less, 2c.; over 25 and not over 50c., 5c.; over 50c. and not over $1, 3c.; each additional $1 or fractional part thereof..... 05
Passage Ticket to foreign port, cost not over $35, 50c.; over $35 and not over $50, $1; every additional $50 or fractional part thereof.....1 00
Power of Attorney to sell or transfer stock, scrip, bonds, or collect dividends or int. thereon 25
To vote for officers of incorporated comp'y or society not religious, charitable or literary, or public cemeteries..... 10
To receive or collect rents..... 25
To sell, convey, rent or lease real estate.....1 00
For any other purpose..... 50
Probate of Will, or letters of administration, estate not over $2,000, $1; each additional $1,000 or fractional part thereof..... 50
Protest of note, bill, acceptance, check or draft, 25
Promissory Note—See Bill of Exchange, inland.
Receipt for payment of money or debt over $20, not being for satisfaction of mortgage, judgment or decree of Court, and receipt for the delivery of property..... 02
Warehouse, for property stored, not over $500 in value, 10c.; $500 to $1,000, 20c.; every additional $1,000..... 10
For any goods held in storage, and not otherwise provided for..... 25
Weigher's Returns, up to 5,000 lbs., 10c.; over 5,000 lbs..... 25
Writs, or original process, for commencing suit in Court of record, and in Court not of record, when amount claimed is $100 or over, except before Justices of the Peace, or in court of no greater jurisdiction as to damages, or in suit commenced by the United States or any State..... 50
Upon every confession of judgment, or cognovit, for $100 or over, except where tax for a writ has been paid..... 50
Writs or process on appeal from Justice's courts and other courts of inferior jurisdiction to courts of record..... 50
Warrant of distrees—rent claimed under $100, 25c.; over $100..... 50

TYLER BROTHERS,

NO. 632 WASHINGTON STREET,

AND 691 MARKET STREET, - - - - CORNER THIRD,

SAN FRANCISCO,

IMPORTERS, WHOLESALE AND RETAIL DEALERS IN

SCHOOL BOOKS,

STATIONERY,

PHOTOGRAPH ALBUMS,

BLANK BOOKS,

PORTFOLIOS,

JUVENILE BOOKS,

FANCY ARTICLES,

CHILDRENS' PICTURE BOOKS, Etc.

Especial attention given to

LADIES' STATIONERY,

Which we stamp with

INITIALS,

In COLORS or PLAIN.

WEDDING AND VISITING CARDS

ENGRAVED, WRITTEN, OR PRINTED.

jc23

W. E. GOLDSMITH,

Practical Card and Seal Engraver,

AND PLATE PRINTER,

No. 505 Montgomery street, over Tucker's.

au25-3m.

STERETT & CUBERY,

PRINTERS,

533 Clay street, San Francisco.

B. F. STERETT - - - - - - - WM. M. CUBERY.

We are prepared to execute in a prompt and satisfactory manner, all kinds of Book, Job and Card Printing; also, Blank Books manufactured and Paper Ruled to order. au15

EDWARD BOSQUI & Co.,

PRINTERS,

And Blank Book Manufacturers,

517 CLAY STREET,

Between Montgomery and Sansome Sts.,

SAN FRANCISCO.

CHILION BEACH,

Bookseller and Stationer,

NO. 31 MONTGOMERY STREET,

Opposite the Lick House,

Paper Stamped with Initials, plain and colored, to border. All the New Books received by every steamer from New York. au25 3m

CELEBRATED BRADBURY PIANOS.

SIX OF THE BEST,

Just received and for sale by the agent,

A. KOHLER,

s1 3m No. 424 Sansome street.

BOWMAN & CO.,

Dealers in Stoves and Tin Ware,

mar24-6m Mai street Petaluma.

OCCIDENTAL

HOMESTEAD

Association,

OFFICE, - - - 305 MONTGOMERY STREET.

CAPITAL STOCK, $33,660.

102 SHARES.....$330 EACH.

THIS ASSOCIATION was formed to enable its members to obtain desirable homestead lots in this city at a cheap and easy rate, paying for the same by regular monthly instalments.

For this purpose they have purchased Blocks 409, 500, and 501, in the Western Addition to this city, bounded by Devisadero, Pine, Broderick and Clay streets.

Subscribers will pay an initiation fee of $5 on each share taken, to form a fund for defraying current expenses, and $11 per month for thirty months, commencing in April, 1866.

The property is within three blocks of the

TURK STREET RAILROAD,

IS NEARLY ALL ON THE GRADE,

and is most desirably located for Homestead purposes.

It is directly east from the lands of the California Association.

The property has been purchased on very reasonable terms, and offers a rare opportunity for investment.

A number of fine houses are in process of erection, and streets are being graded near this property, which will greatly increase its value.

When twelve monthly payments have been made, the property will be divided among the members in the usual manner, and each shareholder will receive a contract for a deed to the lot or lots to which he may be entitled, and have the privilege of taking immediate possession of the same.

The lots average 27 feet in front by 120 feet in depth The whole amount due upon any lot may be paid at any time, and discount at the rate of one and one-half per cent. per month will be deducted therefrom.

Persons wishing to visit the lands of this Association will take the Turk street cars to Devisadero street, and thence go northerly along Devisadero to Pine street.

Twenty thousand dollars of the capital stock is taken, and the books are open for subscription to the balance at the office of the Secretary, where the Official Map of the Association can be seen, and full particulars obtained.

The Title to this Property is Perfect.

J. S. LUTY, Secretary,

Office, 305 Montgomery street, corner of Pine,

my19-3m Rooms 2 and 6.

STEREOSCOPIC VIEWS OF California Scenery!

A Series of over

ONE THOUSAND VIEWS!

Illustrating the different Processes of MINING, the MAMMOTH TREES OF CALAVERAS COUNTY, the Grandeur of the Yosemite Valley. Views of the Principal Cities, and many other points of interest on the Pacific Coast—PHOTOGRAPHED FROM NATURE, and published by

LAWRENCE & HOUSEWORTH,

OPTICIANS,

317 and 319 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

N. B.—Catalogues containing a complete list of Views sent to any part of the world, free of postage. s1-1m

BOYS! BOYS! BOYS!

NOW IS THE TIME

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.,

New No. 624) CLAY STREET, (Old No 17

Have received a Large Stock of

GENTS' AND BOYS' CLOTHING

—AND—

FURNISHING GOODS,

Which they are selling

AT VERY LOW PRICES.

Every Garment warranted. All are invited to call and examine our goods.

H. M. LOCKWOOD & CO.

ja1 624 Clay street, San Francisco.

STOP THAT COUGHING.

SOME OF YOU CAN'T, AND WE PITY YOU. You have tried every remedy but the ONE destined, by its intrinsic merit, to supersede all similar preparations It is not surprising you should be reluctant to try something else after the many experiments you have made of trashy compounds foisted on the public as a certain cure - but

NEWELL'S

PULMONARY SYRUP

is really the VERY BEST remedy ever compounded for the cure of Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Asthma, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis and Consumption. Thousands of people in California and Oregon have been already benefited by the surprising curative powers of

NEWELL'S PULMONARY SYRUP,

and with one accord give it their unqualified approbation. We now address ourselves to all who are unacquainted with this, the greatest Panacea of the age, for the healing of all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, assuring you that has cured thousands, and it will cure you if you try it. This invaluable medicine is pleasant to the taste, soothing, healing and strengthening in its effects; entirely free from all poisonous or deleterious drugs, and perfectly harmless under all circumstances.

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup

Certificates from many prominent citizens of San Francisco accompany every bottle of

Newell's Pulmonary Syrup.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,

San Francisco.

REDINGTON'S

Flavoring Extract

ARE MADE FROM FRESH FRUITS. Each bottle holds twice as much as any other brand in the market, consequently they are the cheapest and the best. USE NO OTHER.

REDINGTON & CO.,

Agents for the Pacific Coast.

MARTHA WASHINGTON

HAIR RESTORER.

THIS IS A WONDERFUL DISCOVERY, and stands above comparison with any other article for the Hair ever brought before the public.

A PERFECT

Hair Restorer AND Hair Dresser

BOTH COMBINED IN ONE.

First—It is not a Dye.
Second—Will not Color the Skin.
Third—Will restore Gray Hair to a beautiful Black, Brown, Auburn, or whatever might have been its original color, and cause it to assume its former beauty.
Fourth—Will cure all Humors and Diseases of the Scalp.
Fifth—Will remove Dandruff and Scurf from the head, and keep the hair moist and silk like in its appearance as in youthful days.
Sixth—Will promote a healthy growth.
Seventh—Will prevent it from falling off, and cause it to grow on bald heads where there is life and vitality at the roots, but where these are gone there is no hope of success.
Eighth—The best testimony that can be given will be found inside of each bottle.

Warranted to do all we claim for it, or the money refunded after using two bottles. Try it and be convinced.

SOLD EVERYWHERE.

Price.....One Dollar.

SIMONDS & CO., Proprietors,
Fitzwilliam, N. H.

REDINGTON & CO., Agents,

San Francisco.

REDINGTON & CO.'S

Essence of Jamaica Ginger.

THIS VALUABLE PREPARATION, containing in a highly concentrated form all the properties of the Jamaica Ginger, has become one of the most popular domestic remedies for all diseases of the stomach and digestive organs.

As a tonic it will be found invaluable to all persons recovering from debility, whether produced by fever or otherwise, for whilst it imparts to the system all the glow and vigor that can be produced by wine or brandy, it is entirely free from the reactionary effects that follow the use of spirits of any kind.

It is also an excellent remedy for females who suffer from difficult menstruation, giving almost immediate relief to the spasms that so frequently accompany that period.

It gives immediate relief to Nausea, caused by riding in a railroad car, or by sea sickness, or other causes.

It is also valuable as an external application for Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, etc.

REDINGTON & CO.,

au4-6m Sole Agents for the Pacific Coast.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE,

Montgomery street.

Bianchi's Grand Italian Opera Troupe.

General Director.....J. P. Crowly
Treasurer.....A. Birrell

NON-SUBSCRIPTION NIGHT.

SATURDAY EVENING.....SEPT. 8,

Will be presented Ricci's Comic Opera of Crispino e la Comare.

Annette, Crispino's wife.....Signorina Brambilla
La Comare, a Fairy.....Mlle. Louisa Tourney
Contino Del Flore.....Signor E. Bianchi
Crispino, a Cobler.....Signor Manensi
Chorus of Doctors, Apothecaries, Shopmen, Street Criers and News-Venders, Relatives and Friends of Crispino.

CONDUCTOR.....MR. RUDOLPH HEROLD
Scenery by Mr. Rogers. Costumes by Mrs Taylor.

Regular Subscription Nights, Mondays, Wednesdays, and Fridays.

PRICES OF ADMISSION.

Dress Circle, Orchestra and Parquette.....$1 00
Reserved seats, 50 cents extra.
Gallery.....50

☞ The Box Office is open from 9 A. M. for the securing of reserved seats for season tickets.

MAGUIRE'S OPERA HOUSE.

T. MAGUIRE, - - - PROPRIETOR AND MANAGER.
W. STEVENSON - - - - - - TREASURER.

SATURDAY AFTERNOON.....SEPT. 8,

LADY DON,

SUPPORTED BY

Miss Kate Denin,

AND A POWERFUL COMPANY

Will appear in Brough's new Burlesque entitled

Prince Florizel,

OR, THE WINTER'S TALE.

SATURDAY EVENING—

First night of Gray's celebrated

BEGGAR'S OPERA,

With the original music,

AND

PRINCE FLORIZEL.

MONDAY AND TUESDAY EVENINGS,

Charles Mathews' Musical Comedy of

THE BLACK DOMINO,

In which LADY DON will sing the principal gems from Auber's charming Opera, Le Domino Noir.

PRICES OF ADMISSION:

Dress Circle and Orchestra, - - - - - - $1 00
Reserved seats, - - - - - - - 50c. extra
Parquet, - - - - - - - - - 50
Upper Circle, - - - - - - - - - 25

SUMMER MEDICINE.

PURIFY THE BLOOD

AND

Constitution,

WITH

LE DOYEN'S

SARSAPARILLA,

YELLOW DOCK,

IODINE ALTERATIVE.

CRANE & BRIGHAM, Agents,
y19 1m SAN FRANCISCO.

WONDERS OF WONDERS!

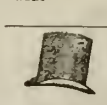
TO BE SEEN ONLY AT THE

Pacific Museum of Anatomy and Science,

Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27-tf between California and Pine.

A. ROMAN & CO.'S

LIST OF



Late Publications.

History of the Atlantic Telegraph, by Henry M. Field, D. D.
English Travellers and Italian Brigands, by W. J. C. Moens.
The Magic Mirror, by William Gilbert.
Men I Have Known, by William Jordan.
The Journal of a London Playgoer, from 1851 to 1866, by Henry Morley.
Venetian Life, by William D. Howells.
The Hidden Sin—a Novel, with numerous Illustrations.
Internal Revenue Law, compiled by Horace Dresser.
Jenny Ambrose, or Life in the Eastern States.
Cosas De Espana, by Mrs. Wm. Pitt Byrne—2 vols
Our Neighbors in the Corner House, by T. S. Arthur.
Stories that Might be True, etc., by Dora Greenwell
Post Biblcal History of the Jews, by Morris J. Raphall, M A Ph. Dr.—2 vols.
Illustrations of Masonry, by Wm. Preston—New Edition.
The Spirit of Masonry, by Wm. Hutchinson, F. S. A.—New Edition.
The True Masonic Chart, by Jeremy L. Cross—New Edition.
Fire, Fire Engines and Fire Brigades, by Chas. F. T. Young, C. E.
Hand-Book of Geographical Terms, Geology and Physical Geography, by David Page.
Engineering Facts and Figures for 1865, edited by Andrew Belts Brown.
Rules and Tables, by Professor Rankine.
The Exhibited Machinery of 1862, by D. K. Clark.
The Red Doctor, translated from the French of J. P. Lafitte, by Huon D'Aramis.
Homes without Hands, by Rev. J. G. Wood. American edition.
Drift; a Sea Shore, Idyl and other Poems, by Geo. Arnold.
Fernley Manor, by Mrs. Mackenzie Daniels.
War-Chess, or the Game of Battle.
Parlor and Field Croquet.
The Emerald, a Collection of Tales, Poems and Essays, edited by Epes Sargent.
Stanley's Mathematical Drawing Instruments.
Harpers' Hand-Book for Travelers in Europe and the East, by W. P. Fetridge, fifth year.
Manual of Map-Making, by Alex. Jamieson, LLD.
The Year-Book of Facts, 1866, by J. Timbs, F. S. A.
Across Mexico in 1864-5, by W H. Bullock.
The Embroiderer's Book of Design, by Delamotte.
Mediæval Alphabets and Initials, by F. Delamotte.
Examples of Modern Alphabets, Plain and Ornamental, collected by F. Delamotte.
The Book of Ornamental Alphabets, Ancient and Mediæval, by F. Delamotte.
Journal of Eugenie De Guerin.
The Mormon Prophet, by Mrs. C. V. Waite.
Culture of the Grape, by W. C. Stroug.
De Profundis, by Wm. Gilbert.

PUBLIC AND PRIVATE LIBRARIES SUPPLIED,

ON FAVORABLE TERMS.

A. ROMAN & CO.,
Publishers, Booksellers and Stationers,
417 and 419 Montgomery street,
au25 San Francisco.

THE STYLES FOR

Fall and Winter of 1866

WILL BE INTRODUCED

SATURDAY....SEPTEMBER FIRST,

AT

MEUSSDORFFER'S

HAT MANUFACTORIES,

635 and 637 Commercial street.....San Francisco
125 J street.....Sacramento
Corner of D and Second street.....Marysville

We wish to direct especial attention to the choice variety of LATEST NOVELTIES selected by Mr. K. MEUSDORFFER, at Paris, London and New York, which arrived by last steamer. Our own manufacture of MOLESKIN HATS are the EXCELSIOR in elegance and durability in the State.
s1-1m

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double-refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

MASON & HAMLIN'S

CELEBRATED
CABINET ORGANS.
New styles, with Automatic Bellows Swell, at warerooms of agent.

A. KOHLER,
s1 3m No. 424 Sansome street.

TOWNE & BACON

Book and Job Printers,
Book Binders,
Blank Book Makers,
Paper Rulers,
536 Clay St., opp. Leidesdorff,
San Francisco, Cal.

This Firm are large importers of Paper, Printers' Materials, Ink, &c.; and with the largest Printing Office in the State, are able to do good work with dispatch, at very low prices.

Parties sending orders from the Interior will be served as faithfully as though personally present.

Samples and price lists furnished if desired, and work guaranteed to give satisfaction.

Agents for H. D. Wade's Inks.

s8 tf

BRITISH PERIODICALS.

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW (Conservative.)
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW (Whig.)
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW (Radical.)
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW (Free Church.)
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE (Tory.)

The interest of these Periodicals to American readers is rather increased than diminished by the articles they contain on our late Civil War, and though sometimes tinged with prejudice, they may still, considering their great ability, and the different stand-points from which they are written, be read and studied with advantage by the people of this country, of every creed and party.

TERMS FOR 1866.

For any one of the Reviews, per annum.....$4
For any two of the Reviews, per annum..... 7
For any three of the Reviews, per annum.....10
For all four of the Reviews, per annum.....12
For Blackwood's Magazine, per annum..... 4
For Blackwood and one Review, per annum.... 7
Blackwood and any two of the Reviews, per an..10
Blackwood and three of the Reviews, per annum.13
Blackwood and the four Reviews, per annum....15

CLUBS.

A discount of twenty per cent. will be allowed to clubs of four or more persons. Thus, four copies of Blackwood, or of one Review, will be sent to one address for $12 80. Four copies of the four Reviews and Blackwood, for $18, and so on.

POSTAGE.

When sent by mail, the Postage to any part of the Union will be but Twenty-four Cents a year for Blackwood, and but Eight Cents a year for each of the Reviews

REDUCED PRICES FOR PREVIOUS YEARS.

Subscribers may obtain the Reprints immediately preceding 1866, as follows, viz:

Blackwood from September, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, at the rate of $2 50 a year.

The North British from January, 1865, to December, 1865, inclusive; the Edinburgh and the Westminster from April, 1864, to December, 1865, inclusive, and the London Quarterly for the year 1865, at the rate of $1 50 a year for each or any Review.

A few copies yet remain of all the Four Reviews for 1863 at $4 a set, or $1 50 for any one.

LEONARD SCOTT & CO., Publishers,
38 Walker street, New York.

BREWSTER & CO.'S

Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE

WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

CARRINGTON & CO'S

GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,
No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear, or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT

Address:

CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y

NEW DRY GOODS!

FALL IMPORTATION, 1866,

Meagher, Taaffe & Co.

WILL EXHIBIT AT

THEIR RETAIL STORE,

ON

Monday, - - - August 20th,

A FULL AND COMPLETE STOCK OF Splendid Dress Goods!

CONSISTING OF

SILKS—

Rich Moire Antique, Watered, Chine, Brocade, Plaid, Striped and Plain—all in new and elegant designs and colors.
Black Silks from the celebrated manufactories of "Bonnet's," "Bischoff's," and "Ponson's," of Lyons, France.
Poplin of superior make in Irish and French—in all colors.
Empress Cloth—in all colors.
Plaid, Striped and Plain Poplinets and Cashmeres.
Merinos, De Laines, Prints, Ginghams.
Laces and Embroideries of every description.
Hosiery for Ladies, Gentlemen and Children.
Shawls—in India and French Cashmere, Paisley, Broche and Woolen.
Cloaks, Basques, Saques and Talmas—made to order in the most fashionable styles.

KID GLOVES—

1500 dozen in all colors and sizes, from the manufactories of Alexandre and Preville, of Paris.

ALSO AT

GREATLY REDUCED PRICES!

THE FOLLOWING DESCRIBED GOODS, ALL OF WHICH HAVE JUST BEEN LANDED, AND ARE Warranted of Superior Quality.

COTTONS—

1000 pieces Brown Cottons, from 4-4 to 10-4.
1000 pcs 8-4, 9-4 and 10-4 Cotton Sheetings.
200 pieces New York Mills Shirtings.
300 pieces Wamsutta Shirtings.
500 pieces White Rock Shirtings.
400 pieces Lonsdale Shirtings.
700 ps Masonville and Williamsville Shirtings.
600 pairs of Lace Curtains.

LINENS—

500 pieces Super Shirting Linens.
200 pieces Superior Sheeting Linens, in 8-4, 9-4, 10-4, 11-4, and 12-4.
200 pieces Barnsley and Scotch Table Damask, of superior quality.
1000 Table Cloth, from 8-4 to 10-4.
800 dozen Table Napkins—all sizes.
1500 doz Towels, suitable for the Bath, Chamber and Kitchen.

WOOLENS—

1000 pairs Blankets, in 6-4, 8-4, 10-4 & 12-4.
500 pieces Flannels of every description.

CLOTHS FOR MEN AND BOYS' WEAR.

1000 Marseilles and American Quilts.

9 Montgomery Street,

LICK HOUSE.

WHOLESALE HOUSE,

NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.
au 21

NATURE UNVEILED,

AT THE

PACIFIC MUSEUM OF ANATOMY AND SCIENCE
Eureka Theatre, Montgomery street,
ja27 tf between California and Pine.

The Californian.

"SURELY THERE IS A VEIN FOR THE SILVER AND A PLACE FOR GOLD WHERE THEY FINE IT."

VOLUME V., No 17. OFFICE, No. 532 MERCHANT STREET. | SAN FRANCISCO, SEPTEMBER 15, 1866. | TERMS, $5 A YEAR, BY MAIL, IN ADVANCE. 50 CENTS A MONTH, BY CARRIER.

CONTENTS:

ORIGINAL:
California Children.
Electroplated Gentility.
Literary Gleanings and Gossip, with Copious Extracts from New Books.
"Lion's Mouth."
Applications for the Position of Editor.
Private Theatricals and The Church.
A Snort Against Pork and Beans.
Amusements, Etc.
Dreams.—By L. S. D. L.

SELECTED:
Conversion by Opera —A Story.
The Four Henrys.
The Gallant "Fourteenth."
An Englishman in America.
Fredericksburg and its Battle-Field.
A Feeling Editorial.
Mount Hood and Mount Baker.
Banking in China.
Cast Away on a Desolate Island.
Poetry: O, Summer Sea.

[For the Californian.]

DREAMS.

I'M dreaming, let my spirits wander freely as they will,
I'm dreaming words that ever, evermore will haunt me still.
And I hear a low voice pleading, whisp'ring words of quiet love,
'Till my own heart-throbs are murmuring like the cooing of a dove.
Gentle eyes and gentle measures greet me with a thrilling power,
As adown the lane I wander, 'neath the trees arch-woven bower.
Ah! I read the mighty workings through the windows of thy soul,
And I sway with soft emotion, like the magnet to the pole.
Brighter than the starry beaming, shining on us from above,
Come those streams of silver gladness, fraught with beauty and with love.
Tenderly thine arms entwining, press me gladly to thy breast;
'Twas for this my heart was yearning, seeking there its happy rest.
Ever, ever thus I'm dreaming, would the joy I could detain,
But the daylight's garish splendor, brings the saddened truth again.

NEW YORK, August, 1866. L. S. D. L.

MOUNT HOOD, A VOLCANO,

AND THE HIGHEST MOUNTAIN IN THE UNITED STATES.

THE following account of the ascent of Mount Hood was given before the California Academy of Seiences, at their last meeting, by Professor A. Wood, who has reeently returned from a botanical exploration of Oregon; it is eopied from the Society's reports published in the Scientific Press:

"On the 10th of August last, in company with Dr. Atkinson of Portland, and the Rev. J. Deardorff of Walla Walla, and three others, I stood upon the summit of Mount Hood in Oregon. From our last eamp on the summit of the Cascade Range to this point, the summit of Mount Hood is eleven miles of constant and wearying ascent, at angles about as follows: Five miles in the first, 12 to 15 degrees; two miles to eternal snow, 25 to 30 degress; one and a half miles to the gap in the rim of the erater, about 45 degrees; the remaining ascent traversing the ancient crater, nearly or quite 60 degrees. The day was cloudless; a strong, warm wind from the southeast softened the surface of the snow and favored our ascent, although it gave us much anxiety lest it should loosen some of the tremendous acclivities of snow and overhanging drifts from above us.

Starting from camp at daylight, on horseback four miles, we arrived at the top at 2 1-4 P. M., in 9 1-2 hours. The ascent was exceedingly difficult, and not without danger. The long Summer heat had undermined the snows, eausing their surface to conform more to the ruggedness of the mountains, and the slides had opened chasms of invisible depths aeross our path. We looked down into several of these chasms and saw that the massive walls below consisted of solid, blue ice, and terminated at length in the blackness of darkness. We could hear the noise of running water, apparently in torrents. One of these chasms was unavoidable, and must be crossed. Its transverse length was nearly a mile, and its width from ten to one hundred feet. By the aid of a rope, forty-five yards in length, and five pike poles, each eight feet, we crossed (of course at the narrowest place), and afterward by rope and poles, tugging, panting, dizzy, we dragged ourselves up to the terrific crest of this mountain monarch.

"The summit area is of very limited dimensions—a crescent in shape, half a mile in length, and from three to fifty feet in width. It is a fearful place, as it is the imminent brow of a precipice on the north, sheer down not less than a vertical mile of bare columnar rock! This hight is lifted so far above all other hights (except the four distant snow-clad peaks to the north and Mount Jeffersou on the south) that the country beneath seemed depressed to a uniform level, and the horizon retreated to the distance of more than 200 miles, including nearly all Oregon and Washington Territory. The sublimity and grandeur of that view I must leave to the imagination of the reader. A canyon of enormous depth plunged down along the southeast flank, and is filled in part by a glacier evi dently in motion, and having below a very abrupt termination. Terminal and lateral moraines mark its eourse, and a torrent of water issues from beneath. While we delayed here an avalanche of rocks, an immense mass, started by the wind, thundered down the left wall of this canyon several thousand feet, and its track was marked by a trail of white smoke. On the west side of the ancient crater, at the base of a vast craggy pinnacle of rocks (a portion of the ancieut rim of the crater), is still an open abyss, whence issue constantly volumes of a strong sulphurous smoke. That there is also heat there is evident from the immense depression of the snow about this plaee—depressed not less than 1,000 feet below the snows which fill to the brim other portions of the ancient crater.

We fouud our barometers useless in these vast hights, and were reduced to the use of the thermometer alone. By this we learned the boiling point of water at four several stations, as follows: At the eamp, the summit of the Caseade Range, it stood at 204 degrees Fahrenheit. At the upper verge ot the forest it indicated 195 1-2 degrees; at the highest reach of all apparent vegetation, 192 degrees; and finally at the summit, where, after the most persevering and determined efforts (on aecount of the violence of the wind), we at length, by meaus of a spirit lamp, changed a portion of snow to a eup of boiling water, the mereury standing firm in the cup at 180 degrees! These several results being charged to feet of elevation, according to the rule universally approved in such cases, indicate hights as follows, viz: At the summit of the Cascade Range, and foot of Mouut Hood proper, 4,400; at the limit of forest trees, about 9,000 feet; at the highest limit of vegetation, 11,000; at the summit of the mountain, 17,600 feet.

We earnestly hope that these results may be hereafter tested by tho barometer, and by triangulation. Until then, we must adopt the estimate here made, as the hight of that sublime peak, and accord to Mount Hood the distinetion of being the highest land in the United States, if not the highest upon the North American continent."

ASCENT OF MOUNT BAKER—ANOTHER VOLCANO.

The last number of the Pacific Tribune, of Olympia, Washington Territory, publishes the subjoined notice of a recent ascent of Mount Baker, another of those remarkable volcanic mountains of the north:

SEHOME, August 24th.

The party consisting of Messrs. Coleman, Tennant, and Bennet, have just returned from the exploration of Mount Baker, having been absent sixteen days. They report having had fine weather and a very pleasant trip. They reaehed the base of the mountain on the evening of the 16th, and made the aseent the next day, spending two days and one night on the mountaiu. The first day they reached a point about half way up the mountain and spent the night, and next morning made an early start aud reached a point within some fifty feet of the summit, where they were stopped by a perpendicular wall of ice, and overhanging cornices of ice and snow which threatened to fall at any instant and dash them to atoms, and effectually prevented their further progress in that direction. They are fully satisfied that had they diverged a little to their left hand a short distance below the point reached, they would have made the ascent.

The ascent of the mountain is difficult, but by no means impossible, and they have established the fact that the ascent can be made by the route they pursued. The crater of the mountain was passed by the party at the distance of some four hundred yards, and was discharging smoke plentifully, with a strong sulphurous smell. Tho mountains around the base are open, and covered with the most luxuriant growth of grass and flowers, all blooming fresh as in spring.

The party collected quite a number of new and rare plants. The ptarmigan, or white partridge, was also seen. Elk, deer, bear, and wolves are plentiful.

The Stars and Stripes were left floating over the highest point reaehed, and the party are determined auother season to put them on tho summit. They are unable to determine the altitude, on aceount of the defective apparatus, which proved to be entirely worthless. Water boiled at the base of the mountain at 192° Farenheit. The want of time and the distance from their cache prevented them from making another asceut, and in view of the difficulties which the party had to contend with, they have done all that could be expected, and more—going by the course of tho river over one hundred miles, and then taking packs and pushing fifteen or twenty miles through the most dense growth, over hills and rapid torrents, without shelter nearer than fifty miles.

A FEELING EDITORIAL.

COUNTRY editors are not always brilliant, but they are generally terribly in earnest; and whether it be in dunning their patrons for overdue bills, or abusing their village rivals, they go into it with a vim that is decidedly refreshing. The "City Council" of Mount Carmel, Illinois, has lately taken the City printing from the Wabash Democrat, who received $150 per year for the service, and given it to the Register, who offered to do the work for $50. Now listen to the Democrat in its virtuous indignation.

"We do uot intend to notice fully the articles which appeared in last week's issue of the Register, as it would occupy space which we can better devote to more interesting matter, and not insult our respectable readers. But the mean, low-lived cur who penned the article headed "Liars," calls us a liar, and if he will call up at our office, or appoint some particular place of meeting, we will make him swallow that lie, or take a Rousseau lecture as a consequenee! We dare him to come out from his anonymous, sneaking position. We say that we have been outrageously treated in regard to the City Printing, and we will repeat it agaiu aud again. Well may Beck and his coadjutors exult over our mortification, when a Democratic City Council would so belittle themselves as to send a Committee to him to negotiate for doing Democratic printing! This miserable, Radieal "cuss" that a Democratic City Council carried the City Priuting to! Well may we and all honest Democrats, and even decent Republicans, cry down the act, as it is a palpable, scandalous outrage upon the community! We can live without the printing, we have done so before we seen Mt. Carmel, but it is the act which worries us. If to foster Radical! baboons; drunken, ignorant, indecent Abolitionists, is Democratic policy, then we have been all along mistaken. Had there been another Democratic paper published here, and had the City Printing been awarded to it in place of to us, under any paying consideration, we would not have said a word. But to award it to our enemies—the enemies of Democracy and all that is right and just, is monstrous! The present City Council have rendered themselves notorious for all time to come. We regret it, partially, as some of the City Fathers are our personal friends, and acted in justice toward us; but the 'die is cast'—'the Rubicon has been crossed!'

"We hope our intelligent readers will pardon us for noticing so mean a fellow as Beek, and his negro-smelling sheet, but, in justiee to oursolf, we were obliged to refer to some of the billingsgate, and we could write volumes on the ungrateful and outrageous manner in which we have been treated by the City Council, in this printing matter. We do not want "to suck the City pap" for nothing; but we want Justice, tho' the heavens fall. We, in all justice, should be entitled to the City Printing this year, by virtue of our former contract. The City Printing this year will be very light in comparison with what it was last year, aud for this reason, it is given over to the Register calf. * * * * But we have done for the present. We have stated the whole matter plainly, truthfully, and honestly, and we now submit it to the consideration of an impartial public, feeling assured that their verdict will sanction our exposé and condemn the City Council!"

There is certainly no mistaking the man's feelings in this matter. The members of that "City Council havo rendered themselves notorious for all time to come." There can be no doubt about it.

CONVERSION BY OPERA.

I.

BORN and reared in the very strictest principles of Scotch morality, I had been a model boy and a more model youth. I was brought up by a dominie--virtuously, I hope—and was fortified every day with warnings against the corruptions of this wicked world, and the awful shoals and pitfalls of Babylon. Babylon was London.

Not to assume too much merit on this score, it should not be concealed that a great part of this sound inculcation was owing to the wishes—expressed or implied, or more probably assumed—of my Uncle Curriehill, in London. (We were Curriehills also; I was Samuel Currichill, named after the greater avuncular Samuel in London.) His principles were of the strictest sort, and it was said that when he should be called away to reap the reward of a life spent very virtuously, some eighty or a hundred thousand pounds of that earthy dross, which even the good know how to accumulate, would be left behind. What was to become of this fund, was often anxiously speculated over by my parents.

Thus strictly brought up, and cut off from all secular enjoyments, there was one pleasure left to me which became a passion—which was MUSIC: more, it was operatic music. At one season, a strolling—is that too disrespectful?—company of Italian singers, who were the property of a speculating impresario, was coming round the provinces, being fed, kept, clothed, and paid by the speculator; being his, in short, body and soul, for a term of years. They came to our local theatre and gave all their operas—"Norma," the innocent bigamiste, yet noble priestess; "Lucrezia," savage, injured, and yet excusable; "Trovatore," to which the local organs—the street ones, I mean—imparted a delightful familiarity: and, above all—alas! that it should have been below all—the seductive but erring "Traviata."

Now during these days I had been secretly studying the violin outside the house, and had obtained a tolerable command over that king of instruments; that is to say, I could play tunes from tune-books, not very much out of tune. I applied myself to it with desperate energy, and at last, about the date of the arrival of the farmed-out singers, had ceased to play "like fifty stomach-aches." My progress, too, in the principles of a rigid and æscetic virtue had kept pace with my fiddle-playing. But now I was to be tried by a sore temptation.

No sooner was the musical bill-of-fare set forth in gaudy and gorgeous letters on every blank wall, than I was assailed by strange and furious promptings. Who that had music in his soul could read of the "unrivalled cantatrice," Mdlle. Homini, assisted by Signora Bacco, with the tenor, Signor Pasquali, and the bassi, Signori Roriori e Gritti, with the other officers of the company, in green and crimson letters, the "suggeritore," whatever that was, and the "regisseur," the conductor, Signor Battoni, and the leader, Mr. Brittles, our own deservedly esteemed townsman (my violin master)—I say who could read through this gorgeous promise without his musical mouth "watering" prodigiously? Add to this being worked on in secret by Brittles, who was himself intoxicated by a distant communion with these immortals, and who literally raved during the lesson of the exquisite strains contained in their operas. What was the result? No doubt, had I consulted some of our elders, they would have warned me against the pitfall, and told me that this was but one of the pleasant shapes the arch enemy assumes for our destruction. But I did not heed. By a system of organized deception, appalling for its depravity in one so young—in which, too, I was abetted by Brittles, an accomplice before the fact—the thing was arranged. I went for a practice—a good long one, d'ye mark—at Brittle's; and, instead, with a beating, guilty heart, hurried off to hear Mdlle Homini in her grand part of "La Traviata."

I declare solemnly I no more knew nor dreamed what was the theme of that unlucky opera, nor the peculiar character of the young lady with the dreary cough, or what she was about, or why the doctor came, or why the gentlemen friends were let in to witness her last agonies (unless it would have been difficult to make up a quartette without them,) than did that infant not yet come into life, and who is so often unreasonably appealed to. I was simply entranced. It was a new sense—a patch of Elysium thrown open. I came home in a delirium, almost careless of concealment, defiant, ready for martyrdom in the cause of this new faith. Luckily, my severe parents took my rhapsodies as applying to the "tunes" used in the lesson. Tunes indeed! I should never play mere tunes again. From that hour, music took possession of me, and, above all, I was possessed with the witching, though incorrect (I mean in a moral point of view) melodies of the Travel'arter, as one of the men about our town pronounced it.

II.

A LITTLE later, a great event took place. Our Uncle Curriehill wrote to say he was solitary. He was curious to see what his nephew was like; so they might send him. If that nephew, Uncle Curriehill added, had any of the levity common to youth, or fancied he was coming to a profane house, where amusement, or relaxation, or anything but making of souls, was going forward, he was sadly mistaken. He added something about speaking his mind always as long as he lived, and "holding on by the Rock," which was a favorite expression of his.

When I arrived, I found him to be lonely, austere, æscetical old bachelor. His house had an cremitical air, and my spirits sank as I entered it. I came at an unfortunate moment; for it wanted but ten minutes to the time for "exercises"—the spiritual ones--though I was hungry with a long and weary journey. The servants, a severe and unassisted company, were called up to punishment; and for nearly an hour we listened to Uncle Curriehill, officiating--on that night with extra unction and extra length to make a favorable impression on the newly joined member of the congregation.

Yet I soon found him out to be a good-natured and indulgent relation, and with a way to his heart. Before that night was over, I had discovered a coffin-shaped case in a corner, containing various rusty-looking quarto volumes.

"What! do you play, Uncle Curriehill?" I cried, in a transport. "Yes, you do. I know you do."

A little embarrassed, he said, "Well, a little. There is nothing profane in it, except one plays on the Sabbath. David, we know——"

"I am so glad," I repeated; "and what do you play? We came to have duets."

He started now. "What, you play? Capital! we can have duets. And what do you play?"

"Fiddle, Uncle Curriehill," I said, "I'll fetch it." So I did. In a few moments the coffin was sacrilegiously opened, and in a few moments the room echoed with a delicious orchestral tuning, and we were scraping one of Archangelo Corelli's "Concertos," an old copy, I recollect, with a frontispiece of Archangelo himself, grim and bilious-looking, in a full-bottomed wig, and a list of his old dances, "Sarabandas," "Gigas," "Corantos," and "Ye Follia," whatever that was. When he had done with Archangelo, he asked me to play a solo. I tried a national air. But I saw he was languid. I played another. He was equally unexcited. Suddenly I thought--rather was it some spiteful familiar who suggested it?—what if I played that mournful and most musical bit out of the Sinner's Opera--The Traviata? I began the well known "Addio del passato," "tum tum, tumtit umti, tum tum," plaintively, with an expression of agony, as the music directed me. In a second he was caught. His eyes lighted up. His head began to move from right to left. He was charmed. When I had played it through twice, he asked, eagerly, "What is it? The name?"

This was an embarrassment I had not thought of. To name the Sinner's Opera in that house, nay, any opera, was fatal. With wonderful presence of mind, I answered,

"An Italian air, 'Addio del passato,' Uncle Curriehill."

"I'll order it to-morrow, and learn it myself. Spofforth & Riddel will get me any music I want. Give the name exactly." And he took out his pencil.

Embarrassing again. "The Addio——" I said, shortly.

"Addio what?" he went on; "you said something else."

I stammered, "Addio perche folingo," summing up some stray Italian.

"Very good," he said, making a note of it. "I'll get it to-morrow, and we can play it in unison."

I had to play it several times over that night, and each time he was more and more enraptured. It came to eleven o'clock. He looked at his watch with a start. It was an hour past the time for canonical exercises. He gave a cry. He little thought that this had been the Traviata's work.

III.

NEXT day, after breakfast, he called to me, "Now you must play me that--that"—and he took out his note—"that delightful 'Addio perche folingo.'"

Suddenly it occurred to me to glide into the well-known Brindisi Libiamo, or Drinking Song, from the same nefarious opera. The chique—is that the word?--or swing of that sparkling morcel quite enraptured him. Again he had out his note to take down the name. See the consequence of even one drifting deflexion from the paths of truth! Having fallen once, I had no alternative but to go on and coin another Italian name. This was the "Largo feroce," by the same author. His name? Ah, that I could not remember. I was not going to steep myself in deception.

He came back in the evening. "Very odd," he said. "I have been to Spofford's, and asked them for the 'Largo feroce' and the 'Addio perche folingo,' and they can't git it—never heard of it. In fact, a young shopman fellow said it didn't sound like Italian, and that there must be a mistake. However, they are to look out for it."

This was a relief. But how curious if airs with such titles were to turn up? It would be one of the most curious phenomena ever known.

His passion for the Sinner's Opera had grown by what it fed on, and insensibly I had, one by one, taught him nearly all the airs in that masterpiece--an incautious thing on my part; yet the grotesque humor of the situation had a sort of charm for me. But I was on a precipice.

One day he had gone out to his musicseller's, to get some "real old music," and was absent very long. When he came back I read in his face that something had happened. In a faltering voice, I asked, "Anything occurred, Uncle Curriehill?"

"This has occurred, sir," he answered in a voice of deep anger--"just step with me into the study. This has occurred, sir. I was in my music-shop to-day, and they showed me a new instrument, sir, and asked me to try it, and I did try it, and played that—that thing—that licentious drinking-thing that you brought into this virtuous house. And a gentleman at the end of the shop called out, 'Why, that's the air in the ——' What d'ye mean, sir? I thought I'd have dropped on the ground. How dare you introduce that corrupt, filthy stuff into his house--that noisome, unholy 'Traviata?'"

He used the figure of personification here with such force and graphic power that I actually looked round to see if there was any person answering the description present. He went on: "You are not fit for this place. You have poisoned the air. You are morally corrupt, sir. You had better go home at once." I answered with some penitence and pride mixed, that I was very sorry, but would not trespass on his hospitality longer.

That night he had no music, but sat moody and solitary. The hours dragged on, and we went to the "exercises," which it seemed to me he delivered with peculiar and special ascerbity. So went by several days, and not a single scrape was heard in the house. He scarcely spoke to me. At last one morning in a sort of defiant way, as who should say, "I am not bound to debar myself from amusement in my own house to satisfy your sulks," he took his violin and began to play Corelli—the "Gigas," then the "Corantos," then the "Sarabandas," and finally well through to "Ye Follia." (Even at that moment of dejection, when my prospects seemed dashed forever, I found myself speculating as to what the admirable Archangelo meant by his "Ye Follia.") Uncle Curriehill warmed to his work, played other tunes, and in a few minutes--could I believe my ears?—had glided into the wicked drinking-song out of the Trav—— No matter, he stopped a moment, catching himself in the act, blushed like a girl, gave an impatient "Pish!" threw down his violin, then laughed. He came over to me with his hand out. "My dear boy," he said, "there is no use carrying it on. I am miserable without my tunes. What can I do? There is no harm in it after all, though the Rev. Mr. McCorkup turns up his eyes, and says it will light up in us all the--no matter I don't believe him, though; I mean, I don't think he can know."

"My dear uncle," I said with enthusiasm, "Verdi's music is now established all over the world. Kings, courts, palaces, lawyers, priests, and parsons delight in it. It is the music of the day. It is driving out every other music. And as for the Trav——, I mean this particular production—I could show you something that would astound you. It is being played now."

He started. "Now!"

"Yes," I said, "every night to houses crammed to the roof. The Voltarelli, the lovely little creature, plays the part of the Trav——, I mean, of the what d'ye call 'em. The Queen and all the royal family, the ministers of state, the two Houses of Parliament, together with their wives and daughters, go indiscriminately."

He burst out warmly, "For shame, sir. I don't believe you. This is an atrocious libel. You are an abandoned fellow. Go away!"

"As I live," I said, "Uncle Curriehill, I am serious. Look here. The Morning Plush of yesterday—list of the company—at the Royal Italian Opera--fashionables. The most noble the Marchioness of Killfeathers and the Honorable Miss Downies (2), Lord Tyburn, Viscount and Viscountess Ketchup—and listen to this, uncle," I said, "what do you say to this? —Lady Catharine Macgregor and the Miss Macgregors!"

It came on him like a shot. For Lady Catharine was a shining light at our synagogue; had exercises herself; maintained a cold blue æscetical rule in Scotland; only lately had been seduced to London by the noble family of Tilbury's, who were to show them good society. What was the result? They were "fallen women," so the Rev. Mr. McCorkup called them.

My uncle groaned, yet the effect on him was not what it was to be on Mr. McCorkup. It was pure wonder and astonishment, and not at all to the prejudice of the "fallen women." He had such a high opinion of the sanctity of Lady Catherine, that it seemed to him not so much that she had sunk by going, as that there must have been a mistake about the nature of the thing itself. I saw his indecision' and struck it with a fresh blow.

"O, I have seen her name very often. She goes to everything. Never misses anything. I see the--the—the—" I stopped.

"La Traviata," said my uncle, absently.

"Yes," I went on, "is fixed for to-night. She will be there again with the Queen and royal family—the Prince of Wales."

"Of course," he said, testily, "he is included in the royal family. Very odd, very, very odd."

He went away ruminating. It was now about four. He went up to his room and shut himself in, perhaps for the private exercise. Towards six he suddenly came down.

"I have to go out," he said, "my dear boy, to meet a friend. I shall have business in the evening, and shall very likely dine at a chop house."

"Dine at a chop house!" I repeated, astounded.

"Yes. So make yourself as comfortable as you can without me."

When he has gone, I repeated to myself, "Dine at a chop house!" I could not make it out! Suddenly a little bill on the chimneypiece met my eye. It was to the effect that on that evening the "Rev. Wilkins Hubbard," who had spent seven or eight years in the Sandwich Islands, would relate how he had been, so, to speak, snatched out of the lion's jaws. This explained it, for Wilkins Hubbard did not belong to our severe Scotch denomination, but to a sort who were supposed to have "no saving grace," whom our elders had settled were to be "cast out finally." Yet notwithstanding, Wilkins Hubbard was a remarkable man, and I suspected Uncle Curriehill hankered after that particular spiritual fleshpot. That explained the whole quite clearly.

Left alone, a horrid, secret, overpowering temptation entered into me. Here was an opportunity for a vision that had haunted me day and night. Here it was in my grasp. Wilkins Hubbard, "if he was worth his salt," I said contemptuously, "as a Sandwich Island missionary," could not take less than two or three hours for his discourse. If he be not good for that, let him retire from his vain and profitless task and give place to better men. While my Uncle Curriehill was drivelling in his lights, what if I?—the opera house was not a mile away, the curtain would rise at eight punctually (no matter when it came down). Yes, I would do it.

A hansom was passing. A wild cry arrested his progress, and brought up the serious man-servant. He thought I was off to Wilkins Hubbard and the Sandwich Islanders, but also thought it unspiritual in me to choose such a "carnal vessel" as a hansom. We drove away, I almost delirious, and got to the opera house safely. Never did I feel so guilty—so full of crime.

Gorgeous sight! Dazzling, bewildering blaze of beauty! Aladdin's Wonderful Lamp was not to be named with it—no, nor the Arabian Nights. As for the squalid performance in our little country town, a "band" of fifteen, called by courtesy and with reasonable pride—for it was an enormous effort—the orchestra, I looked back to it with disgust. Here everything was vast, noble, superb. It took away my breath. It dazzled my eyes. It deprived me of my senses. But the music—what shall I say of that? How wild! how despairing! how it fell and how it rose—rose to those dark gallery latitudes where I was so happily confined.

Everybody about me, too, in these dark latitudes, and whose faces I could not see, were so delighted too, that they might have heard—not a pin, whose sound is sure to strike on an attentive ear—but even a feather fall. I could hear deep groans of enjoyment from a musical amateur close by me, who, with his hand to his ear, seemed determined not to miss a note. He had none of that absurd assistance for "following the story" in what is called "a libretto;" and from that I saw that he was a true amateur. It should be mentioned that the place was so utterly dark, it would have been impossible to see the page.

What a ravishing night! That bewitching lady, and her sad song, succeeded by the joeund "Sempre Libera," which made every head wag, and every foot patter (the groaning amateur beside me was jumping up and down off his seat in ecstasy); and when it came to the Drinking Song (of the organs), then the sickly-looking lover, who even at that stage looked as if he was meditating something shabby and sneaking, came to the front with a gorgeous silver claret jug in one hand, an enormous racing-cup, as it seemed to me, in the other, and struck up the famous "Liba-a-mo-libi-a-mo-tum tumtitumti-a-a-mo!" the groaning amateur could not restrain himself, but jumped up, and in extravagant delight clapped his hands in a way that disgusted everybody near him.

Why dwell on the mere details of this enchanting night? When it came to the end—the sick room, and the consumption, and the gorgeously elaborate Italian Opera bedstead, catafalque-shaped, with which the bedsteads in the royal palace would but poorly compare; when the maid and the doctor came in, and when I marked her altered countenance, in which disease and the heartless absence of that poor creature, the tenor, had left their mark, I was deeply affected. The amateur near me was fiddling nervously with his white handkerchief. But when the poor creature (I mean the tenor) did turn up at last (not, I firmly believe, from any natural good impulse of his own), and he, and the doctor, and the maid, and the dying lady struck up a pathetic sick-room quartette, I could hardly stand it any longer, and the groaning amateur near me was mopping his eyes hard and fast. Blissful night indeed! Down I came back to prosy life again.

Sadly and slowly I rose to go, stumbling in the dark over the steps and benches. Sadly and slowly I saw the groaning amateur rise to go also. He stumbled and groped over benches, and I felt drawn to him by a sort of sympathy. We had been both affected; we had been both touched by the same chords. He seemed an old man, and I was glad to observe that one so old was not dead to generous impulses. An irresistible instinct prompted me, on a fresh and more helpless stumble on his part, to rush forward and offer my arm—a civility which he hastily declined. But I was determined not to be rebuffed, and could be useful, at least, with a cab or something of the sort, so I followed him down the stair into the full blaze. The full blaze revealed his back, in which I seemed to recognize a familiar outline.

I hurried down the steps to get a good look at his face; but as I looked, he turned his head sharply away. I waited till he passed; we were both well under the glare of a lamp, and then I saw who it was—Uncle Curriehill. Alas! was this the way of going to hear the divine utterances of the Rev. Wilkins Hubbard?

Need I say what that night resulted in—a complete and entire reconciliation—not only in a reconciliation, but in a reform. Invidiously I may mention that the Rev. Mr. McCorkup was routed, and there were two particular stalls in the Royal Italian Opera from which myself and my convert were rarely absent during the season.—All the Year Round.

SUMMER AND AUTUMN.

I.

THE hot mid-summer, the bright mid-summer
Reigns in its glory now:
The earth is scorched with a golden fire,
There are berries, dead-ripe, on every brier,
And fruits on every bough.

II.

But the Autumn days, so sober and calm,
Steeped in a dreamy haze;
When the uplands all with harvests shine,
And we drink the wind like a fine, cool wine—
Ah, those are the best of days!

Richard Henry Stoddard.

FREDERICKSBURG AND ITS BATTLE-FIELD.

A TURN in the hills brought us into the valley of the Rappahannock. At Fredericksburg I left my fellow passengers. And here I tarried a fortnight.

A quaint old city is this historic place, reminding me more of an ancient settlement in South Jersey, than any town I had yet seen. The delapidation still reigning is more dreary than I had anticipated. Two years have passed since Burnside's guns played their sad havoc, and yet, ruin is everywhere. Great ragged holes high up in church steeples stare down upon you. Tall, gaunt chimneys with old hearth stones still clining to them, stand sad monuments of once happy homes. Piles of red bricks and crumbling mortar overrun with vines, marking the spot "where once the garden smiled." Low laid fences, shattered tree trunks, the glare of new wood work, meet the eye everywhere—mute testimony of the tearing shot which rained so unmercifully from the steep heights of Falmouth—yonder.

The streets of Fredericksburg were crowded with sights novel to the northern eye. Shoals of vagrant negroes shuffled by in rags and tatters of the once army blue. Here are young men, in confederate grey jackets, smoking "powhatten pipes" with long reeds, congregated on the steps of the warehouse, brooding over the melancholy times that had befallen them. Virginia farmers, on herring bone nags, clutching short sticks, getting the best speed out of their lean nags, lent a little enlivement to the scene. "Sorry white men" weather stained, sunburnt, tawny hair, in rags and shoeless, curled on the corners of small carts—kaarts they call them—drove their mules to the market place. These mules looked very sleek but their harness was mostly homemade and their drivers guided them with lines made of rope. These carts held generally a bag of corn, a few chickens, a young negro and some corn-stalks for the mule. Mule teams with bells making music in the sleepy old streets occasionally came in from the country—their long covered wagons loaded with corn. The well-to-do citizens of the place took quite a pride in sporting rimless wide awakes and old claw-hammer coats. But they still have a weakness for kid gloves, and one frequently saw an individual in a red flannel shirt and yellow "Jouvins." The first characteristic that strikes one is the ease and grace with which the whole population ride their horses. Buggies, and one horse pleasure vehicles, are almost unknown in Virginia towns. Their children often before they can walk, are perched on the saddle by their negro servants. A Virginia fast man under the influence of whiskey would rather ride his wild mare than trust to his own legs. I saw some very spirited riding in this line occasionally.

The streets of the town incline to the river; at the head of these streets is a wide level stretch of meadow, beyond these a low range of hills. At the foot of these hills the deadliest fight of the whole war took place. The displaced stones of Marye's wall still show where the confederate rested his rifle and took his deadly aim. The breast works of Lee's line, grass-grown now, can be readily traced. Trees splintered, fences torn, houses studded with balls—hundreds of graves rolling in a billowy sea of verdure crimsoned with falling rose leaves—all mark the place. They will show you where 1500 dead lay in their blood, and it is a very limited bit of green sward indeed. The panorama from these hills, Lee's old lines, is one of rare beauty. A broad belt of smooth meadow lies at our feet. Across this mid groves of linden and elm trees, rise the chimneys and spires of the old town—beyond, like a silver thread, the sheen of the gentle Rappahannock. Against the sky line, the heights of Falmouth, bare of the noble woods which were once its crowning glory. On a direct line is the famous Lucy House, with its terraces to the river; a little to the South, a stack of red chimney's all that remains of the Philip's House—Burnside's quarters. Even to the eye of the most ignorant in the scenes of war the fearful strength of Lee's position is too apparent.

An area in a semi-circle of hills is the battle-field, and well may our troops have thought they were in the jaws of hell when they passed out of the town, and, crawling up to this famous stone wall, met the deadly, enfilading fire of Lee's guns. These people tell you, men never fought better than our troops on that day.

The U. S. authorities were taking up the dead when I was there, gathering them in one extensive cemetery on the ridge beyond the wall. Ten thousand head-stones will be required. A party of negroes were engaged in this work. They found the poor relics of their search by the roadsides, on the meadows, and beneath vines and rose-trees, in private gardens. Where they fell, they were buried, no one caring where, so that they could be hastily shovelled beneath the sod after that day of carnage. Of course, these are all unknown; the information upon which the authorities work is that derived from citizens and negroes.

"There's a Yankee in our garden, sir," I heard a woman say; and her children had been romping gleefully over the poor lad's head these two summers past.

In many cases, a few feet below the earth's surface, the dead hero, in his unfaded army blue, knapsack strapped over chest, canteen beside him, lay in perfect form, but on the touch of the spade, bones and clothing crumbled to fragments. Then, gently as if they had a kindred feeling for the poor soldier, the negroes took up the mouldering remains and dropped them softly into the pine coffins, after which, a sinister-looking, one-eyed white man scribbled with a bit of chalk, "Unknown" on the red box. Into a big army wagon they put these coffins, and they were driven over the fields to the cemetry—a final resting place, I pray.

These negro resurrections were careful observers.

"Dat yer head got shot dar, massa." "Mighty powerful fellow, dis yer."

But what affected me most was, "Lor', massa! dis yer is a poor little drummer-boy's bones."

Women and children crowded the edges of these pits, emotionless—indifferent. The sad sights of '64, when their homes were in flames, their streets running gore, the dying groaning around them, had caused a fearful hardening of gentle sentiment.

There was one spot near the battle-field, in the ruins of an old ice-house, where they found three hundred skeletons.

A Siberian Woman.—A gentleman who is engaged in the telegraph expedition in Siberia, relates the following incident in a letter to a friend in Cincinnati: "I met with a Korak woman, of about twenty-two years of age, on the great Thunder (marked Kerau on the map), who drove a team of reindeers with a loaded sledge fifty versts in one day, and at night slept out in the snow, with no covering whatever except the clothes she had worn during the day, and in a temperature of forty-three degrees below zero, or seventy-five degrees below the freezing point! Think of that, ye effeminate ladies of America. That I saw myself, although even to me it seems incredible now. I thought it an extraordinary thing to sleep in a reindeer-skin tent out of doors in such weather, and I should have frozen to death in two hours had I attempted to sleep without it. She traveled with us, driving her own reindeer, and sleeping on the snow every night."

Paul Hayne, a young Southern poet, says: "Six years ago I received from Leigh Hunt—in acknowledgment, I presume, of certain complimentary reviews and verses—a most curious and valuable present; some strands, namely, of the hair of Keats, Shelley, Byron, and his own likewise. These I had neatly framed, and, though the war has left me a beggar, I have religiously preserved relics so precious. Shelley's hair and John Keat's have a golden tinge which is exquisite. Byron's is coarse and dark, like some phases of his character. As for Hunt's, the locks are white as snow."

Briggs has a faculty for getting things cheap. The other day he had a beautiful set of teeth inserted for nothing. He kicked a dog.

LITERARY GLEANINGS AND GOSSIP.

[This department is not designed to be strictly "critical," and will not supersede our usual book reviews; nor will it be limited to notices of new publications:]

WELLS' New Physiognomy, though scarcely an attractive book for consecutive reading, will be found by a large class of persons to possess a unique charm of its own, as a book to be "dipped into" at odd moments. We mean no disparagement of its scientific pretensions, but the real attractiveness of the volume for the majority will consist in the personal element, the individual characterizations, which have something of the piquancy of "gossip."

The chapters on "National Types with Portraits," "The Physiognomy of Classes Illustrated," "Love-Signs in the Lips, Chin, and Eyes," "The Great Secret of Human Beauty," "Character-Reading, with Illustrated Examples," "All About Noses, with Illustrations," will have a great many more readers than those on the "Structure of the Human Body," "The Anatomy of the Human Face," etc.

But our readers will best obtain a notion of the general scope and character of the book from a few extracts:

OF HEADS IN GENERAL.

A person whom nature has set apart, as it were, for a certain calling, by giving him the organization best fitted for it, will have the impress of that calling stamped upon him from the beginning; though if he disregard the indications of nature and devote himself, or be devoted, to some other pursuit, he may partially obliterate the original signs and acquire those of his actual calling.

Thus the born clergyman—the pre-ordained minister of religion—who understands the natural bias of his organization, and accepts humbly and prayerfully the sacred calling, grows day by day more truly a priest of God, both in character and in looks. In the same way the lawyer, the physician, the artist, etc., assimilate mentally and bodily to their peculiar type.

European society furnishes even more striking illustrations of this truth than can be found among us. Classes there are permanent, and trades and professions comparatively so, the son generally adopting the business of his father, and thus perpetuating and strengthening the peculiar organization and physiognomical traits which it is calculated to promote. The workmen at the quiet and noiseless trades are readily distinguished from those who pursue noisy, boisterous, and more active occupations. The tailor gets one form of head and expression of face, and the blacksmith quite another. The weaver and the stone-cutter do not look alike, nor the miner like either. Each trade has its peculiar condition of mind, and each condition of mind its cast of head and face. A Vulcan looks like Vulcan—an acrobat like an acrobat As a class, the clergy have the best heads in the world. It is a fact in Physiology, that those parts most exercised get most blood, and become largest and strongest. A true clergyman attends much to his devotions, lives constantly in its atmosphere, and he thereby cultivates the organs in the top-head—Veneration, Spirituality, Hope, Benevolence, and Conscientiousness. In consequence, the clergy, as a body, have high heads, full in the coronal region, but comparatively narrow at the base. Their pursuits at the same time developing the intellect as well as the sentiments and emotions, tend to give them those fine foreheads and side-heads, and that expression of intelligence and culture which our portraits so well illustrate. From Swedenborgh to Beecher, and from Wesley to Channing, they all, though differing widely in other particulars, agree in indicating a predominance of the higher intellectual faculties and the moral sentiments over the animal propensities which lie in the base of the brain.

MRS. BROWNING, SHAKSPEARE, AND MILTON CONTRASTED.

The head of Mrs. Browning is a model of its kind, especially in the centre at Veneration and forward in Benevolence, and she was full in Spirituality and Hope, also fully developed in the affections. She was most loving and lovable. Combined in her were a fine intellectual lobe, with broad and full Ideality, Sublimity, and Imitation, and she was no less worthy of admiration as a wife, as a friend, and a Christian, than as a scholar and a poetess.

In Shakespeare we have one of the finest modelled heads and faces which the human imagination can conceive of for finess of texture, fullness of expression, and exquisiteness of temperament. There is but one element wanting to place him head and shoulders above all the poets, viz.: Christian Spirituality. With less of the worldly and the wayward, and with more of the meek and the humble, he would have been well-nigh faultless. Intellectually, he may be said to have no equal, and in imagination, intuition, and appreciation of human character, no superior.

Milton was cast in a different mold, and he lived under different influences. His was a religious mind, and this principle predominated even over his intellect; and though he had high Ideality, and could soar to unknown heights of fancy, still it was more in the devotional than intellectual or passional domains that he dwelt. He had a splendid development of language, and was copious in delivery. In all his afflictions he always found refuge in religious principles, in his unbounded faith and hope; and though sorely afflicted, it increased rather than diminished his faith in the goodness of God.

THE POETICAL TEMPERAMENT.

One of the essential physical qualities of a poet, is a susceptible mental temperament. This must be of a clear and fine—even of an exquisite—tone to insure perfection in the art . , , , to excel, and to inscribe one's name on the roll of great bards, one must be not only every inch a man, but must have "genius" as well. It has been said by an ancient author, "poeta nascitur non fit"—the poet is born, not made; yet we maintain that every well organized human being should be able to write poetry just as he should be able to make music, or invent and use tools: for has not nature given to each a like number of faculties, the same in function, and differing only in degree and combination? And it is this variety of organs and different degrees of development which make the difference in the kind of poetry produced. One is simply a rhymer, giving a sort of mechanical jingle to words; another may be a rhymer through the affections; another through wit: another through ideality and sublimity; another through the devotional feelings; and as it is in music, so in poetry—the highest order is the most sacred. The poetry of the passions may be energetic, the poetry of the intellect may be scholarly, but the poetry of the spiritual sentiments is something above the reason—it is inspired.

LONGFELLOW.

Americans feel a just pride in Professor Longfellow, both as a scholar and as a poet. His fame is world-wide. His name is never spoken except with the kindest respect. What is it that gives him such an enviable reputation? He is at once a scholar, a genius, a gentleman, and a Christian. There is a happy blending of all the higher human qualities in his composition, with a predominance of the moral and spiritual. In the intellect, he is clear, comprehensive, definite, and practical; in imagination, he has a clearness and reach seldom surpassed; while, socially, he is one of the warmest and most loving of men. He is also spirited, terse, and emphatic, but never rash, severe, or cruel. Kindness, justice, devotion, and affection render his mind warm and genial. The brain is rather large and quite symmetrical in form. The body is well moulded and without excess or deficiency, and the features are at once bold and open. The forehead is even handsome. That is a well-formed nose, slightly inclined to the Roman. The eyes are full, set well apart, and the mouth has loving lips. The chin seems altogether faultless.

WHITTIER.

Whittier, the Quaker poet, has a marked head and face. The brain seems almost unnaturally high, and full across the top. Conscientiousness and Benevolence are evidently among the larger organs of his top-head, Hope, Veneration and Faith are prominently indicated. His love of liberty, manifesting itself through Self-esteem and Firmness, forms a leading trait in his character. He has the modesty and reserve of a woman, with the resolution and executiveness of a soldier; but his religion will not permit him to manifest his pluck so much in deeds as in words. Where moral principle might be involved, we would choose him for a leading representative, and should feel sure that he would hold steadily to his convictions. He would not waver or yield, but hold each and every one to a most rigid accountability. The face is somewhat angular, and, if not inviting, is certainly not repellant. The lips incline up at the corners, indicating Mirthfulness, but there is a depression indicating decision. The chin is large, the nose prominent, the eyes expressive, and the whole shows originality, honesty, earnestness and will.

BENEDICT ARNOLD.

The well-outlined profile of Benedict Arnold conveys to the reader a fair conception of the character of this unfortunate man. The perceptives are predominant, showing him a practical, working man. His arched nose shows force and progressiveness, while in the curve of the upper lip is seen ambition and will. The massive chin and cheek, so full at the lower portion, show a strong disposition for animal enjoyment and a tendency to dissipation, unless due moral restraint were exercised. The head is high in the crown, but very short on top, and the moral organs are only moderately developed—Benevolence and Conscientiousness especially. He had more Approbativeness than Self-esteem, and more Combativeness than Cautiousness. His social organs were large and active, and not sufficiently restrained by the higher sentiments. Destructiveness being influential, gave him a character for positiveness and thoroughness in whatever he took an interest.

LORENZO DOW.

In Lorenzo Dow we find a brain of large size, the chief peculiarity of which is the prominence of the coronal or moral region. He had force and courage, which, allied to his moral and religious nature, stimulated the latter and rendered him efficient as a preacher. His social nature was strong and active, but rendered subservient to the higher feelings. Veneration, Benevolence, Human Nature, Firmness, Conscientiousness, and Self esteem were all large. There was an unusually even balance between the perceptive and reflective organs. Imitation was not large in Dow, while in Benedict Arnold it was well marked. The superiority of Dow's head is quite apparent. See how high and long on top! In force of character he was fully equal to Arnold; in intellect and moral organization he was much superior.

Inside: A Chronicle of Secession, is the title of a new novel of more than ordinary interest and power. "George F. Harrington," the name appearing as that of the author upon the title page, is, we presume, a nom de plume. Though dealing with incidents of the most sensational character, the tone and style of the book are at the farthest remove from the sensational. The story is quietly but most effectively told without passion or rhetorical display, and is clearly the work of a practiced writer and a literary artist. "The form of a novel was adopted," says the author in his preface, "chiefly to make it impossible for any one to identify the place in which the scene is laid, and the characters acting therein." "The very manuscript," he adds, "from which these lines are printed, could tell a tale of its own, apart from that which it narrates, in confirmation of this. While writing it, the author was perfectly aware that his life would have paid the forfeit had a written page been discovered." In illustration of some of the new and strange duties not provided for in the marriage ceremony that devolved upon the wives of Union husbands during the war, the writer states that on more than one Sunday his own wife "has borne the manuscript to church, concealed about her person, in terror of leaving it, like powder exposed to chance sparks, at home." On two occasions he was obliged "to bury the manuscript in the ground, thereby damaging it seriously;" a fact to which he has no doubt that "the printer whose misfortune it is to set up these pages will tearfully depone."

The characters are sketched with rare graphic power, and impress the reader with the strongest conviction of their genuineness. No American writer of fiction has done anything in the same line superior to Ferguson, the old Scotsman, Brother Barker, the termagent Mrs. Warner, and the aristocratic, high-spirited Mrs. Bowles. Evidently the writer has been "Inside."

We can only afford space for a single extract, which will, however, afford some idea of the author's powers:

MR. WRIGHT WANTS TO SHOOT A YANKEE.

Alonzo Wright. As refined and agreeable a gentleman as you could meet with anywhere when sober. When drunk, a devil incarnate. Long ago had he killed his first man. It was when he was intoxicated, and because he fancied at the time the individual in question, a merry youth of sixteen,—Jim Hartley—was looking impertinently at him. Very rarely had he got drunk since then. But when he did become intoxicated, the passion for killing some one again came upon him as a mania, as part and parcel of his drunkenness. It all took place before Mr. Wright removed to his present home; in fact he had come hither on that account; but, unless rumor lied more even than it usually does, if Jim Hartley was the first he was by no means the last man Mr. Wright had killed. Everybody knew Alonzo Wright; and when drunk, Nero on his throne had not courtiers more abject. Mr. Wright was drunk, very drunk. How could it have been otherwise in Somerville last night after the arrival of such news? There had been a military prohibition on the sale of liquor in the place for several weeks now; but the authorities themselves "raised," as they styled it, "the blockade on whisky" to celebrate the glorious victory over McClellan. Men who never drank before, got drunk in Somerville last night. Men whose whisky had been cut off for the months past, drank last night in Somerville with the frenzy of long abstinence. Even Lamum was shocked at the state of Somerville last night, Tim Lamum, his nephew, wallowing and vomiting on his office floor in the experience of his first "regular spree." And Mr. Wright, having an entire grocery abandoned to him during all last night, had so far killed no one. He was riding home with an unsatisfied craving in his heart, his loaded revolver ready for any emergency that might arise. . . . It all takes place as in a second of time. "And who are you?" Mr. Wright says, with a sudden half closing of his eyes and an oath.

Edward Arthur knows perfectly well who and what Alonzo Wright is. More than once has he been received with the most gentlemanly courtesy by Mr. Wright in visiting there. But that was months ago. Besides, it was under Mr. Wright's own roof; and, drunk as he is, were it under that roof he was now meeting Mr. Arthur, he would have treated him as a gentleman and a guest. But they are not in Mr. Wright's house; Mr. Wright is drunk, and this Mr. Arthur is strongly suspected of being a Union man. Nothing more abhorred by Mr. Wright even when sober than that. * * * * "Look here, now," he says, slowly drawing his revolver from his girdle as he speaks. "I've got one boy away in the army fighting the Yankees. Ten to one he was killed in that last fight at Richmond. If there is anything in the world I would like to do this morning, it is to kill an Abolitionist. Now you say hurrah for Jeff. Davis, or you are a dead man.

Knowing his man, hearing that indescribable tone of his voice, Edward Arthur had no doubt that he meant what he said. Unarmed, no chance of springing upon him before he can shoot, there is no alternative. "Fire when you please, I will die first!" he replies, as pale, as cold, as rigid as a statue.

There is the sharp crack of a revolver, with Alice's shriek on the air. It may have been that Mr. Wright has been drunk too long, or that there was an extra quantity of strychnine in the whisky of last night; for the genuine liquor is running very low in these days of the blockade—but the bullet sings by Mr Arthur's left ear, and he stands erect and unhurt. And next, what? He thinks of springing upon the desperado, but he knows there are five more charges in his weapon! Mr. Wright curses his nerves and again presents his weapon. "One more chance, Abolitionist," he says, "Hurrah for Jeff. Davis and the Confederacy—out with it!"

Mrs. Wood's new book, Elster's Folly, though not belonging to the higher order of fiction, will prove far more interesting to the novel-reading world at large, than works of the grand type of Romola or Felix Holt. Whatever else may be said of her, Mrs. Wood undeniably understands the art of construction, and even when her characters are of the commonest, her story is sure to be framed so as to fasten upon the reader's interest. There is some truth and also considerable exaggeration in the following "summing up" of Mrs. Wood in a recent number of the London Saturday Review:

"Mrs. Wood has been cursed with a trade success. By one lucky hit, she reached a point of literary prosperity which, with her superficial powers, has proved absolutely fatal to her progress. * * * * Her style is bad, her English is self-shod and full of faults, her characters are seldom natural, her dialogue is vulgar when she would have it easy, and stilted when she would have it refined. * * * * This new book of hers is about the worst of the series; undeniably the most vulgar in detail, the most uninteresting in character, and the most ridiculous as a picture of life and manners."

Notwithstanding all which, the story as a mere story will be generally pronounced one of the most interesting of the season.

A few days since the teacher in the primary department of the Graded School in Vergennes, Vermont, interrogated the pupils as to the reason of the saltness of the ocean. One little lad was confident he could tell, and the question was put: "Well, what is it that causes saltness of the water of the ocean?" "The codfish!" replied the little original.

AMUSEMENTS.

THERE is nothing new or noteworthy to record in the week's theatrical matters. The continued success of Lady Don is more than a thrice-told tale even in our columns. The Beggar's Opera; The Black Domino, in which Lady Don sang all the principal gems of the Opera of Le Domino Noir; the burlesque of Prince Florizel; Sweethearts and Wives, and Aladdin, were played during the week to fine audiences. Last night the Plasterers' Protective Union had a bumper of a benefit.

To day Lady Don will give one of her popular matinees. This evening's bill consists of Rory O'More and a new burlesque called Perseus and Andromeda.

On Monday evening manager Maguire will be the recipient of a complimentary benefit tendered by Lady Don, and all the members of the company, in return "for the many kindnesses received at his hands." It is perfectly safe to prophesy a full house for the occasion, even if the Opera House could be transformed "for that night only," into an India rubber one with twice its present capacity.

The coming week will be the last of Lady Don's season, other engagements, not a dimunition of patronage, preventing a longer one. On Monday week the world-renowned Celeste will make her debut before a San Fraucisco audience in one of her specialities. Forrest is to follow with his farewell season.

METROPOLITAN THEATRE.—Rossini's masterpiece, the greatest of comic operas, Il Barbiere di Siviglia, was produced to crowded and delighted audiences on Friday of last week, and on the Wednesday following, and may be recorded as a signal musical triumph, although some scenes were rendered in broader buffo style, and with less elegance and refinement than we have usually noticed heretofore, or than we think should characterize the whole performance. Signorina Brambilla, on the first evening, seemed haunted by reminiscences of her admirable impersonation of "Annetta," and failed to identify herself with the aristocratic, though mischief-loving, "Rosina." On Wednesday she did much better, and was more becomingly dressed, but still fell far short of the dramatic requirements of the character, which is, indeed, so far out of her line that she deserves great credit for attempting it at all. Her execution of the music, albeit written for a contralto voice, was certainly delicious, and was rapturously applauded at every opportunity throughout the opera. In the music lesson scene she selected "Il Baeio," and Rode's celebrated Air, with a brilliant Variation—the one, we believe, made famous by Sontag—which, in Brambilla's hands, is a bit of faultless vocalization, always enthusiastically encored. Her rendering of "Una voce" was excellent, and that of "Io sono docile," only too florid and too little like Rossini's music —generally brilliant enough in itself—we cannot feel that Signorina Brambilla's variations on well known airs are always in good taste, however astonishing as vocal gymnastics; and we believe that experience will teach her to think more of the dramatic and musical truth of a situation—which we never saw a young artist more capable of appreciating—and less of temporary and extraneous display. Signor Mancusi achieved another triumph in "Figaro," which we feel safe in saying—with a vivid recollection of Grossi, Fellini, Orlandini, and Morelli—was never so ably represented on this coast. His ringing quality of voice, perfect intonation, wonderful distinctness and rapidity of utterance, capital make-up, and thorough identification with the character, were all displayed in the famous "Largo al factotum" to the highest advantage, and elicited a storm of applause; while in the remainder of the opera, though lacking any single opportunity so brilliant, he was the life of every scene, and rendered the music of his part with that artistic truth which we have long since learned to expect from him with absolute certainty. The character of "Don Basilio" was sustained by Signor Milleri in masterly style, and with a sanctimonious humor quite irresistible; while M. Roncovieri deserves especial credit for his admirable make-up and acting as "Doctor Bartolo." Signor Bianchi, after the opening serenade, was in fine voice, and made an excellent "Almaviva," ably seconded by M. Charles as "Fiorello." M'lle Tourney filled the role of "Berta" very acceptably, and sang her single air, "Il vecchietto," with considerable effect. The chorus was in good training, and the orchestra rendered the exquisite music of the opera with unusual spirit and precision. We hope to hear "Il Barbiere" repeated once or twice at least during the coming season.

Crispino e la Comare was repeated, to a full house, on Saturday evening, and proved, as usual, a delightfully successful performance.

Lucrezia Borgia was given, for the second time by this troupe, on Monday evening, with the same cast as before, except that M'lle Tourney was substituted for Miss Landesmann in the role of "Orsini," and was tolerably successful, though by no means brilliant.

Ernani was given last night as a non-subscription performance, Don Giovanni having been postponed (and with it the seats engaged for the twelfth night of the second season) until Monday evening next on account of the severe illness of Signor Morley. The third season will commence on Monday, September 24th, and will doubtless be as fully attended as its predecessors, while in a musical point of view, owing to the familiarity gained by the troupe with the public and with each other, this season should prove the most satisfactory ever given in San Francisco.

This evening Crispino e la Comare and one act of Colomello, will be presented for the benefit of Signor Giuseppe Mancusi, who, coming here quite unknown even by reputation, has established himself immediately and firmly in public favor, and whose claims as an artist, and as a thorough gentleman, will doubtless be acknowledged to-night by an overflowing house.

COMPOSITION AND RHETORIC.—There is no doubt that the practice of writing out passages from good authors is very beneficial as a means of improvement in composition. The frequent reading of such works as are distinguished for purity of style as well as brevity and force of expression is recommended. Macaulay's "Essay," for instance, if constantly read, must tend to improve the style of composition. In both speaking and writing it is certain that, to express one's ideas clearly and well in as few words as possible, is a great perfection. A literary man, whose valuable works are well known to the world, says that after writing an article he carefully revises it, striking out every unnecessary word, and even substituting a word of two syllables for one of three, or of one for two, wherever it can be done without interfering with the sense and full force of the sentence.

BANTING'S work on corpulence, telling how Banting worked off his corpulence, has been done into French, and all the fat woman in Paris are trying on his regimen to try out their superfluous flesh. The Paris correspondent of the Boston Post tells of this dialogue which he says he overheard at a ball: "Have you seen Madame G—— ? Since she has embraced M. Banting's religion she has diminished at least one half." "Then she must be charming," said Mlle. —, with naivete. "Not at all. She looks like a cathedral that has lost all its saints and preserved all the niches from which they were taken."

"Thus with our hellish drugs, Death's ceaseless fountains,
'Mid these green vales, o'er these bright mountains,
Worse than the very plague we've raged.
I have myself, to thousands poisons given,
And heard their murderer praised, as blessed by Heaven,
Because with Nature, strife he waged."—Goethe's "Faust."

The "Doctor" seems to have had a California before him, for if ever a country of "green vales" and "bright mountains" was cursed by "worse than the very plague," it is this same California of ours, which the medicine men have desolated, not to say decimated, by their "hellish drugs."

RHEUMATISM cured and cures guaranteed, without the use of medicines, blisters, plasters or any species of medical humbuggery; without the pretence of electricity, and none of the delusions and jugglery of mesmerism. Scientific action (sound sense) for common-sense sufferers; all others take the good old stupid way, and suffer to their "hearts' content." Dr. Bourne effects perfect cures, and improves the health generally at the same time, No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street. *

TO THE SICK.—During nearly fourteen years in San Francisco, Dr. Bourne has been steadily and perseveringly engaged in curing the sick, without the use of medicines, or any species of delusive humbuggery. At the same time, he has been engaged in imparting such useful information as enables them to so regulate their lives and conduct as to make the road to health a pleasant one to travel. *

THE NEW YORK Tribune says: "We have carefully examined the workmanship of the Knabe Pianos, and we find it thorough in every particular. The cases are rich and elegant in design, and are finished in the best possible manner; the entire mechanism is cleanly and faithfully made, and long and thoroughly seasoned material is only used in building up these fine instruments. At the various State Fairs throughout the country the Knabe Pianos have constantly received gold medals or the highest premiums. At the recent Ohio State Fair they came in competition with some twenty Pianos from the best makers of New York and Boston, when the highest premium was awarded them." The best specimens of these fine instruments will be found at the music store of Frishee & Scott, No. 3 Montgomery street, who are sole agents for California, for these, best of all, Pianos. Before purchasing call and inspect the Knabe Pianos. *

IT IS WELL for those who are totally ignorant of the proper uses of Electricity, Magnetism and Psychology, for curing disease, to advertise that they do not use them. It may show honesty of principle; and all Pioneers should act as Guardians and Fathers of a young city like this, supposing all of the people to be equally ignorant and easily made to believe that all the healing qualities and qualifications are to give steam baths, indiscriminately, to fat and lean, weak and strong, every day; to get up a crisis, as it is called—depleting, extracting and depriving them of the vitality and warmth of the system, which is so much needed in this climate. No doubt but that some temperaments require baths and are much benefitted, while others are injured by them: but to say that it is the "cure all," and warrant it, is nonsense. But, it is probably susceptible of proof, that Electricity, Magnetism and Psychology, by all or either, as the cases require, and as practiced by Dr. H. A. BENTON, 109 Montgomery street, is curing ten to one of any other practice, and particularly those who have been washed and bleached almost out of existence by steam baths before they come for the healing, life-giving influences of the Electro-Magnetic currents. References and Certificates, in any quantity, will show that all classes of disease have been cured, and none injured, during my short stay here of only sixteen months. All that investigate are sure to be interested, and many are every day recommending the practice. *

THE CALIFORNIA BUILDING AND LOAN AND SAVINGS SOCIETY.

THE Members of this Association met last evening to receive the Fifth Annual Report of the Directors. The following is the report:

The shareholders, before proceeding to the election of nine Directors for the ensuing year, naturally desire and are entitled to an account of the management and affairs of the Society for the year that is passed.

The present Board of Directors undertook their duties a year ago under influences of great peril.

The assets of the Society on our taking office were....$250,225 25
The assets in our hands to-day are..... 500,000 00

Thus doubling our means of public accommodation in one year.

The profits realized for the six months ending 30th April last were as follows:

	Dr.
Interest received on mortgages		$19,802 79
Premiums received on mortgages		6,623 91
Interest received on loans on stock		364 86
Profit on casual interests		632 00
Total		$27,423 56
	Cr.
Interest due to depositors	$8,280 44
Interest paid to depositors	4,616 43
Dividend on stock at 1½ per cent	4,025 38
Expenses of management	5,200 00
		$22,122 25
		$5,301 31

Showing a clear surplus of full five thousand dollars, after paying one per cent. per month to all depositors, one and one-half per cent. per month to all stockholders, besides paying expenses of management, and all other incidental charges.

This surplus added to the Reserve Fund previously accumulated, and the paid up capital, makes a total of full Fifty-six Thousand Dollars of reserve to protect us against unforeseen losses or casualties in the prosecution of our business.

As yet, the Society has incurred no loss from its loans. The number accommodated with loans for the past year was 319.

The loans now average forty to fifty thousand dollars a month. Last month they reached forty-seven thousand dollars, which is double the average amount made by the Society a year ago.

THE NEW BANKING-HOUSE.

The Board have the pleasure to report (under instruction from the last named meeting) the purchase and outfit of the new bank premises, which stands the Society in $48,000. The location selected and the fittings of our new banking-house have won the approbation and confidence of the community. The income in rent from the upper part amounts to about $140 a month. The income from the vault and cellar, for storing valuables, amounts to about $50 a month; leaving a liability on the business of the Society of about $300 a month, in lieu of rent. It has been remarked, and is remarkable, that since our Directors have bought and opened our bank, many other wealthy influential money institutions have purchased on either side of us at considerably advanced rates, and are now causing to be erected large and elegant buildings, which undoubtedly adds to the value of ours; in fact, the block on California street, in which we located our bank, is evidently destined to become the "Money Market" of San Francisco.

In connection with this topic, our Society, by the liberality of its aid in assisting parties to build, has stirred the industry and enterprise of the city, there being now scarcely a mechanic connected with the building trade idle.

THE DIRECTORS.

The Directors meet regularly in the bank as often as they are notified. All applications for loans are considered by them—some are made which are not unanimously voted. There are duplicate cash-books kept in the office. Every item of receipts or payments are twice entered—once by the Cashier, in his books, and once by the Book-keeper, in his. The two books are brought together at the close of the day's business, when each item is called over in presence of the President. If any mistake has occurred during the day it is at once discovered by the footings of the books and the counting of the cash on hand. The books must therefore balance and agree every day at the close of business. The cash is then locked up in the vault by the President, and every morning is handed out again to the Cashier, who counts it before opening the bank.

The reserve funds of the Society are invested in City of San Francisco Bonds, which, to the amount of fifty thousand dollars, are placed within the inner safe. The inner safe has three separate locks, a key to each is held—one by the President, one by Mr. Crim, the Secretary, and one by Mr. McCormick, member of the Finance Committee. The Directors have made every proper effort to increase and facilitate business. The recent extension of loans on manufactures and merchandise has been attended with the best results.

PRESIDENT'S SALARY.

In view of the increased trust, duties and responsibility of the President in the opening of the new bank, and the great expansion of business which arose, the Board of Directors on the 3d of May voted an increase of his salary from $150 to $250 a month—subject to the approving vote of the present meeting. No other Director receives any salary.

INSURANCE.

The President reports that our Society, since it came into operation, paid out to various Insurance Companies, eleven thousand dollars as premiums on insurance of our various houses, which are scattered through the city and suburbs, and that only sixteen hundred dollars were lost by fires on those houses during all that time; thus leaving a profit of $9,400, which have gone for ever to fructify for the benefit of parties outside of the Society, and he recommends that the members of our Society form within themselves an Insurance Company, under the laws of the State, and in our own building, which, under prudent management, must at no distant day become a powerful appendage of support and profit to our Society.

BEAUTIFUL AS PEACH BLOSSOMS, and clear as alabaster, white as the lily, are those ladies who dress with that fragrant and innocent enamel wash, Davidson's Circassian Bloom. Take no other. Sold by all first class Druggists. *

THE Greatest Cures of Disease ever recorded are made by intelligent practical water-cure physicians. Among them, none is more distinguished for devotion to his art and thorough experimental knowledge, than Dr. Bourne, San Francisco. *

O, SUMMER SEA.

O SUMMER Sea! thy murmuring waves are singing
A song of sweetness in my listening ear;
Youth, love, and hope, that lulling strain is bringing Back to my heart, in forms distinct and clear;
Again I see the glorious visions of Life's morning
Rise on my sight and make the darkness flee,
Again upon thy shores at daylight's dawning,
I walked with one beloved, O Summer Sea!

The soft waves kiss her feet and love to linger
Upon the beach where her light steps have strayed;
Now in thy tide she dips her snowy finger,
And now I feel it on my forehead laid.
"I sign with thee a sign," she fondly murmurs,
And turns her blushing face away from me;
"Thou shalt be happy, love, through many Summers,
And I will love thee—hear me, Summer Sea!"

Thou heard'st the vow, O gentle sea of Summer!
Thou heard'st it, laughing in the morning ray;
Thou knewest well that Love, the earliest comer,
Is very prone to make the shortest stay.
The sign dried up beneath the rays of morning,
The vow found wings as fast and far to flee;
Now I prefer my sleep at daylight's dawning,
To wandering on thy shores, O Summer Sea!

WM. B. GLAZIER.

THE GALLANT FOURTEENTH.

[WE cheerfully copy from the Alta the subjoined record of the active services, during the war, of the much-abused "Fourteenth" regiment—and no other can present a nobler one—in paliation of local reputation some of the new recruits gave it here, during the "Fourteenth's" stay at the Presidio, about a year since.]

I HAVE observed from time to time in the newspapers a disposition to indulge in paragraphs and remarks derogatory to the character of the Fourteenth Regiment U. S. Infantry, which regiment came to our shores about a year since. It may be true that the material of the regiment, on its arrival here, was not in as high a state of discipline as usual for troops of the Regular Army. It had been hastily recruited in the East, and ordered to Califoruia before the turbulent spirits so hastily added to its thinned ranks had been weeded out; but the bad conduct of a few of its number should not have led the newspapers to condemn the entire regiment, and hold up to derision the rank and file of what was left of this most gallant regiment of the war. Few who read these paragraphs ever stopped to consider, probably because they were ignorant of the fact, that to this regiment was awarded the post of honor on the entrée into Richmond. Its thinned ranks of scarred and bronzed heroes marched with a proud step, for they felt that they had spent their best blood in defence of a country dear to them, and which could appreciate their fidelity and devotion.

The following record of the services of this regiment should forever silence the voice of calumny, and place it in the front rank of public admiration:

The regiment was organized in 1861, with the following Field Officers: Colonel, Charles P. Stone; Lieutenant Colonel, John F. Reynolds; Majors, Geo. Sykes, G. R. Giddings, Wm. Williams. The First Battalion was commanded by Captain J. D. O'Connell; Adjutant, First Lieuteuant W. R. Smedberg; Quartermaster, R. F. Bierne. From July, 1861, to March, 1862, it was stationed at Fort Trumbull, Connecticut, and Perryville, Indiana. In March it took the field with the Army of the Potomac, having nine companies, 650 enlisted men and 24 officers, and joined the Regular Brigade commauded by Major-General Sykes. This was soon after organized as a Division of three brigades, the Fourteenth being attached to the brigade commauded by Lieutenant-Colonel R. C. Buchanan, Fourth Infantry.

The Division was assigned to the Fifth Army Corps, Maj. General Porter commanding; was present at the siege of Yorktown; in reserve at Williamsburg. Fair Oaks and Seven Pines; took part in the battle of Hanover Court House; in reserve at Mechanicsville, and was engaged heavily for the first time at Gaines' Mills, June 27th: engagad at White Oak Swamp, June 30th, and Malvern Hill, July 12th; losing in this fight 225 men and the following officers: Lieut. G. W. Hoover, killed; wounded, Capt. J. McIntosh, Lieuts. J. F. McElhone, J. B. S. Sinclair, W. W. Lyon, H. C. Peck and H. H. Moroney.

The Battalion commanded by Captain D. B. McKibben joined the army at Harrison's Landing, having about 400 meu and 20 officers. August 12th, left Harrison's Landing and marched to Newport News; thence to Aquia Creek, by water; marched up the Rappahannock via the Orange and Alexandria Railroad. They were engaged at the battle of Bull Run, August 30th, 1862, and suffered severely. The First Battalion went iuto actiou with about 300 men, and lost 125; Captain O'Connell wounded in several places. The Second Battalion, with an equal number of men, lost 75; Lieutenant Chamberlain was killed, and Capts. McKibben, Coppinger and Lieut. Wharton wounded.

At South Mountain, September 14th, the Regiment was in reserve. At Antietem September 17th, lost 20 men. While lying on the Potomac, after Antietem, the Regiment participated in several reconnoissanees, losing a few men. At Snicker's Gap, November 3d, while the army was in motion towards the Rappahannoek, lost 36 killed and wounded by artillery fire; Lieut. Perry severely wounded in the arm. At Fredericksburg, December 13th, the loss was not heavy, although the Regiment was exposed to a very uneomfortable fire. After the battle of Frederieksburg, lay eneamped on Potomac Creek.

At Chaneellorsville, May 2d, 1863, loss slight; Captain S. Ross wounded in the foot. At Gettysburg, July 3d, 139 men lost; Capt. J. M. Locke and Lieutenant Wm. O. Douglass severely wounded. Moved dowu the Rappahannock aud took part in the skirmish at Beverly Fork.

In August the Regimeut was ordered to New York city to aid in suppressing the draft riots. Again joined the Army of the Potomac in September. November 30th, moved to Mine Run, loss slight. Eucamped on the Orauge and Alexandria Railroad during the winter, losing several men by guerrillas. May 30th, 1864, moved with the Army of the Potomac, Major-General Warren commanding Fifth Corps, Brigadier-General Charles Griffin commanding First Division, Brigadier-General R. B. Ayers commanding Frst Brigade. May 5th, at the battle of the Wilderness, suffered heavily; at North Anna River were again engaged; also at Cold Harbor, Petersburg, Hateh's Run, and Weldon Railroad, at which latter place the Regiment was almost exterminated, only thirty five men reporting for duty after the fight, and no officers. The Color-bearer tore the colors from the staff aud brought them off the field, riddled with balls and almost torn in pieces. During this eampaign the Regiment lost 700 men aud the following officers, killed and wounded: Capt. E. McKibbeu, wounded in the thigh; Capt. H. W. Keyes, mortally wouud-ed; Capt. D. B McKibben, captured; Capt. W. R. Smedberg, foot shot off; Capt. R F. Bierne, wounded in the arm: Capt. A. Foot, wounded in the arm, losing its use; Capt. R. H. Porter, shot in the eye, losing it; Capt. J. W. Burbank, mortally wounded aud eaptured, dying iu the hands of the rebels; Captains D. B. Clay and G. Ilges, Lieuts. J. R. Clay and T. E. Collins, killed; Lieut. J. W. Gerry, wounded; Capt. G. K. Brady, captured; Lieut. A. MeKibben wounded; Lieut. D. M. Brodhead, mortally wounded; Lieut. Drake De Ray, wounded; Lieut. J. B. Sinclair, wounded in the leg; Lieut. Charles G. Smedberg, died from exposure. The Regiment being reduced to a small number of men, was ordered to New York in December, 1864, to recruit. In March, 1865, it took the field again, and was with the Army of tho Potomac when the Rebel Army surreudered. It was then ordered to Hart Island, New York Harbor, to prepare for California, numbering about 200 men. Its ranks were then filled by recruits gathered from all parts, many of whom were men devoid of character or principle, who entered the Regiment for the sole purpose of getting to California, intending to desert on arrival, as fortunately many of them have. No new officers were appointed to the Regiment, and there were so few left for duty that there was but one officer to a Company of ninety men.

The following general officers belonged to the Fourteenth: Major-General J. F. Reynolds, killed at Gettysburg, for some years stationed in Oregon, and a gallant officer, universally respected and admired; Brigadier General G. R. Paul, Brigadier-General L. C. Hunt, and Brigadier-General Charles P. Stone. About three thousand men have been recruited in this Regiment since its formation.

Who says this is not a glorious record for the gallant Fourteenth, and who shall sneer at it and strive to sully its fair fame by holding up to ridicule the propensities of a few bad men who had joined it on the eve of its embarkation for California? Should not we, as a people who have been too isolated from the war to appreciate its horrors, look upon these heroes with admiration and respect, and see in them men who have toiled and fought four long years, suffering every hardship, gallantly upholding the nation's honor? We should remember that these gallant officers and men who walk our streets, nearly every one of them bearing upon his person the scars of wounds from whence his best blood has flowed, have faced the leaden hail and stood front to front with death in every shape under that flag that they swore to protect; and they have done that duty nobly. Such services should not be forgotten nor pass unheeded and unhonored.

The writer, although borne upon the records of this gallant Regimeut, cannot, unfortunately, as a participator, bear personal testimony to its bright career, having been prevented from sharing in its glory by fate and the War Department, which decreed that the sphere of his duties should be elsewhere, and he can, therefore, without egotism, speak of its deeds and its services as an act of simple justice to brave men whom we should honor, and not malign. It is the proudest claim of his life that his name has been borne upon the rolls of this gallant Regiment, which won for itself the post of honor where all were brave.

R. L. O.,
Late of the Fourteenth.

WHY were the Egyptians good sons? Because they paid great respect to their mummies.

BANKING IN CHINA.

BANKS were organized in China many hundred years ago, and there have been times when the currency of that antique and horrible land was much inflated by the paper issues of the pigtailed, bliud-writing eashiers.

The "eash" is the only native China money now eurrent and 1,000 of these pieces equal $1 40. The native bullion is called "syeee," and the iugots weigh from five to fifty taels. The "tael" is equal to 1,000 cash. On the coast, silver dollars are in use among the traders. The bills of the Chinese banks are of a variety of denominations, ranging from a very small amount to the value of thousands of dollars, and, curious enough, when we consider the imitative eharaeter of the Chinamen, are seldom counterfeited. The holders of the genuine notes are, however, often troubled by the most sudden bankruptey of their makers.

In case of the refusal of a bank to cash its paper promises on demand, the enraged holders of the suspended paper make a sudden raid upou the dishonorable institution, "gutting" the establishment at onee and carrying off everything, even to the timbers. The penniless vagabonds of the street are generally upon the alert for this sport, and "go in" with the bill-holders for a share of the plunder. What would the specieless banks of State and Wall street think of such a run for cash as this?

Ten years ago there was a first-class panic among the paper money owners of the Celestial land, and the "cleaning out" of banks, as deseribed above, grew to be an every day occurrence. The Viceroy came to the reseue of the eorporations. He arrested and deeapitated in the street, opposite a bank, without the use of the clumsy machinery which we call a law court, a coolie and a trader who had, without any bills in their possession, joined iu a riotous run upon the curreney-making institutions.

Money at once grew easier in that vicinity, and in a very short time the banks were, as wo say, in a condition to accommodate their customers at eurrent rates. These, in China, are high enough to satisfy one of our down town pawnbrokers, rangiug, as they legally do, from 10 to 36 per cent. per annum.

A new bank in China is not opened without a feast. To this all the neighboring well-established banks and prominent "prompters" are invited, and their acceptanee of the invitation places the seal of respectability upon the new comer, and its circulating notes are thenceforth received all around and at the "clearing house."—N. Y Paper.

BEAVERS.—A writer in Good Words demolishes the old idea that the tail of the beaver is his trowel. He observed the beavers building their dams and houses in the Zoological Gardens at London: The commencement of the first lodge, or hut-building operation, was inaugurated by Mr. Bartlett, the superintendent of the garden, who placed in the paddock an old box, mouth downward, with one end knocked out. The beavers at once took to this shelter, and commenced piling upon and around it the puddled clay with which they had been supplied in one corner of the enclosure. Of course the reader expects to be told about the wondrous dexterity with which they plastered the work with their tails; in truth they did nothing of the kind, and all the stories about the animal using his tail as a trowel are pure myths, caused, doubtless, by the apparent applicability of that appendage to such a purpose. It is a rudder and nothing else, to assist the animal in directing its course in the water, and is perfectly useless at plasterer's work. The clay moistened with the little running stream close at hand, was carried by his fore paws, and dabbled on the roof he was making over the box; this process of daubing and puddling was alternated by carefully placing branches across and athwart the mud-work, interlacing the former, and then filling up the interstices with the puddled clay.

THE NORSEMEN AND THE SEA.—Early in time and deep in sentiment was the feeling of the Norsemen for the salt water. There is a ship in their old mythology. They buried their heroes under tumuli which presented "an uninterrupted view of the sea," as if, even in death, the consciousness of its neighborhood, the cheeriness of its breezes, would reach the Viking in his last lair. The Sagas speak, too, of the dirge of the ocean for their fallen captains, as if the ocean itself shared in that feeling for them which they felt for it. And this tinge of mysticism which the sea so naturally inspires, is still remarked by Northerns to belong to the Scandinavian blood.

A CASE OF MISPLACED CONFIDENCE.—A German named Flatch, at Valparaiso, constructed a sub-marine boat, intended for a torpedo, and on the trial trip took dowu with him a party of ten friends. The confident inventor would not allow a rope or buoy to be attached to his machine, and the result of the experiment was that the boat was discovered in thirteen fathoms of water, by a diver, ten days afterward, and at last accounts had not been raised to the surface. (?)

BE temperate in diet. Our first parents ate themselves out of house and home.

CAST AWAY ON A DESOLATE ISLAND.

UNINHABITED islands are rapidly attaining a degree of rarity which will soon class them among the positive luxuries. When we say unhabited islands, we must be understood to refer to such insular positions as a gentleman and an admirer of Robinson Crusoe would care to visit—places having a fairly genial climate, tolerably supplied with game, abounding in "roots" and fruits, and in fact more or less approaching the great and illustrious type of Juan Fernandez; and islands of this sort are really becoming distressingly scarce. Uninhabited continents will in nowise suffice to replace them, and therefore the millions of acres which still remain to us in Central Africa will never do as a substitute. Continents are vague, vast, flat, and unprofitable. They cause the shipwrecked mariner to fail in one of the requisites of the classic drama—unity of place. Once on them, he wanders "up the country," and forsakes the friendly "cove" in which, on an island, he would, as a matter of course, have found shelter in the first instance.

Hopes of escape again, may arise on continents from sources quite illegitimate for the occasion—hopes which should never come except from a ship distressed for water, opportunely putting in at the right moment. No man who has ever been a boy, and read "Robinson Crusoe," would hesitate for a moment which to prefer. Further, the island must not be too large, which is another difficulty, and tends to limit the supply. The castaway should have time to explore the greater part of it, or at least sail round in his cutter, or "pinnace," which has been saved from the wreck; otherwise we do not feel he has done his duty. And all this he can do only with an island of moderate dimensions. Time was when she last thing we might have expected to run short of was uninhabited islands. Poets and romancers formerly could always with verisimilitude throw their hero and heroine into each other's arms on their hospitable desert shores. Now they are as rare as commons in the neighborhood of London, and may possibly in a few years require strict preservation and careful supervision to prevent them from disappearing altogether.

It is with feelings, therefore, not untinged with gratitude, that we welcome Captain Musgrave and his story of his adventures, in a volume lately published under the title of "Cast Away on the Auckland Isles." His plain sailor-like narrative, written with simplicity, and, under the circumstauces, with a perseverance which was quite heroic, is attractive and instinctive in no ordinary degree. It fully gratifies the suave mari magno sentiment which is no doubt at the bottom of much of the interest taken in such accounts. Captain Musgrave, with four others, who constituted the crew of a small schooner called the Grafton, passed twenty months on the bleak uninhabited Auckland, entirely dependent during the whole time on their own energy and skill for their existence in the first instance, and their escape in the sequel. They started on a sealing expedition from Sydney in the autumn of 1863, and Captain Musgrave does not disguise the fact, that the hope of finding gold, and of thus securing to himself the first rich remunerating attack on some new "diggings," was not entirely absent from his mind.

They had hardly made the Aucklands before they were hopelessly and irretrievably wrecked. Carnley Harbor, or Sarah's Bosom, as Captain Musgrave calls it, judging from the sketch map which is prefixed to the volume, ought not only to be spacious but a secure harbor. In its upper portion it is completely landlocked, and the Grafton was brought to an anchor twelve miles from the entrance. However, she parted one cable, and dragged the other anchor home, on the second night after her arrival, and went on the rocks in a moment. "In a quarter of an hour she was full up to the top of the cabin table, and the sea was breaking heavily over her."

In the morning Captain Musgrave and his men saved themselves, and then prepared in serious earnest to make the best of their forlorn position. Within a week they had begun and partly finished the frame of the house which they at once resolved to build. It was twenty-four feet long by sixteen wide. But the wooden framework was a short and simple business compared with the thatching, which yet was indispensable on account of the incredibly boisterous and rainy climate. This part of the undertaking occupied them fully two months, and was accomplished by means of long wild grass, 5,000 bundles of which, each weighing a pound, were put upon the sides and ends of the house. In the mean time they had fed abundantly and even daintily on young seals' flesh, which is exactly like lamb. Wild fowl must also have been plentiful, seeing that Captain Musgrave in two hours and a half on one occasion shot about "150 pounds weight of widgeons." Neither was a skillful cook wanting to make the best of these agreeable viands.

Mr. Rynal, the mate, was a Frenchman, and appears to have been a regular Masterman Ready. It need hardly be added that he was a clean and savory cook. "He frequently gave us four courses at a meal. There would be stewed or roasted seal, fried liver, fish and mussels." On the other hand, these luxurious repasts were the more relished for the excitement and variety of the sport which preceded them, and which indeed supplied them with their chief piece de resistance—namely, seals' flesh. Seals were found in almost incredible numbers; "both the shores and the water were literally swarming with them. They go roaring about the woods like wild cattle; indeed we expect they will come and storm the tent some night." And this contingency appeared to be so imminent that Captain Musgrave had "to put a bullet in one of their tails," which effectually frightened them. The seals, however, soon grew less familiar, and then the sport of hunting them began. They generally were to be found basking in the sun, in "mobs" of thirty and forty each, for the most part fast asleep. Captain Musgrave shall describe what generally followed:

"I had only two men with me, so we took our clubs, and each of us took a mob, and I suppose that in ten seconds we had knocked down ten calves from two to three months old, and one two-year-old seal. We had to go right in amongst them, and although they woke up, we were so quick about the job that they stared at us in confusion for a moment, and then by a simultaneous movement rushed toward the water. We could have got more, but one of the men was at this moment attacked by the only remaining one, which was a tremendous large bull—the largest tiger seal I have seen, and he fought like a tiger. We immediately rushed to the rescue; the poor fellow was obliged to take to a tree till we came up, when all three set on the seal, and he showed fight bravely. It was as long as ten minutes before we proved ourselves conquerors We should have been quite willing to get out of his way, but he would not give us a chance."

The whole account of the seals is indeed exceedingly curious and remarkably interesting. Aquatic and amphibious as seals are in mature years, it appears that, when young, they have a positive horror of cold water. The mother, or cow seal, has to undertake a long and elaborate process of initiation to coax and teach her young calf how to swim before the dormant hereditary powers are developed:

"When they first go into the water the old cow carries them on her back, or rather carries it, for I have never seen any one of them with more than one calf, and they have a great job to get them down to the water at first. I have known a cow to be three days in getting a calf half a mile, to get it into the water."

Their activity and speed on land are very remarkable, considering their formation. In a bushy country they are quite a match for a man as regards pace. Their pugnacity is extreme; "they fight as ferociously as dogs, and do not make the least noise, and with their large tusks they tear each other almost to pieces." And further on, Captain Musgrave gives "a striking instance of the savage manner in which these animals fight." A seal was found in a place where it had no doubt gone to die:

"One of its fore flappers was entirely torn away from its body; the other one was cut or broken off by the lower joint. The lower jaw was broken, and the flesh torn away from underneath, and with a strip of skin two inches wide torn off all the way down the belly, and another strip was torn off its back from the top of the head to his tail, which was left quite bare to the bone."

But before long the voyagers found that the seals could be put to other uses besides those of sport and food. Of their skins they made clothes and shoes and bed-coverings, the oil they used in cooking and for light, and the blood served for ink, and with this substitute a goodly portion of Captain Musgrave's log was written. So far so well. They had saved themselves from perilous shipwreck, and had succeeded in securing a fairly comfortable existence afterwards. The strong hope that their friends in Sydney would at an early period send to look for them, when the time for their return had passed, buoyed them up bravely for the first eight months. They caught and tamed parrots; they, or rather Captain Musgrave, established a Bible-class, and found both moral and literary benefit from these lectures.

At one time hopes were entertained that something might be done with the stranded schooner, and a "precious miserable job" they had of it, working up to their middle in water, and with the thermometer from two to five degrees below freezing point. However, she proved past remedy, and they had to fall back on their expectation of extraneous succor. In the meanwhile they saw with utter dismay their main source of food gradually forsaking them.

As the weather got colder the seals kept more and more in the water, which was warmer than the air, and rarely landed except after dark to sleep. But a seal killed in the water sinks almost at once, and can rarely be secured. Captain Musgrave says they sink like a stone. This is not true of the seals which are to be met with on the coast of Holland at any rate, which, however, may differ from those which he had to deal with. Their hunting became, therefore, less and less profitable, and more and more laborious. The wild-fowl also grew scarcer, and Captain Musgrave and his comrades grew to be glad at getting a meal of mussels, and often went to bed hungry. Still hopes of rescue, which they argued could not be delayed much beyond October, kept them in tolerable spirits. An elevated position was chosen for a look-out station, and many anxious hours and days were spent in fruitless watching for a friendly sail. In vain. They had to face the dreary prospect of a second season in the Aucklands. It was in this extremity that their mettle and resource were fully put to the test.

First of all they set to work to build a craft to carry them to New Zealand if possible. "A cutter of about ten tons," it was thought, would answer the purpose, and so it very likely would if they had but the tools to construct her with. As it was, their stock of shipbuilding implements consisted of an "American axe, an adze, a hammer, and a gimblet." Still they undertook and fairly advanced with their task up to the point at which an augur for boring holes was required.

Mr. Rynal, who was smith when he was not cooking or making shoes, thought he could make one. He had made a saw and several hundred nails, and for three days he wrought at the indispensable auger. "It was truly deplorable to view the faces of all as we stood around him, when he decidedly pronounced it impossible for him to make one. They all appeared, and I have no doubt felt, as if all hope was gone. Then with a wild resolve, they determined to patch up the crazy old boat, which had been battered and broken with daily work since their shipwreck. They heightened her by several planks, and added a deck. Then the question was who should go in her. She was too small to carry all five, yet it was not easy to decide who was to be left behind.

Captain Musgrave preferred risking a simultaneous drowning of the whole party to what might appear a selfish and arbitrary selection. However, when it came to the final crisis, two of the crew showed the white feather, and the captain, the mate, and another put forth on a voyage of 400 miles in their frail craft, resolved on death or freedom. They had been twenty months in captivity. A voyage of five days and nights brought them to Port Adventure. The boat was very leaky, and was only kept afloat by constant pumping. With most praiseworthy self-sacrifice Captain Musgrave instantly took measures to return, himself, to the Aucklands in order to rescue the two men left on the island.

A small vessel was chartered, and after a stormy passage he regained the old scene of his adventures. He found the two men he had left behind on the point of parting company and setting up an establishment each on his own account, owing to their incapacity of agreeing. And yet these two had remained on the island chiefly in consequence of the previous friendship which had existed between them. Captain Musgrave has added another name to the muster-roll of those who prosper by self-help. The literary qualities of his narrative are not very great, and it was not to be expected that they would be. The plain, unvarnished tale attracts by its manifest truthfulness and sincerity.

WINE OVER TWO HUNDRED YEARS OLD.—During the recent occupation of Bremen a good many bottles of the fabulously costly "Rosenwein," kept in twelve great casks with silver hoops, in what is thence styled "The Apostles' Cellar," and only drunk on rare occasions by the municipal fathers, by the sovereigns to whom they sometimes present a bottle, and by the sick citizens of the town, who have a prescriptive right to receive a bottle gratis in case of need, were disposed of by the Prussians. Under no circumstances is this precious liquor ever sold, for no fortune short of Aladdin's lamp would suffice to enable its possessor to adopt so costly a style of beverage, for the value of wine increases, like that of diamonds, in the ratio of the growth of the compound interest of the capital expended on its first purchase; so that, as a "piece" of German wine, containing 204 bottles, cost, in 1624, at which period this famous wine was placed in the Apostles' Cellar, 300 rix-dollars, or 1,200 francs, the cost of keeping up the cellar, the amount of taxes paid upon it, and the compound interest upon all this outlay through nearly two centuries and a half, the same "piece" of wine now represents a sum of 600,000,000 of rix-dollars, and each bottle would be worth, on the spot, 2,750,000 rix-dollars, that is to say, over ten millions of francs. And as a bottle of wine is supposed to contain eight glasses, each glass of this unparalleled wine costs 1,400,000 francs, and each drop 1,400 francs. The Prussians could not resist the temptation of tasting this wine, but they appear to have contented themselves with very little. Possibly they found it less delicious than they expected, for one who has been favored with a taste of it declares that it was by no means agreeable, the vinous flavor having changed to a weak acid, and the wine itself being of a dark brown hue, approaching to blackness. During the occupation of Bremen by the French some of their generals made heavy demands on this wonderful wine; and the burgesses of Bremen therefore assert that that town paid to France a ransom heavier than that of all the other towns of Germany put together.

AN auction of hair of young girls who have taken the veil was recently held at a convent in Paris, when 890 pounds of hair was sold for £1200.

HOW TO MAKE GOOD JAM.—Crowd twenty fashionably dressed ladies into one street car.

NOTICE.

The publication of "THE CALIFORNIAN" takes place on Saturday mornings, and copies may be obtained in the City at all News stands, and of our News-agents through the country. It will also be served by carriers on the morning of publication.

WHITE & BAUER, News Dealers, No. 413 Washington street, are General Agents for THE CALIFORNIAN in the interior counties of this State, also, for the adjacent States and Territories.

All kinds of JOB PRINTING done with neatness and despatch, at reasonable rates.

J. P. EOGARDUS, C. H. WEBB. } Publishers.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

SAN FRANCISCO, SATURDAY, SEPTEMBER 15, 1866.

FULL volumes of The Californian, from the commencement, can be obtained at the office, 532 Merchant street. Price, in muslin, $1 per volume; two volumes (one year) bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

TRAVELLING AGENT.—MR. O. P. TRUESDELL is our authorized Agent to receive subscriptions, and appoint agencies for THE CALIFORNIAN.

ELECTROPLATED GENTILITY.

GENERAL education, though indispensable to the successful working of popular institutions, is undoubtedly attended by certain serious evils in any community where a false social standard obtains, making respectability depend upon occupation; and there have been those who have ventured to argue that the education of the masses in the United States is calculated to produce, and is now actually producing some of these evils.

It is urged, for instance, that young men who have become possessed of an education, feel themselves above pursuits involving any kind of manual labor, and almost invariably aspire to one of the learned professions, or to commercial business; that hence, these occupations become overcrowded, so that we have more lawyers, doctors, writers, book-keepers, clerks, etc., than are required, or than there is room for. To the operation of this cause, is attributed the large numbers of young men seeking for employment, and seeking it in vain, in all our large cities.

The evil undoubtedly exists, but is it fairly to be attributed to the fact that education is so general? May not the case be stated, with at least equal plausibility in quite a different way? May we not insist that the evil does not arise from the education of too many, but of too few? If those who are educated shrink from the pursuits of the uneducated, would not universal education—or the nearest practical approximation to it—remove the difficulty by removing the distinction upon which it is founded? Viewed in this light, general education is an evil only because it is not general enough. No one in our day feels himself above manual labor, because he can read the newspaper and write a receipt; and if a thoroughly good practical education were as much the rule, and the want of it, as much the exception as in the case of the ability to read and write, no one would feel any more disposed to assume airs of superiority on the strength of such an education, than he would on the strength of being able to see without spectacles or to walk without crutches.

But after all, is not the real source of the evil complained of, to be found in the too prevalent disposition—especially in our large cities—to base social distinctions upon occupation—a disposition not in accordance with the fundamental idea of our institutions, and traceable in a large measure to the undue influence among us of English habits of thought and feeling on these subjects? We are not of course so Quixotic as to imagine that distinctions of this kind can be utterly ignored, but we are at the same time strongly inclined to the opinion that too much importance is attached to them, and that the prevalent feeling in regard to the intrinsic respectability of certain callings, as compared with others, has far more influence in overcrowding the ranks of those professions and occupations which have the factitious stamp of "gentility," than the general diffusion of education.

A FEATURE not included in the programme was presented on Sunday last during the rope-walking feat of "Rosa Celeste," at Hayes' Park. She was announced to wheel a barrow "with a young man in it" over a rope about four hundred feet in length, extending from the Summer-House to the top window of the Pavilion. When within fifteen or twenty feet of the end of her journey, the steapness of the incline proved too much for her strength, and she was obliged to request her passenger to get out, which he did, holding on to the rope by his hands while Celeste passed over him and finished her journey.

THE YOUTH'S COMPANION, a weekly for the young people, and the only publication of its kind on this coast, is about to appear in an enlarged form, as a small quarto of sixteen pages. It is a sprightly and entertaining paper, and occupies a field of usefulness vacant until its advent.

CALIFORNIA CHILDREN.

THE children born in California are said to be far superior to the average type of childhood in beauty, health and physical development. But there seems also to exist a very general impression that the fatal germ of original sin, familiarly known as "the old Adam," crops out in them at a more precocious age, and with more irrepressible force, than in the children of Eastern or transatlantic communities.

If the indwelling presence of the old Adam, in abnormal force, is to be predicated from greater restlessness, activity, and impatience of restaint, and a stronger predilection for boisterous amusements than accords with our traditional and conventional notions of what is becoming in model children, we fear that it will be impossible to repel the impeachment in its application to the rising generation in California. At the same time it might be urged, in extenuation, that these objectionable traits are precisely such as naturally result from the splendid physical development and the exhuberant vitality which are claimed to be the peculiar characteristics of California children. And yet these characteristics, under wise and thoughtful parental control, need not necessarily develop themselves in disagreeable forms; whenever they do so develop themselves we fear the fact must be attributed to lack of tact, judgment, and care on the part of the parents. Strong vitality, robust health and high animal spirits in children have no necessary natural connection with boisterousness or rudeness. On the contrary, wherever a truly wise family discipline is maintained, they manifest themselves in a pleasing vivacity and a charming sprightliness peculiar to the period of opening life.

If California children are in reality worse and more disagreeable than other children, is it not because California parents are more careless, injudicious, and even reckless in regard to family government than other parents? The fact is, we fear, that in our day, and especially in this community, the repugnance to excessive harshness and stringency in the discipline of children, has led to the opposite extreme of excessive laxity. The American aversion to tyrannizing over children has developed into such a loosening of family government as leaves them to grow up destitute of that wholesome and necessary restraint without which children are insufferable nuisances to all who come in contact with them. The old-fashioned iron rule, under which the most trival offences were visited with cruel punishment, was deplorable indeed. It broke many a joyous and sensitive spirit, and impressed indelibly upon many a delicate nature the most melancholy idiosyncrasies. And yet it may well be doubted whether the mischiefs resulting from it have been greater than those which are born of that careless laissezaller system that imposes no check upon children, but leaves them to grow up selfish, headstrong, disobedient and irreverent, unrestrained by discipline, and unawed by respect for any authority whatever.

THE HON. MR. SKINNER, a member of the New Brunswick Parliament, has distinguished himself by a not entirely unsuccessful effort to show that the impression so prevalent in the United States, that our Provincial neighbors "cannot take a joke," is not absolutely correct without exception. As might naturally have been anticipated, the recent newspaper discussions at the East, in regard to the expediency of admitting Canada, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick into the Union, together with the reports of intended Congressional action on the subject, proved not a little irritating to the rather irascible and over-sensitive Provincial temperament; and the Canadian journals have scolded us vigorously for our Yankee presumption. The Hon. Mr. Skinner, however, could not make up his mind to let us off so easily, and he has avenged the outraged dignity of Her Majesty's loyal North American subjects by introducing into the New Brunswick Legislature a bill entitled, "A bill to establish conditions for the admission of the States of Massachusetts, New York, Pennsylvania, Maryland, and the District of Columbia, into the British North American Confederation; and for the organization of territorial governments for the other States of the American nation," including California and Oregon, of course. Mr. Skinner has fairly earned a title to a high place among Provincial humorists—if indeed there are enough of them to constitute a class. At any rate, Mr. Skinner and "Sam Slick" make a pair, which will do for a beginning.

ATLANTIC PAPERS.—Choyuski, of the Antiquarian Book-Store, Second street, near Howard, has placed us under obligations for a bundle of late Eastern papers and magazines; consisting of news, political, pictorial, literary and spiritual publications. Choyuski keeps all the papers imported.

A YANKEE and an English captain, each in a schooner, tried their speed in Gibraltar Bay, when our countryman beat John Bull all hollow. They met on the shore the next day, and the Englishman swore that he had never been outsailed before. "Just like me," said Jonathan, "for my Jemima never beat nothing afore."

FAIRS.—The State Fair at Sacramento closes this week. The Fair at Stockton opens on the 18th instant.

OUR BOOK-TABLE.

Campaigns of a Non-Combatant, and his Romaunt abroad during the War.—By George Alfred Townsend. New York: Blelock & Co.; San Francisco, A. Roman & Co.

HERE is an extraordinary book by an extraordinary young man. George Alfred Townsend has attained the mature age of twenty-five years. He wrote three plays before his majority. Since then he has made the tour of Europe on nothing; returning to the United States, has lectured successfully on his lecturing failure in England; has written for all sorts of foreign and domestic magazines and periodicals; has edited two large newspapers at a time; and has finally written a book—a book abounding in merits and faults. The faults, however, are the parents of his greatest beauties. He could not be so vividly daring without occasionally knocking a "two inch rule" all to pieces.

The field of war—that one which is characterized by "meadows of margin and rivulets of type"—is just a little crowded now. It is a pity, therefore, that Mr. Townsend did not carry out his idea when he first used to talk of it over in Paris. He would then have more reason to rejoice that he has written, next to Richardson's, the best book of all the war correspondents.

Lord Macaulay says that the particular is better than the general in rhetoric. In the sense in which this dictum is manifestly to be taken, we may also say that the "Campaigns of a Non-Combatant" is better than an elaborate history. The staid historian sees battle-fields, as it were, from a high balloon, like our friend Professor Lowe. In the exalted remove of a century, the heat of the conflict is no longer felt and some of the dust is settled. On that very account, perhaps, for the purposes of impartial history, one sees best at the distance of a hundred years. Now Mr. Townsend gives us the battle-field just as any of us might have seen it if we had been there. We are treated to a sight of it through our own eyes rather than through the blank dispatches of generals. With him we feel our little rood of enthusiasm in a conflict of miles; we see the passing ambulances; we are borne along in the flow of the charge, or in the more terrible ebb of the retreat; with him we hear above and around us "the music of modern ordnance and projectile, the whistle of the minie-ball, the howl of the shell that makes unearthly havoc with the air, the whiz-z-z of solid shot, the chirp of bullets, the scream of grape and canister, and the yell of immense conical cylinders that fall like red-hot stoves and spout burning coals." We know of few books that tell "the history of yesterday," so vividly and so stirringly, as Mr. Townsend's "Campaigns of a Non-Combatant."

How I Managed My House on Two Hundred Pounds a Year.—By Mrs. Warren. First American Edition, from the Thirty-sixth Thousand London. Loring, Boston; A. Roman & Co., San Francisco.

This book consists of a series of lessons in household economy for the benefit of inexperienced housekeepers who have need to practice it. The lessons are none the less likely to prove useful from the circumstance that they are conveyed through the medium of a pleasantly written story. The preface states that 36,000 copies of the book have been sold in Great Britain.

The Magic Mirror—A Round of Tales for Young and Old.—By William Gilbert, author of "De Profundis." With eighty-four illustrations, by W. S. Gilbert. Alexander Strahan, London and New York; A. Roman & Co., San Francisco.

Sherbrooke.—By the author of "Madge." New York: D. Appleton; San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

Land at Last—A Novel in Three Books.—By Edward Yates, author of "Running the Gauntlet," etc. New York: Harper & Brothers; San Francisco: A. Roman & Co.

Notices of other new works, with copious extracts, will be found in our "Literay Gleanings" on another page.

WE NEED VARIETY.—Monotony is destructive. The sea has nothing but itself—the desert the same. But the country has variety, and here is the charm of life. So in all our enjoyments there must be variety. For instance, how keen are the first enjoyments—the first glimpse of spring, the first airs of autumn—any pleasant event long delayed—music, after a long interval. If a man has not heard music for a long time, the sound even of a Jew's harp is welcome. Now the wisdom of life is to take advantage of these things; enjoy one, and then the other; thus each one will be fresh, if time be given the chords of the mind, so to speak, to gather keenness. Hence there is a constant round of more or less enjoyment. This is the best that can be done with life according to the best minds. And then the prosaic moments must intervene, to still further make up the variety.

THE following on newspaper writing is exceedingly forcible—fully equal to Hamlet's advice to the players. We commend it to our correspondents: "Usually one point is enough for an article. Some single nail should be struck fair upon the head, and then left at once. Introductions are a nuisance. Inferences are always skipped. The sentences should be short. Every word should lean with life. Condensation should be extreme. All that is not necessary to the effect should be discarded. He who has the nerve to do this with a soul that fires with great thought, and the manliness to cut it free, may wield a power with the pen which no sceptre can rival."

THE LION'S MOUTH.

"The gravest beast is an ass, the gravest bird is an owl, the gravest fish is an oyster, and the gravest man is a fool." SYDNEY SMITH.

"'I will roar, that I will do any man's heart good to hear me." A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

"I will aggravate my voice so, that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove; I will roar you an 't were any nightingale." IBID.

"Nil falsi audeat, nil veri non audeat dicere." CICERO

Still Another Installment of Correspondence.

WE had supposed that the public had by this time become satiated, if not nauseated, with "correspondence concerning the editorship," and we intended that the letters published last week should be the final installment; but as we have received from various quarters assurances of the continued popularity among the reading public of these specimens of the epistolary style of distinguished individuals, we make room to-day for a few more letters.

The Proprietor of the Californian:

SIR:—At the Academy at West Point, where I commenced and terminated a distinguished military career, I remember having read in one of the classics which constituted a part of our Academic course, the following sentiment, or more properly, perhaps, the following maxim or apothegm: "non omnes omnia possumus"—that is, we cannot all of us do everything.

I am not indisposed to admit the general correctness of this venerable declaration, implying, as it does, the existence of illustrious exceptions to the rule in the persons of those rare individuals whose vast powers are adequate to any undertaking, and whose just self-reliance engenders the serenest equanimity in the presence of every emergency.

It might be supposed by those who have never sounded the ultimate depths of a capacious intellect, that the various spheres of life in which my powers have illustrated themselves: first, in the military service; then in the legal profession, and finally in a high judicial office—not to speak of numerous commercial and financial speculations, which I have conducted, as I flatter myself, not altogether without the tact and shrewdness popularly supposed to be the exclusive possession of men destitute of scholastic acquirements and educated with sole reference to practical ends—it might, I say, be supposed that these various vocations and avocations would have left me little opportunity to cultivate the tastes and acquirements requisite for the successful editorship of a journal of the highly literary character of THE CALIFORNIAN.

This, however, is far from being the case. You must have observed, sir, if it has ever been your privilege to attend the sessions of the court in which I preside, my wonderful familiarity with every branch of knowledge, human and divine, which is brought incidentally under my judicial notice. As an example of my polished and perspicuous style, I ask your attention to my letter to Mr. O'Doherty, published during the war, calling upon him, as an officer of the court, to repel certain imputations on his loyalty and devotion to the Union. For the high esteem accorded to my personal character, I refer to all who have ever known me, and especially to the members of the San Francisco bar, who, before my elevation to the bench, and for a very brief period after that occurrence, used to practice principally in the Twelfth District Court.

I have, sir, in my day and generation, made many sacrifices, but too little appreciated, for the public good. In the possession, as I lately took occasion publicly to announce, of a handsome competency, the fruit of successful pecuniary adventures, I could expect no increase of fortune, nor any accession of worldly advantage from the acceptance of my present judicial position. At the earnest solicitation of the Republican party, I consented to allow my name to be used as a candidate for the vacant judgeship. I abandoned my own ease and quiet in compliance with the importunities of my friends, and it is also well known that, in order to ensure my election, I sacrificed two fifty vara lots which, being held by me adversely to the city, threatened to prove a formidable obstacle to my success. For further details I refer to the newspapers of that period.

I understand that the salary attached to the editorship is $10,000 per annum. It seems almost superfluous to say that to an individual possessed, like myself, of abundant means, laboring at present solely for the public good, and enjoying a handsome income, which, with my official salary of $6,000, actually amounted for the last year to the almost incredible sum of $5,740, the compensation proposed presents not the slightest temptation. The high respect which I feel for anything connected however remotely with the judicial office, prevents me from indicating more distinctly the motion which led me to make this communication, as it is quite conceivable that you, sir, may be so blind to your own interest as to reject the golden opportunity now offered for your acceptance. All that I can add consistently with my own sense of propriety, personal and official, is, that if at the salary specified, I am specially requested by the entire establishment to fill the vacant post, I shall not hesitate to comply, but shall resolutely abandon my present honorable position for a still more enlarged sphere of extended usefulness. I am, ect.,

ORPHEUS CICERO P—TT.

To the Proprietor of the Californian:

THE CITY OF THE PLAINS, Sept. 12, 1866.

You are undoubtedly cognizant that, since the blissful epoch when I germinated in the full fruition of my early manhood, I have eschewed with inconsiderable solicitude the jejune gewgaws which impart a purely meretricious splendor to an exuberent and preternaturally prolific imagination.

The recondite and beneficent principles of jurisprudence, involving in their elucidation the patient assiduity of a concentrated attention, and likewise the paramount influence of the ratiocinative faculties, have happily relieved my style from that insufferable thralldom to which it was almost incessantly subjected in the halcyon days of my young existence, when my imagination was as prolific as the miasmatic regions which distill their impure essences on the broad belt of the globe, with perennial plentitude amidst sighing breezes and circumambient pernicious perfumes.

A portentous exigency necessitates a comprehensive survey on your part of the almost inexhaustible category of individuals who aspire to crown their brows with the amaranthine wreath of literary laurels. Beneath the magic of most glowing themes which my fancy opportunely curtailed, brings even now to my vision, and entranced with far back glimpses of glory, what a flood of mingled emotions, of triumph, of reverence, and of grateful pride would rush upon my soul could I but hope to attain the lofty literary summit to which you are pleased to call the most meritorious of the lovers of literature. As I have tempered my poetical predilections by the untoward casualties that have chequered my political aspirations, I may predicate upon the operation of so gigantic a cause, to say nothing of my legal discipline, the possession of capacities in happy unison with the multifarious duties of the editorial sanctum.

If this application should happily be crowned with success, it will have the effect of adding another to the many links which bind me to "mine ancient" of more joysome days, my counseller and Fidus Achates—the Honest John of the last century, who is my friend, whose friend I am, whether on the inviting stump, in the intriguing caucus, the boisterous convention, or the sweet retiracy of social and spiritual intercourse.

In conclusion, this bucolic region, teeming with a pastoral people keenly alive to the most delicate beauties of chaste and artistic creations, would hail with unalloyed manifestations of appreciative gratification the knowledge that the march of your brilliant literary constellation was regulated and controlled by one on whom their smiles have never ceased to flow amidst the storms of adversity or the sunshine of success. Yours with Sentiments of Profound Veneration,

J. W. CAUFFRUTH.

Private Theatricals and "The Church."

MR. EDITOR:—Our parish is going to destruction; the Sabbath school, as my boy Paul says, is getting demoralized, and the parson's wife is drove raving frantic, and all about these private theatricals. I'm sure I don't know why they call 'em private. Mrs. Deacon Pingree, who is one of our mothers in Israel and comes of real old Puritan stock, she and I can't keep quiet any longer She says she has been told the young men and women are as bad as real play-actors, and though I don't think them quite so wicked as that, I fear they are fast coming to it.

I said to my husband the other night when we come home from prayer meeting, after the minister had given notice of a concert to raise funds to build him a barn, and I might as well tell you that you can get tickets at the church from ten in the morning till four in the afternoon for one dollar. Refreshments in the vestry after the performance, and children half price—to the concert, not to the refreshments. I said to my husband, says I, and I'm real sorry to say that these theatricals has completely carried him away; and since he came to this country he has grown what he calls liberal minded, but I call it backsliding. I says to him, "now Calvin, you're one of the pillars of the church, and you'd ought to set your face against this acting that's drawing off our young men and girls from their interest in the church and leading them astray from the fold, but, instead of that, you only encourages of 'em on." "Why, dear," says he, "if they like it what's the harm in their amusing themselves. It's no worse than your reading Shakspeare at your reading club."

Now, its true our club does read Shakspeare beautiful, but the young folks don't paint their faces, nor dress up; nor they don't act a bit more than if they were reading advertisements out of a newspaper—and so I told him. "Well, Betsy," says he, "you know you had tableaux at your last church fair, and the young ladies dressed in costumes they got from the theatre, and you can't deny that you had raffles for everything you couldn't sell outright; and then there's that concert you gave in the church." Well, I can't begin to tell you how he went on, but he made me feel so downright bad that I had a real good cry, and I do believe its nothing but these sinful plays that has turned his mind from the right ways.

Now, Mr. Editor, when such things can delude a man like my Calvin, who has been brought up in the church, and lead our children into taking part in such shameful performances, and when so many of our congregation go night after night to see their acting—some of 'em, too, who wouldn't even be seen in a theatre—I think its high time we women, who are interested in the Christian welfare of our city, should make an effort. Me and Mr. Deacon Pingree have decided that something must be done to stop it, for what in the world will ever become of us if such sinful things go on—and I am sure you will help us all you can—so do, Mr. Editor, write something at once, and give notice that a meeting of all right-minded persons will be held at once to have a real right down sober talk and see if we can't put a stop to them private theatricals.

Yours, BETSY PETTINGILL.

A Snort Against Pork and Beans.

MR. EDITOR:—My determination—my fixed and unalterable determination not to be forced to put pork and beans into my own mouth, every Sunday for breakfast, is the immediate cause of my wish to put this communication into your "Lion's Mouth" The dish is intrinsically an offensive one—a diabolical Yankee invention—but it isn't that that makes me feel so strongly on the subject. Every intelligent person knows that it's a scrofula and measle-breeding abomination, a pachydermal enormity, and only fit for pachyderms; but it isn't that. I'm not any more afraid of trichina and tapeworm than the next man; but I'm not going to be subjugated and compelled to swallow any particular dish on a particular day, in conformity to a puritanical fashion. I wouldn't if it was oysters or green turtle. If San Francisco is to be Bostonized I'm not; I'll try to find a spot somewhere on the planet where the tyranny of Boston notions hasn't reached.

At our boarding-house the regular Sunday breakfast is pork and beans and "Boston brown bread," fresh from Swain's, the loaf being strongly suggestive of a very dirty flower-pot which it closely resembles in shape, color, and texture. I mean no reflection on Swain; its the entire institution I'm talking about. Of course our boarding-house is run by a "Boston lady;" and it's a part of her religion to eat pork and beans on Sunday mornings. And there's the point I make; I won't yield an inch to Puritanism. I'll eat pork and beans any other day, if its necessary, and take my chances; but if I do on Sunday damme. If I thought she did it because they're cheap I'd stand it, for God knows I sympathize with any one "lone woman" that has to keep boarders. But it isn't because they're cheap and go a good ways, at least not altogether. No, she does it in a spirit of piety—and eat's 'em herself with the air of a devotee performing a religious ceremony. As for me, I know well she sets me down as a godless reprobate because I won't touch 'em; for she looks at me across the table with precisely the expression with which my Methodist aunt used to in revival time when all the family "had convictions" except myself. But if it came to the worst and I had to be religious, I'd rather a devilish sight be converted to Methodism than to Boston-brown bread and porkandbeanism.

Yours solemnly, JEFFERSON SNORT.

False History.

I wish the "Lion's Mouth" to utter a loud roar against a misstatement concerning the origin of an ancestor of mine. In an article entitled, "Origin of Illustrious Men," which has been published in almost every newspaper in the United States, I find the following:

"Sir Cloudesley Shovel, Rear Admiral of England, was an apprentice to a shoemaker, and afterwards a cabin boy."

Now had Sir Cloudesley Shovel been a shoemaker's apprentice and afterwards a cabin boy, his attaining the high position of Rear Admiral of England would of course been so much the more creditable, but such is not the fact. Sir Cloudesley Shovel was born of an ancient family who lost their estates in consequence of their faithful adherence to Charles I. Young Cloudesley entered the navy not as a cabin boy, but as a "gentleman volunteer," under Admiral Sir Cristopher Mengs, who, himself, entered the navy as a cabin boy. Sir Cristopher took a great interest in young Cloudesley, and the history of the early life of the patron has, in course of time, become confounded with that of his protegé. I derive this information from the private papers of the family, and the printed statement of Sir Cloudesley Shovel's chaplain. Hoping a roar against an error which is to be found in several editions of the History of England may not be thought unworthy of the "Lion's Mouth,"

I am yours very truly,

A GREAT, GREAT, GREAT, GREAT, GRANDSON OF SIR CLOUDESLEY SHOVEL.

A Chance for the "Round Table."

Having created a sensation and sold many numbers of their paper by exposing the fact that the ladies of America are given to habitual intoxication, the editors of the Round Table are of course racking their brains for an idea for another sensational article of a similar character. As the Round Table succeeded so admirably when it had no facts to work on, it cannot fail to do equally well or even better when it has even a slight foundation to work on. It has "proved" that the ladies of America are habitual drunkards. Now let it prove they are terribly addicted to gaming. A first rate sensation article could be founded on the following which we find in an exchange:

"At the recent races at Saratoga Springs, New York, the ladies got up a little amusement for themselves. A 'pool' was started in one of the hotel parlors, and the prizes consisted of a set of diamonds, an India shawl, a sewing machine, a complete suit for a baby, a duplex elliptic hoop, a set of chemise buttons, and a paper of pins. 'Onward,' the winner of the race, was their favorite from the start."

If ladies will bet chemise buttons, hoops, pins, baby suits and such trifles, won't they go farther and bet money? Of course they will. Here is a basis. Now let the Round Table assert that every lady in America carries a pack of cards in her pocket; that she loses her pin money in playing poker—nay, more; let it lament that they cheat terribly; that the mysteries of "long" and "short" cards, "top" and "bottom stocks," strippers," "breaks," etc., are well known to every fashionable lady in America, and that not one of them will hesitate to salt an ace, or turn a jack, as the occasion may require.

We hope the Round Table will be grateful to us for this suggestion. If it adopts it we will provide it with a few more ideas of the same kind.

Things Perhaps not Generally Known.

It is possible it may not be generally known that the chignons, which the ladies now wear at the back of their heads, are in many instances made of paper, and in others of gutta percha. Perhaps people generally do not know that many ladies wear false lips made of pink India rubber, which are attached to thin lips in a manner which defies detection and which give a pretty pouting appearance to the mouth. All persons may not know that false ears of flesh-colored India rubber have been invented for the use of ladies with large ears, and are worn a little in front of the real ears, which are drawn back and concealed under the hair. It will be as well for those who do not know these things to test as far as possible the reality of the lips of every lady who will allow them. There is, we fancy, one method by which India rubber lips can be detected. If any one knows that chignons are made of paper and gutta percha, that ladies wear India rubber lips and ears, we should feel obliged by their telling us so, as we are among those who do not know.

Good Gracious!

The Bulletin's swill-milk articles were pretty well got up. They caused a sensation by presenting to the minds of doting mothers the awful vision of children dying by hundreds from drinking swill-milk. The redoubtable Fitz Smythe of the Alta has, however, got up a sensation item which leaves the Bulletin quite in the shade. The City Hall, it appears from Fitz Smythe's statement, has never been properly repaired since its walls were cracked by an earthquake, and all who have entered it during the last six months were liable to be crushed to death if they sneezed, as the slightest vibration would bring the building down about their ears. Terrible, isn't it? Supervisor Torrey is attending to the matter now, and we are quite sure that he will this time prevent any lives being lost in consequence of a neglect to take proper precautions. Fitz Symthe is painfully pathetic in his description of what might have happened. He says: "The fall of the building and the destruction of many precious lives—possibly hundreds, certainly dozens—was only a question of time; with the least violence it would have been the work of a moment, and we should have been called upon to record—if we had not been among the victims—a catastrophe beside which that which occurred on Summer street a few nights since would have been unworthy of mention."

"If we had not been among the victims!" Then he says: "Day after day we have been sitting for hours in that building, with hundreds of our fellow-citizens, hour after hour, exposed to an instant and horrible death, and as we look back upon the danger we have escaped, our heart grows sick at the thought of what might have been, but which, thank God, did not occur."

Fitz Smythe is evidently very solicitous about the safety of Fitz Smythe, and considers the fact that he has been exposed day after day for hours to an instant and horrible death; something which should make the hearts of all who read his brilliant effusions grow sick. Let him possess his soul in peace; every one who commenced reading that pathetic account of what might have happened, if the City Hall had fallen down, felt his heart grow sick before he had finished.

AN ENGLISHMAN IN AMERICA.

AN Englishman, who bas recently visited America, gives the following impressions :

In a city of three or four hundred thousand inhabitants, you see nothing but mere flat surfaces, straight lines, right angles, parallel rows of boards, and perpendicular palings. The very trees lining the streets are as straight as walking sticks. Straight rows of rails cut up the roadway of the straight streets. The hotels are marble packing-cases, uniformly square, and pierced with many windows; the railway cars and street omnibuscs are exact parallelopipeds ; and, to crown all, the national flag is ruled in parallel crimson stripes, with a blue quadrangle in one corner, sown with stars in parallel rows.

Philadelphia, from its rectangularity, has been called the "chess-board city ;" Washington has been laid out on a plan quite as distressingly geometrical ; and nine-tenths of the towns and villages are built on gridiron lines. There are some crooked streets in Boston, and that is why Europeans usually show a preference for Boston over other American cities : while in the lower part of New York, a few of the thoroughfares are narrow, and deviate a little from the inexorable straight line. In most cases there is no relaxation of the cord of tension. There are no corners, nooks, archways, alleys ; no refuges, in fact, for light and shade. In the State of Virginia, there is one of the largest natural arches in the world ; but in American architecture a curved vault is one of the rarest structures. The very bridges are on piers without arches. Signboards and trade effigies, it is true, project from the houses, but always at right angles. This rigidity of outline makes its mark on the nomenclature and manners of the people.

The names of the streets are taken from the letters of the alphabet and the numerals in the Ready Reckoner. I have lived in G street. I have lived in West Fourteenth, between Fifth and Sixth avenues.

Mathematical calculation is the basis of daily life. You are fed at the hotels at stated hours ; and the doors of the dining-room are kept locked until within a moment of the gong's sounding. At some tables d'hote fifty negro waiters stand mute and immobile behind the chairs of two hundred and fifty guests, and, at a given signal, uncover, with the precision of clock work, a hundred dishes. These are not matters of opinion ; they are matters of fact. Routine pursues you everywhere—from the theatre to the church, from the fancy fair to the public meeting. In the meanest village inn, as in the most palatial hotel, there is a traveller's book, in which you are bound to enter your name. You may assume an alias; but you must be Mr. Somebody. You cannot be, as in England, the "stout party in Number Six," or the "tall gent in the Sun." You must shake hands with every one to whom you are introduced ; you must drink when you are asked, and then ask the asker to drink—though I am bound to say that this strictly mathematical custom has, owing to the piteous protests of Europeans, somewhat declined of late. If you enter a barber's shop to be shaved, a negro hands you a check bearing a number, and you must await your turn. When your turn arrives, you must sit in a certain position in a velvet covered fauteuil with high legs, and must put your feet up on a high stool on a level therewith. The barber shaves you, not as you like, but as he likes, powders you, strains a napkin over your face, sponges you, shampoos you, pours bay rum and eau de-cologne on your head, greases, combs you out, and "fixes" you generally. The first time I was ever under the hands of an American barber, I rose as soon as he had laid down his razor, and made a move in the direction of the wash-hand-basin. He stared at me as though I had gone mad.

"Hold on!" he cried in an authoritative accent. "Hold on! Guess I'll have to wash you up."

That I should be washed up or "fixed," was in accordance with the mathematical code.

This all but utter absence of variety of form, of divergence of detail, of play of light and shade, are productive in the end of that petulant discontented frame of mind, of that soreness of spirit, with which almost every tourist who has visited the Great Republic has come at last to regard its civilization. As a rule, the coarser the traveller's organization, the less he cares about art or literature, the better he will get on in America.

I met a fellow-countryman once, the son of an English earl, at one of the biggest, most mathematical, and most comfortless of the New York hotels, who told me that he should be very well content to live there for ten years. "Why," he said, "you can have five meals a day, if you like." This is the kind of traveller, the robust, hardy, strong-stomached youth, fresh from a public school, who goes to America, and does not grumble. But do you take, not a travelled Englishman, but a travelled American, one who has been long in Europe, and has appreciated the artistic glories of the Continent, and you will discover that he finds it almost impossible to live in his own country, or "board" at an American hotel. Every continental city has its colony of cultivated Americans, good patriots and staunch republicans, but who are absolutely afraid to go back to their native land. They dread the mathematical system. Those who, for their families' or their interests' sake, are compelled to return, live at hotels conducted, not on the American, but on the European system—that is to say, where they can dine, breakfast, or sup, not as the landlord likes, but as they themselves like. Those who are wealthy shut themselves up in country-houses, or splendid town mansions, surrounded by books and pictures, and statues, and tapestry, until their existence is almost ignored by their countrymen. In no country in the world are so many men of shining talents, of noble mind, of refined tastes, buried alive, as in the United States.

THE FOUR HENRYS.

A PREDICTION FULFILLED.

ONE stormy evening, as the rain fell in torrents, an old woman, who lived in a miserable hut in the forest of St. Germain, and who passed in the surrounding country for a kind of witch, heard a loud knocking at her door. She opened it, and a young man on horseback presented himself and craved hospitality.

By the dull light of a lamp which she held in her hand, she perceived him to be a young nobleman. He appeared to be quite young, and his dress denoted rank. The old woman lighted a fire, and inquired of the stranger whether he was hungry, and desired food. The appetite of a youth of sixteen is like his heart at the same age, craving, and not difficult to please, and he immediately accepted her offer. A morsel of cheese and a loaf of black bread from the cupboard was all the old dame could produce.

"I have nothing more," said she to the young nobleman. "This is all that your grinding tithes and taxes leave a poor creature to offer a traveller. The peasants, too, in this country, call me a witch and sorceress, and make that excuse to their conscience for stealing from me the little that my poor old field produces."

"Ma foi!" said the young man ; "If ever I become king of France, I will suppress the taxes and teach people better."

"God grant it!" replied the old woman.

At these words the gentleman drew to the table to commence his repast : but at the same moment a fresh knock at the door arrested him.

The old woman opened it and perceived another horseman drenched with rain, who also begged for shelter. The same hospitality was instantly granted him, and on the stranger's entrance, she perceived that the man was young, and judging from his appearance, of noble descent.

"What! is it you, Henry?" cried one.

"Yes, Henry," replied the other. Both were named Henry.

The old woman discovered from their conversation that they were of a number of a large hunting party, conducted by the king, Charles IX., which had been dispersed by the storm.

"Mother," said the second comer, "have you nothing better to offer us.

"Nothing," replied she.

"Then," said he, "we will go shares."

The first Henry demurred, but glancing at the resolute eye and strong frame of the second Henry, said, in a somewhat chagrined tone :

"Agreed ; we shall share equally."

He did not express his secret motive, but he feared, if not sharing equally, his companion would appropriate the whole. They accordingly sat down either side of the table, and one had already begun to eat the bread with his dagger, when a third knock was heard at the door. The meeting was indeed singular. It was again a youth, a nobleman, and a Henry. The old woman looked at them with astonishment.

The first comer wished to hide the bread and cheese. The second replaced them on the table, and laid his sword by the side. The third Henry smiled.

"You do not wish, then, that I should share your supper?" said he. "Well, I can wait ; I have a strong stomach."

"The supper," said the first Henry, "belongs by right to the first comer."

"The supper," said the second, "belongs to him who knows best how to defend it."

The third Henry became red with anger, and said, haughtily,

"Perhaps it belongs to him who knows best how to fight for it."

These words were scarcely uttered when the first Henry drew his poignard ; the two others their swords. As they were first beginning the affray they were startled by a fourth knock at the cabin door ; a fourth young man, a fourth nobleman, a fourth Henry was introduced. At the sight of drawn swords he produced his own, and, attaching himself to the weakest party, he joined in the combat.

The old woman, terrified, hid herself, and the weapons struck everything in their reach. The lamp fell down and was extinguished, but they continued to fight in the darkness. The noise of the swords lasted sometime, then gradually became less, and at length ceased altogether. The old woman ventured to issue from her hiding-place, and, rekindling the lamp, she perceived the four young men stretched on the ground, each having a slight wound. She examined them carefully, and found that fatigue, rather than loss of blood, had overcome them.

They arose from the ground, one after the other, and ashamed of what had transpired in the heat of their passion, they began laughing, and exclaimed :

"Come, let us sup together, without any more fighting."

But when they came to look for their supper, they found it on the ground, all trodden under foot and stained with blood. Meagre as it was, they regretted it. In addition to this, the cabin was destroyed, and the old witch, seated in a corner, fixed her pale, red eyes on the four young men.

"Why dost thou stare on us thus?" said the first Henry, who was troubled at her gaze.

"I am reading the fates written on your foreheads," replied she.

The second Henry commanded her sternly to disclose them, and the two others laughingly acquiesced. The old woman replied :

"As you have all four met in this cabin so shall you all meet in a like destiny. As you have trampled under foot and stained with blood the power you might mutually share—as you have devastated and impoverished this cottage, so will you devastate and lay waste France—as you have all four been wounded in the darkness, so you will all four perish by treason and a violent death.

The four young noblemen could not refrain from laughing at the woman's prediction.

These four young noblemen were the four heroes of the League—two as its leaders and two as its enemies.

Henry of Conde : poisoned by his wife at Saint Sean d'Angely.

Henry of Guise : assassinated at Blois by the Forty-five.

Henry of Valois : assassinated by Jacques Clement at Saint Cloud.

Henry of Bourbon : assassinated at Paris by Ravillac.

AN INCIDENT AT CHATTANOOGA.—There was a lull in the battle. At least, it had gone scattering and thundering down the line, and the boys were as much "at ease" as boys can be on whom at any moment the storm may roll back again. To be sure, occasional shots, and now and then a cometary shell, kept them alive ; but one of the boys ran down to a little spring and to the woods where the enemy lay, for water. He had just stopped and swung down his canteen. Tick, and a minie ball struck at an angle and bounded away. He looked around an instant, discovered nobody, thought it was a chance shot—a piece of lead, you know, that goes at a killing rate without malice prepense : and so, nowise infirm of purpose, he bent to get the water. Ping! a second bullet cut the cord of his canteen, and the boy "got the idea" a sharpshooter was after him, and he went on the right-about, on the double quick to the ranks. A soldier from another part of the line made a pilgrimage to the spring, was struck, and fell by its brink. But where was the marksman? Two or three boys ran out to draw his fire, while others watched. Crack! went an unseen piece again, and some keen-eyed fellow saw the smoke roll out from a little cedar. The reb. had made him a hawk's nest—in choice Indian, a Chattanooga in a tree—and drawing a green covert around him, was taking a quiet hand at "steeple shooting" at long range. A big blue-eyed German, tall enough to look into the third generation, and a sharpshooter withal, volunteered to dislodge him. Dropping into a little runway that neared the tree diagonally, he turned upon his back and worked himself cautiously along ; reaching a point perilously close, he whipped over, took aim as he lay, and God and his true right hand gave him deliverance. Away flew the bullet, a minute elapsed, the volume of cedar parted, "and like a big frog," as the boys described it, out leaped a grayback—the hawk's nest was empty, and a dead rebel under the tree. It was neatly done by the German. May he live to tell the story a thousand times to his moon-faced grand children.—Frank Moore's "Anecdotes of the War."

A MARINE GROTTO IN PARIS.—The famous grotto being built in the cellars of the Hotel Frascati, on the Boulevard Montmartre, promises to be as successful as the other culinary speculations of the wealthy syndic of the whilome corporation of Paris butchers. This curious enterprise has already been pushed downwards to a considerable depth, and the walls, ceiling, and ground are said to present a faithful imitation of the scenery of a submarine cave. The place is to be a vast aquarium, where a numerous collection of finny celebrities will swim about in real sea water, brought fresh, daily, from the sea by railway. We are promised seals, porpoises, a siren, Chinese gold-fish, and various other interesting strangers, including a pretty little whale, twelve feet long, just brought from Baffin's Bay, via Boston, in the Mormon, on board which vessel it was lodged in an iron tank, in and out of which the sea swept freely, no doubt to the great satisfaction of its interesting tenant. The whale is now at Brest awaiting the completion of its Parisian domicile, and will be conveyed to this city in its tank by railway.

AGUA DE MAGNOLIA.—The prettiest thing, the "sweetest thing," and the most of it for the least money. It overcomes the odor of perspiration; softens and adds delicacy to the skin; is a delightful perfume; allays headache and inflammation, and is a necessary companion in the sick room, in the nursery and upon the toilet sideboard. It can be obtained everywhere at one dollar per bottle.

LYON'S MAGNETIC INSECT POWDER is instant death to Fleas, Ticks, Rouches, and everything of the insect species. It is one of the few articles that can be relied upon, and for a mere wo bits we can save the bites and bills of these little pests. None is genuine unless signed by E. Lyon, and bearing the private stamp of Demas Darnes & Co., New York.

S—T—1860—X. DRAKE'S PLANTATION BITTERS.

They purify, strengthen and invigorate.
They create a healthy appetite.
They are an antidote to change of water and diet.
They strengthen the system and enliven the mind.
They prevent miasmatic and intermittent fevers.
They purify the breath and acidity of the stomach.
They cure Dyspepsia and Constipation.
They cure Liver Complaint and Nervous Headache.

They are the best Bitters in the world. They make the weak strong, and are exhausted nature's great restorer. They are made of pure St. Croix Rum, the celebrated Calisaya Bark, roots and herbs, and are taken with the pleasure of a beverage, without regard to age or time of day. Particularly recommended to delicate persons requiring a gentle stimulant. Sold by all Grocers, Druggists, Hotels and Saloons. Only genuine when Cork is covered by our private U. S. Stamp. Beware of counterfeits and refilled bottles.

D. H. DRAKE & CO., New York.

"In lifting the kettle from the fire I scalded myself very severely—one hand almost to a crisp. The torture was unbearable. * * * * The Mexican Mustang Liniment relieved the pain almost immediately. It healed rapidly, and left very little scar.

"CHAS. FOSTER, 420 Broad street, Philada."

This is merely a sample of what the Mustang Liniment will do. It is invaluable in all case, of wounds, swellings, sprains, cuts, bruises, spavin, etc., either upon man or beast.

Beware of counterfeits. None is genuine unless wrapped in fine steel-plate engravings, bearing the signature of G. W. Westbrook, Chemist, and the private stamp of DEMAS BARNES & Co., New York.

ALL WHO VALUE A BEAUTIFUL HEAD OF HAIR, and its preservation from premature baldness and turning gray, will not fail to use Lyon's Celebrated KATHAIRON. It makes the hair rich, soft, and glossy, eradicates dandruff, and causes the hair to grow with luxuriant beauty. It is sold everywhere. E. THOMAS LYON, Chemist, N. Y.

LYON'S EXTRACT OF PURE JAMAICA GINGER, for Indigestion, Nausea, Heartburn, Sick Headache, Cholera Morbus, &c., where a warming, genial stimulant is required Its careful preparation and entire purity make it a cheap and reliable article for culinary purposes. Sold everywhere, at 50 cents per bottle. ap7-1y

NO FORFEITING.—Heretofore, if a person holding a Life Policy became unfortunate, and could not raise the sum of money required to pay his next premium, his policy was declared forfeited. The BROOKLYN LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY OF NEW YORK has decided to make EVERY POLICY it issues NON-FORFEITABLE, giving a PAID-UP POLICY to the party if unable to continue his payments of premiums. The dividends of the Brooklyn Life Insurance Company are settled annually in cash. This plan is far more acceptable to insurers than at the end of three or five years, as in other companies. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company allows thirty days grace in the payment of premiums. Its policies are incontestable, and its losses are promptly paid. The Brooklyn Life Insurance Company offers every known plan of Life and Endowment Insurance. Get a pamphlet at the office, 240 Montgomery street, southeast corner of Pine, from Stephen T. King, General Manager, or David B. Arrowsmith, Local Agent.

MEDICAL ADVICE.

DR. WM. K. DOHERTY'S Medical and Surgical Institute is becoming a sine qua non to the welfare of our State and health of our citizens; and his rapidly spreading reputation, although it may excite surprise, is but the signal of skill, and follows as the natural effect of such a cause. We are personally acquainted with gentlemen who had suffered for years under chronic disease, and who had taken advantage of every available means that promised relief, but without success, until they called upon Dr. Doherty, who, in an incredibly short space of time, has given them entire relief. It is gratifying to announce this fact, because the Doctor is a gentleman who seeks, not by defamation of others, to establish his reputation, or to rear the superstructure of his own upon the ruin of another's fame. The Doctor conducts his Institute in a manner that must be gratifying to all his patients. He examines, hears, advises, and recommends, without charge, and the patient, after hearing his terms for treatment, can accept or reject at pleasure. In no case does the Doctor make a charge unless he effects a cure. This he is able to do, because he feels the confidence which long experience has given, and no doubt the consolation which appertains to that confidence. Persons afflicted with either acute or chronic disease, would do well to consult the Doctor; at all events, it can do no harm, as for consultation he asks no fee; nor does he insist on obedience to his advice unless the patient places himself under his care. His offices are on Sacramento street, opposite the Pacific Mail Steamship office.—San Francisco News.

EMPEROR MAX has received important news from his vrow, Carlotta; though his having no children, accounts for his not having heard that at C. A. FLETCHER'S, No. 1 Montgomery street, can be found the largest and most elegant assortment of BOY'S CLOTHING there is in the city. Boys' Suits as usual made to order from a superior line of Cloths and Cassimeres, always on hand, after the regular Eastern Fashion Plates, received monthly; this being the only Boys' Clothing House in receipt of them. A large assortment of Gentlemen's Fine Clothing and Furnishing Goods, Traveling Trunks, Valises, etc., at all times, and at the most reasonable rates.

PHOTOGRAPHY.—The pictures taken in this city are far superior to those taken in the East and Europe. We account for this simply from our atmosphere, which is lighter and clearer than any other. And this is why so many arriving here have noticed how much better pictures look here than at home. The best gallery to seek out is one which has the most light, and with few high buildings surrounding it. The NEW YORK, on the east side of Third street, a few doors below Market, has more light than any other in the city, and their pictures give more satisfaction, and are far cheaper than those from Montgomery street galleries.

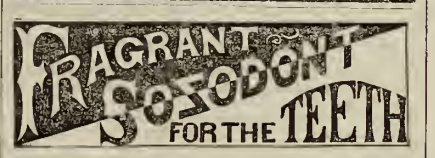
LADIES, ATTENTION!—Direct Importation from Paris.—Please recollect that there is only one Shawl House in California, J. D. Robert. 119 and 121 Montgomery street, which receives direct, Genuine Square and Long Broche Cashmere Shawls of every description and price, from Robert, Gosselin & Son, manufacturers in Paris. Don't make a mistake.

N. B.—Cloaks, Basques, Zouaves and Dresses of every description made to order in the latest style. Prices as cheap as possible.

ALL GOOD JUDGES OF PIANOS agree that Frisbee & Scott have the finest and largest stock of Pianos in this city. They are agents of the celebrated firms of Calenberg & Vaupel, of New York, and Knabe & Co., Baltimore. There is certainly not an instrument equal to those imported by them. Mr. Gusvav A. Scott pays, also, particular attention to having their stock of foreign and American sheet music equal to any New York store. They keep at No. 3 Montgomery street, Masonic Temple.

JACOB SHEW & Co., No. 315 Montgomery street, near Pine, take First-Class Photographs, of all kinds, at the lowest scale of prices adopted by the Associated Photographers. Photographs retouched in the highest style of the art.

A SUMMER AND WINTER MEDICINE.



"Great oaks from little acorns grow."

The worst diseases known to the human race spring from causes so small as to almost defy detection. The volumes of scientific lore that fill the tables and shelves of the medical fraternity only go to prove and elaborate these facts.

Then guard yourselves while you may. The smallest pimple on the skin is a tell-tale and indicator of disease. It may fade and die away from the surface of the body, but it will reach the vitals, perhaps, at last, and death be the result and final close. Maggiel's Bilious, Dyspeptic and Diarrhœa Pills cure where all others fail. While for Burns, Scalds, Chilblains, Cuts, and all abrasions of the skin, Maggiel's Salve is infallible. Sold by J. Maggiel, 43 Fulton street, New York, and all Druggists, at 25 cents per box.

"THE SCIENCE OF LIFE, OR HOW TO LIVE, AND WHAT TO LIVE FOR."—This is the title of an interesting and highly useful little book, published by Dr. Beck, of this city. It is especially adapted for the perusal of young men, nevertheless its truthful pages should be read by all, as they contain good, sound, healthy matter which can be easily understood and appreciated by every reader. This work is issued gratuitously on application to the Doctor, or will be sent free to any address on receipt of postage stamp or envelope addressed to Dr. Beck's office, 314 Kearny street, or post office Box 1599.

'Dr. Beck is a member of several American and European Universities, and has published numerous works on Anatomy, Medicine, and Surgery His former connection with the principal "Anatomical Museums" of New York, Paris, London, etc., combined with his experience in his profession render him a highly desirable person to consult, and we can confidently recommend him to the public. *

READ the Testimony of a few of the many Eminent Clergymen and their Families of New York city, who, having used the Sozodont for a long time past, are convinced of its excellent and invaluable qualities, and give it their cordial commendation:

Rev. THOMAS DEWITT, Pastor Collegiate Ref. Dutch Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. J. W. ALEXANDER, D. D., Presbyterian Church, Fifth Avenue.
Rev. J. B. WAKELEY, M. E. City Missionary.
Rev. W. F. MORGAN, D. D., Rector St. Thomas Church, Broadway.
Rev. E. H. CHAPIN. D. D., Pastor Fourth Universaiist Church, Broadway.
Rev. SAMUEL COOKE, D.D., Rector St. Bartholomew's Church, Lafayette Place.
Rev. SAMUEL OSGOOD, D.D., Pastor Church of Messiah, Broadway.
Rev. B. M. ADAMS, M. E. Church, Duane street.
Rev. HEMAN BANGS, late Pastor Centenary M. E. Church, Brooklyn.
Rev. W. S. MIKELS, Pastor Baptist Church, Sixteenth street.
Rev. GEO. POTTS, D.D., Pastor Presbyterian Church, University Place.
Rev. E. E. RANKIN, Pastor Presbyterian Church Forty-second street.
Rev. T. E. VERMILYE, D. D., Pastor of Co Dutch Reformed, Lafayette Place.

FROM G. F. J. COLBURN, DOCTOR DENTAL SURGERY, NEWARK, N. J.

The Popular Dentrifice known as Van Buskirk's "SOZODONT," besides being a very pleasant addition to the toilet, contains ingredients that, if used according to the directions, will prove of the greatest utility to the health of the mouth and teeth.

BEWARE OF IMITATIONS!

Sold by all Druggists and Perfumers.

HALL & RUCKEL,
jc2-4m NEW YORK.

HALL'S SARSAPARILLA,
YELLOW DOCK AND IODIDE POTASS,
THE
Best Blood Purifier Known.

Persons that are troubled with Rheumatism, Scrofula, Neuralgia, Morbid Liver, Salt Rheum, Pimples, Boils, or any of the many diseases that originate from Impure Blood, would find it much to their advantage to give this justly celebrated article a trial. One or two bottles are quite sufficient to convince the most skeptical of its merits. It contains neither Spirit, ARSENIC nor MERCURY which cannot be truly said of any other preparation called "Sarsaparilla."

SHEPARDSON & GATES, Proprietors,
ap7-3m N. W. cor. Sansome and Commercial-streets.

THE CALIFORNIAN'S
SAN FRANCISCO BUSINESS DIRECTORY.

BOWLING ALLEYS.
Wholers & Steil. Pine and Montgomery, (Russ House.

BOOKS.
A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.
A. Roman & Co., 417 and 419 Montgomery street.

BOOTS AND SHOES.
Finch & Co., 133 Montgomery street.
Wentworth, Hobart & Co. (wholesale manufac.) 210 Pine

CLOTHING.
H M. Lockwood & Co., 624 Clay street.
J. R. Mead & Co., corner Montgomery and Bush streets
William Sherman, 412 Sansome, corner Commercial.
Quincy Hall, 545, 547, and 549 Washington street.

COAL OIL, LAMPS, ETC.
Dell, Cranna & Co. (wholesale) 513 Front street.
A. C. Dietz & Co., (wholesale,) 521 Front street.

DENTISTS.
Dr. Blake, removed to Third, corner Mission.
Dr. A. N. Clark (late Knowles & Clark) removed to 410 Kearny.
Dr. Wm. B. McAllister, 221 Third street.
N. T. Whitcomb, 205 Third, near Howard.

DANCING ACADEMY.
Coghill's, Congress Hall, Bush, above Montgomery
Fuller & McCarthy, 727 Market, near Third.

DRY GOODS.
Meagher, Taaffe & Co...9 Montgomery street.
Mosgrove & Blakely, 222 Third, near Howard.
Bayce & Reich, S W corner Jackson and Stockton.

DRUGGISTS.
R. H. McDonald & Co., (Wholesale) Sansome, cor. Pine
Shepardson & Gates, (successors to R. Hall & Co.,) corner Sansome and Commercial.

EDUCATIONAL INSTITUTIONS.
Cal. Collegiate Institute, Miss M. Lammond, 68 Silver.
Miel Institute, Miss Florence James, 55 South Park.
Pacific Business College, 751 Market street, above Third.
Prof. Williams' Commercial Academy, 869 Mission st

FURNITURE.
Goodwin & Co., 510 and 528 Washington streets.
J. Peirce, 415, 417 and 419 California street.

GROCERS.
N. Boschen, corner Fifth and Minna.
Slosson & Ladd, southwest corner Folsom and First.
J J. Miller, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.
Haskell & Co., Market and Sutter sts, below the Market
W. M. Noble & Co., cor Howard and Twelfth streets

HATTER.
Lamott (wholesale and retail) 227 Montgomery street

HOTELS.
Brooklyn, John Kelly, Jr., Sansome, corner Pine.
Chicago, E. W. Heimburg & Co., 220 Pacific street.

INSURANCE.
Accidental and Casualty, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery street, corner California.
Equitable Life, R. L. & F. Ogden, Montgomery, corner California.
Mutual Life Ins. Co., H. S. Homans, Agent. 609 Clay.
Manhattan, R. B. Swain & Co., Ag'ts, 206 Front, cor Cal.
National Ins. Co, N.E cor. Montgomery and California.
Occidental Ins. Co., S. W. cor. Montgom'y and California.
Pacific Ins. Co., 436 California street.
Brooklyn Life, S T King, agent, S E cor Montg'y & Pin

LADIES' BIJOUTERIE, CLOAKS, ETC.
Rosenblatt's, 123 and 125 Montgomery street.

LIVERY AND SALE STABLE.
Philip Morshead, removed to Howard, near Fifth.

MILITARY GOODS AND REGALIA.
T. Rodgers Johnson, Odd Fellow's Hall, 325 Montg'ry st.

MAPS.
Pacific Map Depot, A. Gensoul, 511 Montgomery.

MERCHANT TAILORS.
J. H. Hammond removed to 328 Montgomery.

PHOTOGRAPHIC GALLERIES.
New York, B. F. Howland proprietor, 25 Third street, below Market.

PIANOS, MUSIC, ETC.
M. Gray, 613 Clay street.
W. S. Pierce, removed to 534 Market, opposite Second

PHOTOGRAPHS, CUTLERY, SPECTACLES, ETC.
Lawrence & Houseworth, 317 and 319 Montgomery st.

RESTAURANTS.
Bivalve, Nolting & Spreen, 640 Market, near Kearny.
Eureka, C. H. Brickwedell & Co., Clay, near Montgom'y
Ladies' Refreshment Saloon, Swain & Brown, 636 Market
Magnolia, 143 Third street.
Market, by Felix and Gustave Besson, 520 Merchant.
Philadelphia, Jacob Weiss, 308 Montgomery street.
Helvetia, Johnjury & Bros., 524 Merchant street.
Saulmann's, 506 Montgomery street.

SALOONS.
Russell & Holding's Exchange, 622 Market street
Charter Oak, Frank Kelly, N E. cor Third and Howard
Razzetti & Co.'s, 527 Washington, above the Market.
Jones' Sample Rooms, S.E. cor. Montgomery and Cal.
S Myers, 332 Montgomery street.
V. Squarza, 44 Leidesdorff street.
Sun Burst, Carolin & McArdle, cor. Second and Market.
Coates & Henderson, 37 Sutter street.

SCALES.
Fairbanks & Hutchinson, Depot for Fairbanks' Scales 334 Montgomery street.

SEWING MACHINES.
Grover & Baker, R. C. Brown, 116 Montgomery.
The Florence, office 111 Montgomery street.
Wheeler & Wilson, corner Montgomery and Sacramento

TOYS, ETC.
Feldbush & Co., 207 Montgomery street.
A. Kohler, 620 Washington street.

UPHOLSTERER.
T. McAllister, corner Sutter and Leavenworth.

WATER-CURE INSTITUTE.
Dr Bourne's Pioneer, 10 Post, near Montgomery

RHEUMATISM.

Throughout this coast a great deal of suffering is experienced from Rheumatism. Weeks and even months of protracted and aggravated misery is endured by the victims of medical inefficiency and ignorance, which could be cured speedily.

Dr. Bourne cures without medicines, which accounts for his extraordinary success. No. 10 Masonic Temple, Post street, San Francisco.

DISTANCES FROM SAN FRANCISCO

To various points:

To Fort Point, 4 miles, by omnibus, four trips a day.
Lone Mountain, 3, street railway.
Seal Rock, 6, cars and omnibus, two trips a day.
Mission Dolores, street railways; Ocean House 8.
San Mateo, 20, railroad.
Crystal Springs, 23, railroad and stage
Half-Moon Bay, 29, do. do.
Redwood city, 30, do.
Mountain View, 38, do.
Santa Clara, 47, do.
San Jose, 50, do., or steamer and stage, 54.
Alviso, 46. steamer, daily.
Almaden mines, 67, steamer and stage; or by railroad and stage, 64.
Santa Cruz, 78, railroad and stage.
Oakland, 8, steamer and railroad, six trips a day.
Alameda, 11, steamer, three trips a day.
San Leandro, 15, steamer and railroad.
Mission San Jose, 34, steamer, railroad and stage
Warm Springs, 37, do. do.
Benicia, 31, steamer leaves at 4 P. M. daily.
Sacramento, 117, do. do.
Stockton, 117, do. do.
Martinez, 33, do.
Pacheco, 38, steamer and stage.
Diablo Coal Mines, 44, steamer and stage.
Suisun, 50, steamer, or 54 by steamer and stage
Vallejo, 28; Mare Island, 37; Napa city, 50
White Sulphur Springs, 67, stage from Napa.
Geyser Springs, 118, do. do.
Sonoma, 52, steamer, tri-weekly.
Petaluma, 48, steamer, daily.
Healdsburg, 80, stage daily from Petaluma
San Quentin, 12, steamer; Farallone Islands, 20.

DR. HUMPHREYS'

Homœopathic Specifics

Have proved, from the most ample experience, an entire success—simple, prompt, efficient and reliable. They are the only Medicines perfectly adapted to popular use—so simple that mistakes cannot be made in using them; so harmless as to be free from danger, and so efficient as to be always reliable. They have received the highest commendation from all, and will always render satisfaction.

No. 1	cures Fevers, Congestion, Inflammations.	0 25
" 2	cures Worms, Worm Fever, Worm Colic,	25
" 3	cures Crying Colic, or Teething of in-
" 4	cures Diarrhœa of children or adults...	25
	fants	25
" 5	cures Dysentery, Griping, Bilious Colic,	25
" 6	cures Cholera Morbus, Nausea, Vomiting,	25
" 7	cures Coughs, Colds, Bronchitis	25
" 8	cures Neuralgia, Toothache, Faceache.	25
" 9	cures Headaches, sick-Headache, Vertigo,	25
" 10	cures Dyspepsia, Bilious Stomach	25
" 11	cures Suppressed, or Painful Periods..	25
" 13	cures Croup, Cough, difficult Breathing,	25
" 14	cures Salt Rheum, Erysipelas Eruptions,	25
" 15	cures Rheumatism, Rheumatic Pains...	25
" 16	cures Fever and Ague, Chill Fever, Agues	50
" 17	cures Piles, blind or bleeding	50
" 18	cures Opthalmia, and Sore or Weak Eyes,	50
" 19	cures Catarrh, acute or chronic, Influenza	50
" 20	cures Whooping-Cough, violent coughs.	50
" 21	cures Asthma, oppressed Breathing	50
" 22	cures Ear Discharges, impaired Hearing	50
" 23	cures Scrofula, Enlarged Glands, Swellings	50
" 24	cures General Debility, Physical Weakness	50
" 25	cures Dropsy, and scanty Secretions	50
" 26	cures Sea-Sickness, sickness from Riding,	50
" 27	cures Kidney Disease, Gravel	50
" 29	cures Sore Mouth, Canker	50
" 31	cures Painful Periods, even with Spasms	50
" 32	cures Sufferings at change of life	$1.00
" 33	cures Epilepsy, Spasms, St. Vitus' Dance.	1.00
" 34	cures Diphtheria, Ulcerated Sore Throat,	50

FAMILY CASES.

35 vials, morocco case, and book.....$10 00
28 vials, morocco case, and book..... 8 00
20 vials, morocco case, and book..... 6 00

These Remedies, by the case or single box, are sent to any part of the country, by Mail or Express, on receipt of the price.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN,
401 and 403 Battery street, corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

BROOKLYN HOTEL,

1852. SAN FRANCISCO. 1866.

The Proprietor of the above-named Hotel wishes to inform his patrons and the Travelling Public that he has opened that elegant Brick Fireproof Hotel, situated on the

S. E. Corner of Pine and Sansome streets,

SAN FRANCISCO.

It was built expressly for a Hotel, with all the modern conveniences attached to it.

Gas and water are supplied throughout the House.

Rooms are well ventilated, and the Public will find Hotel all the comforts of a home. The Hotel is spacious, and well adapted for the use of Families. Suits of Rooms can be had on reasonable terms.

LARGE READING ROOM

Attached to the Hotel,

Containing 500 Volumes of Standard Works,

Which is entirely for the use of patrons.

THE CITY COACH, with the name of the Hotel on it, will be in readiness at the Wharf, on the arrival of each steamer, to convey passengers and baggage to the Hotel, free of charge. JOHN KELLY, Jr.,
my6 3m Proprietor.

STOCKDALE HOUSE,
Corner Main and Oak streets, Petaluma.
mar24 6m H. STOCKDALE, Proprietor

ALLEN'S

LUNG BALSAM!

A CERTAIN CURE FOR

COUGHS, COLDS, INFLUENZA, NIGHT SWEATS, BRONCHITIS, SPITTING OF BLOOD, ASTHMA, WHOOPING COUGH,

CONSUMPTION,

And all Diseases of the

CHEST AND LUNGS

This celebrated Cough Remedy effects a speedy cure by producing a free and easy expectoration, heals abscesses of the lungs, prevents unhealthy secretion of the bronchial tubes, and removes from them those accumulations of morbid matter which cause oppression of the breast, difficulty of breathing, etc, soothes irritation of the respiratory organs which produces cough.

PRICE.....ONE DOLLAR PER BOTTLE.
Sold by all Druggists.

HOSTETTER, SMITH & DEAN, Agents,
401 Battery corner of Clay,
ap27-3m San Francisco.

PACIFIC MAIL STEAMSHIP CO.'S

Through Line to New York.

CARRYING THE U. S. MAIL!

Leave Folsom-street Wharf at 11 o'clock A. M. of the following dates, for PANAMA, connecting via Panama Railroad, with one of the Company's splendid steamers from ASPINWALL for NEW YORK.

On the 10th, 18th, and 30th of each month that has 30 days.

On the 10th, 19th, and 30th of each month that has 31 days.

When the 10th, 19th and 30th fall on Sunday, they will leave on Saturday preceding; when the 18th falls on Sunday, they will leave on Monday following.

Steamer leaving San Francisco on the 10th touches at Manzanillo. All touch at Acapulco.

Departure of 19th connects with French Transatlantic company's steamer for St. Nazaire, and English steamer for South America.

Departure of 10th connects with English steamer for Southampton, and P. R. R. Co.'s steamer for Central America.

Departure of 30th connects with English steamer for Tumaco, the port of the new mines.

The following steamships will be despatched on dates as given below:

SEPTEMBER 18TH,
COLORADO, Capt. J. T. Watkins, connecting with HENRY CHAUNCEY, Capt. Gray.

SEPTEMBER 29TH,
SACRAMENTO, Capt. J. M. Cavarly, connecting with the OCEAN QUEEN, Capt. Weir.

Cabin Passengers will be berthed through. Baggage checked through—100 pounds allowed each adult.

An experienced Surgeon on board. Medicine and attendance free.

The steamer will positively leave at 11 o'clock. Passengers are requested to have their baggage on board before 10 o'clock

☞ The splendid steamship COLORADO will be despatched for CHINA on TUESDAY, JANUARY 1, 1867, for HONGKONG via HONOLULU and KANAGAWA, carrying Passengers, Mails and Freight.

☞ Passengers and Freight will also be taken for SHANGHAE—to be forwarded from Kanagawa by steamer leaving within a few days.

For Merchandise Freight apply to Messrs. Wells, Fargo & Co.

For Passage and all other information, apply at Pacific Mail Steamship company's office, corner of Sacramento and Leidesdorff streets.

OLIVER ELDRIDGE, Agent.

OPPOSITION STEAMER-DAY,

TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 1866.

GREAT REDUCTION IN RATES,

VIA NICARAGUA!

THE CENTRAL AMERICAN TRANSIT COMPANY will despatch the favorite Steamship

MOSES TAYLOR,

ON TUESDAY, - - - SEPT. 25,

From Mission street Wharf, at 10 o'clock, A. M., precisely

Connecting at GREYTOWN with the splendid Steamship

SANTIAGO,

2,500 TONS, FOR NEW YORK.

☞ For Passage and Freight, and Insurance on Treasure, at greatly REDUCED RATES, apply to

I. W. RAYMOND, Agent,
Northwest corner Battery and Pine streets,
Up stairs, San Francisco.

CALIFORNIA

Steam Navigation Company.

STEAMER CAPITAL.....CAPT. E. A. POOLE.
" CHRYSOPOLIS. CAPT. A. FOSTER.
" YOSEMITE.....
" CORNELIA....CAPT W. BROMLEY.
" JULIA.....CAPT. E. CONCKLIN.

One of the above steamers leave BROADWAY WHARF, at 4 o'clock P. M., EVERY DAY, (Sundays excepted,) for Sacramento and one for Stockton, the Sacramento steamer connecting with light-draft steamers for Marysville, Colusa, Chico and Red Bluff.

Steamships PACIFIC, ORIZABA, CALIFORNIA, ACTIVE, and SENATOR, leave as advertised, for Portland, Oregon, New Westminster, British Columbia, Victoria, (V. I.,) Santa Barbara, San Pedro, and San Diego.

Office of the Company, northeast corner of Front and Jackson streets.

mar3 B. M. HARTSHORNE, President.

R. H. McDONALD. J. C. SPENCER.

R. H. McDONALD & CO., IMPORTING

Wholesale Druggists,

J STREET, SACRAMENTO,
AND
CORNER SANSOME AND PINE STREETS,
SAN FRANCISCO.

We respectfully beg leave to inform our customers and the public generally, that we have opened a House in the city of San Francisco, where we will be pleased to see as many of our old friends and customers as can make it convenient to call upon us. We shall keep at both places a large and well selected Stock of

DRUGS AND MEDICINES, SURGICAL INSTRUMENTS, DENTAL GOODS, FANCY ARTICLES, BRUSHES AND COMBS, SHOULDER AND BODY BRACES, LADIES' BANDAGES AND SUPPORTERS, GUM ELASTIC STOCKINGS, TRUSSES, PAINTS AND OILS, PATENT MEDICINES, HERBS AND EXTRACTS, BREWERS' AND SODA STOCK, CORKS, (large variety,) ASSAYERS' MATERIAL, BURNING OILS AND FLUIDS, PLASTER PARIS, MARBLE DUST,

Together with a large and complete assortment of all Goods kept in a well supplied Wholesale Drug Store.

We respectfully solicit those dealing in our line to examine and price our Stock before purchasing elsewhere.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,
Sacramento and San Francisco.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.,

IMPORTING WHOLESALE DRUGGISTS,

J street, Sacramento, and corner Pine and Sansome sts., San Francisco,

Importers of DENTAL AND SURGICAL INSTRUMENTS,

TEETH, GOLD FOIL, FORCEPS of all kinds, DENTAL CHAIRS, Hand and Foot LATHES, Brush, Cotton, and Corundum WHEELS, Pluggers, Scalers, Files, Rosewood DENTAL CASES, brass bound, best quality, with full sets Instruments, Mirrors, etc., price from $75 to $175 each. VULCANITE MATERIAL, Vulcanizers, Vulcanite Base, and Impression Gutta Percha. A large variety of VULCANITE TEETH, Scrapers and Packers; together with a large and complete assortment of all articles of the latest and most approved styles of Vulcanite Work. DENTAL BOOKS—We keep constantly on hand a supply of all the most approved Standard Works on Dentistry. Our efforts will be to keep a large and well selected stock of all Dental Material, where the Dental Profession may confidently rely upon having their orders filled in the best possible manner.

R. H. McDONALD & CO.
Sacramento: J street; San Francisco: corner Pine and Sansome streets. s1

AYER'S

Cathartic Pills,

ARE THE MOST PERFECT purgative which we are able to produce, or which we think has ever yet been made by anybody. Their effects have abundantly shown to the community how much they excel the ordinary medicines in use. They are safe and pleasant to take, but powerful to cure. Their penetrating properties stimulate the vital activities of the system, remove the obstructions of its organs, purify the blood, and expel disease. They purge out the foul humors that breed and grow distemper, stimulate sluggish or disordered organs into their natural action, and impart a healthy tone with strength to the whole system. Not only do they cure the every-day complaints of everybody, but also formidable and dangerous diseases. While they produce powerful effects, they are at the same time, in diminished doses, the safest and best physic that can be employed for children. Being sugar-coated, they are pleasant to take; and, being purely vegetable, are free from any risk of harm. Cures have been made which surpass belief, were they not substantiated by men of such exalted position and character, as to forbid the suspicion of untruth. Many eminent clergymen and physicians have lent their names to certify to the public the reliability of our remedies, while others have sent us the assurance of their conviction that our Preparations contribute immensely to the relief of our afflicted, suffering fellow men.

The Agent below named is pleased to furnish gratis our American Almanac, containing directions for the use and certificates of their cures, of the following complaints

Costiveness, Bilious Complaints, Rheumatism, Dropsy, Heartburn, Headache arising from foul stomach, Nausea, Indigestion, Morbid Inaction of the Bowels and pain arising therefrom, Flatulency, Loss of Appetite, all Diseases which require an evacuant medicine. They also, by purifying the blood and stimulating the system, cure many complaints which it would not be supposed they could reach, such as Deafness, Partial Blindness, Neuralgia and Nervous Irritability, Derangements of the Liver and Kidneys, Gout, and other kindred complaints arising from a low state of the body, or obstruction of its functions.

Do not be put off by unprincipled dealers with other preparations which they make more profit on. Demand AYER'S and take no others. The sick want the best and there is for them, and they should have it.

Prepared by J. C. AYER & CO., Lowell, Mass., and sold by

CRANE & BRIGHAM, San Francisco,
s1 2m and all Dealers.

CARRINGTON & CO'S

GENERAL PURCHASING AGENCY,

No. 40 BROADWAY, NEW YORK.

IF YOU WANT

Books, Prints, Clothing, Instruments, Music, Tools, Weapons, Sporting Implements, Fancy Stock, Jewelry, Silver or Plated Ware, Wines, Cigars, Fine Groceries, Furniture; in short, any Article, large or small, singly or in quantity, for Ladies' or Gentlemen's use or wear.

or for Dealers' Supplies, from a seal-ring to a steam engine—a Cameo or a Cashmere; lace or leather,

SEND ON YOUR ORDERS.

Orders may be given in French, Spanish or German.

COMMISSION CHARGE, - - - FIVE PER CENT

Address:

CARRINGTON & CO.,
40 Broadway, N. Y.

THE EQUITABLE LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY OF NEW YORK,

AS GOOD A COMPANY AS ANY IN THE UNITED STATES!

INSURANCE on Lives on all plans and on as favorable terms as any other safe company. No Extra Premiums for Traveling to and from the East.

ACCUMULATED FUND.....$2,500,000

R. L. & F. OGDEN,
General Agents for Pacific Coast and Territories,
S. E. corner California and Montgomery sts.

Accidental Insurance!

UNITED STATES

CASUALTY INSURANCE CO.

Insurance against all kinds of ACCIDENTS. The Only Mutual Company in America.

Fifty Dollars per annum insures your life against death by accident for $10,000 for one year, and gives you $50 if disabled.

Five Dollars per annum insures you for $1,000 and $5 per week compensation.

Insurance for any period, or for a trip or voyage.

RATES as low as any good Company can afford.

R. L. & F. OGDEN,
S. E. corner of California and Montgomery streets,
s1 3m General Agents for Pacific Coast.

BREWSTER & CO.'S

Carriage Manufactory,

372 Broome steet, New York.

We desire to announce to our California friends that we have made extensive arrangements by increasing our works for the coming season, and with a view to

SUPPLYING THE

WANTS OF CALIFORNIA,

will manufacture a style of work particularly adapted to city and country use, and in view of the destructive effects of city railroads on all light work, will give

CARRIAGES, BUGGIES, PHAETONS, COUPES, and Vehicles of every description, of our own manufacture, on hand and made to order.

Orders or communications should be addressed to

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of Broome street,

The firm of Brewster & Baldwin not being in any way connected with

BREWSTER & CO.,
Of No. 372, Broome street,

IN THE DISTRICT COURT OF THE Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco.

MARY SMITH, Plaintiff, vs. WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant.

Action brought in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and the complaint filed in said City and County of San Francisco, in the office of the Clerk of said District Court.

The People of the State of California send greeting to WILLIAM SMITH, Defendant: You are hereby required to appear in an action brought against you by the above-named Plaintiff in the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, and to answer the complaint filed therein, within Ten Days, (exclusive of the day of service,) after the Service on you of this Summons—if served within this County; or, if served out of this County, but in this District, within Twenty Days; otherwise, within Forty Days—or judgment by default will be taken against you, according to the prayer of said Complaint.

The said action is brought to obtain a decree of this Court, dissolving the Bonds of Matrimony existing between Plaintiff and Defendant, and that one half of the Defendant's property, if he have any, be awarded to Plaintiff, and for general relief.

And you are hereby notified that if you fail to appear and answer the said complaint, as above required, the said plaintiff will apply to the Court for the relief therein demanded.

Given under my hand and Seal of the District Court of the Fifteenth Judicial District of the State of California, in and for the City and County of San Francisco, this 27th day of June in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and sixty-six.

Seal. Int. Rev. Stamp, 50 cts., cancelled. } WM. LOEWY, Clerk,
By G. C. LETCHER, Deputy Clerk.

A. WILLIAMS, Plaintiff's Attorney, 535 Clay street. } je30 3m

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.—Estate of WILLIAM MACMICHAEL, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, administrator with the will annexed, of the above named estate, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against William MacMichael, deceased, to exhibit the same, with the necessary vouchers, within ten months from the first publication of this notice, to the undersigned at his place of business, No 12 Post street, Masonic Temple, in the city and county of San Francisco.

San Francisco, August 18, 1866.

THEODORE L. SCHELL,
Administrator with the will annexed of the estate of William MacMichael, deceased.

WINANS & BELKNAP, Attorneys for Administrator. 5t

J. PEIRCE,
FURNITURE AND
Bedding Warerooms.

Nos. 415, 417, AND 419 CALIFORNIA STREET,
NEAR MONTGOMERY.

THIS STOCK OF FURNITURE, etc., was selected with great care, and special attention given to the wants of this market, ENTIRELY AT THE EAST. It is NOT COMPOSED OF REFUSE GOODS, ODDS AND ENDS OF OTHER HOUSES that have lately closed out here, but CONSISTS ENTIRELY OF NEW GOODS, made after the latest patterns and in the most durable manner.

The present Stock is fully TWICE as large as that of any other house here. Parties having any doubts of this, or that the assortment is not superior to any in the city, can easily satisfy themselves by calling.

The stock of Case Goods is larger than ever before.

J. PEIRCE,
Ware-rooms 415, 417 and 419 California street
je16-3m SAN FRANCISCO.

PACIFIC OCEAN HOUSE,
SANTA CRUZ, CAL.

THIS NEW AND COMMODIOUS HOTEL, built and furnished in accordance with the most modern and improved plans, and with a view to the comfort and convenience of its patrons, is now open for the reception of guests.

To those who have visited Santa Cruz, it is unnecessary to speak of its beauties and its natural advantages over all other places of Summer Resort.

To those who have not, the Proprietor can only say COME AND JUDGE FOR YOURSELVES—giving all who may come the assurance that his earnest endeavors shall be to make the Hotel, in all its appointments, equal to the surroundings of this delightful Sea side Resort.

GEO. T. BROMLEY,
Santa Cruz, April 4, 1866. Proprietor.

CALIFORNIA BRASS FOUNDRY,
No. 125 First street, opposite Minna,
SAN FRANCISCO.

All kinds of Brass, Composition, Zinc, and Babbitt Meta Castings, furnished at the shortest notice. Brass Ship-Work of all kinds, Spikes, Sheathing Nails, Rudder Braces, Hinges, etc., constantly on hand and made to order. Also, manufacture Ship and Steamboat Bells and Gongs of superior tone.

All kinds of Steam, Liquor, Water, Oil, and Flange Cocks and Valves made and repaired.

Hydraulic Pipes and Nozzles, and Hose Couplings and Connections of all sizes and patterns, furnished with dispatch. PRICES MODERATE.

JOHN P. GALLAGHER,
JOSEPH H. WEED.
je10 3m

GOOD NEWS FOR THE PEOPLE.

Teeth Extracted Without Pain
BY THE
ANÆSTHETIC SPRAY PRODUCER,
WITHOUT EXTRA CHARGE.

Partial to a full Upper Set of Teeth, for from $10 to $25, as usual. Filling with best Cement, $1; with Gold, from $1 to $3. All work warranted.

Office, 139 Fourth street, near Howard.
au4 3m J. P. CROWELL, Doatist.

NATHANIEL GRAY,
UNDERTAKER,
CITY AND COUNTY SEXTON,
641 SACRAMENTO STREET, CORNER OF WEBB
Sole agents for BARSTOW'S PATENT METALLIC BURIAL CASES and CASKETS.
je17-3m

YANKEE NOTIONS
AND
FANCY GOODS!

MERCHANTS wanting Goods in this line should not fail to examine our stock, which is new and attractive, before buying elsewhere.

MEAGHER, TAAFFE & CO.,
jy21-3m Battery street, near Pine.

GREAT TRIUMPH!!
STEINWAY & SONS

Were awarded the FIRST PRIZE MEDAL at the late GREAT INTERNATIONAL EXHIBITION AT LONDON, over the two hundred and sixty-nine Pianos entered for competition from all parts of the world.

The Special Correspondent of the New York Times says: "Messrs. Steinway & Sons' indorsement by the Jurors is emphatic, and stronger and more to the point than that of any European maker."

A constant supply of the above superior instruments can be found at the Agent's,

M. GRAY, 613 Clay street.

PIANO TUNING done by a first-class Workman, from Steinway & Son's Factory, New York. my25

C. WIEDERHOLD & CO.'S
Piano Warerooms,
685 Market street, corner of Third,

WILL BE OPEN ON AND after SATURDAY, Aug. 25th, EVENINGS, till 8 o'clock.

SOLE AGENTS FOR
J. B. DUNHAM'S,
F. C. LIGHTE & CO.'S,
GEO. STECK & CO.'S, and
ERNEST GABLER'S
CELEBRATED PIANOS.

We will be in constant receipt of the above fine Pianos, which we warrant equal to any imported, and ask our friends and the public to call and examine for themselves. an25-3m

THE Accidental Insurance Co,
OF NEW YORK,

ISSUES POLICIES INSURING AGAINST INJURIES OF all kinds, and death resulting from accident

In case death does not result from the injury, the insured receives a weekly compensation as long as he is disabled (not to exceed twenty-six weeks.)

Policy.	Premium.	Weekly Compensation.
$1,000	$ 5 00	$ 5 00
$2,000	$10 00	$10 00
$5,000	$25 00	$25 00
$10,000	$50 00	$50 00

SEA VOYAGE POLICIES,
Covering risk to New York, cost $2 per $1,000.

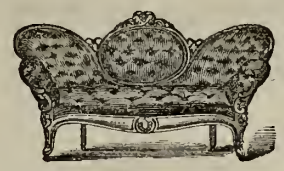
☞ No Medical Examination required.

Life Insurance.
CONNECTICUT MUTUAL
LIFE INSURANCE CO.,
HARTFORD, CONN.

For Policies, or further information, apply to
A. D. SMITH & CO., Agents,
Northwest corner Montgomery and Sacramento streets
au4 3m

GRAND OPENING
OF THE
Circassian Saloon,
Corner of Dupont and Pacific streets,
(Formerly "Diana Saloon,")
ON SATURDAY, AUGUST 11, 1866.

NOVEL ENTERTAINMENT.—Magic and Gymnastic Feats, free of charge.



☞ The best of WINES, LIQUORS, LUNCH, and CIGARS always on hand.

N. B. Fine Vocal Music, Polite Waiters, etc.
au11 1m

DO YOU WANT ANY Printing?
IF YOU DO, GO TO
411 CLAY STREET,
BETWEEN SANSOME AND BATTERY.

PRINTING OF EVERY DESCRIPTION DONE ON short notice and in the best style, by
M. D. CARR & CO.
je30-3m

FURNITURE
AND BEDDING!

LARGEST STOCK!
LATEST STYLES!
The Best Workmanship,
AND LOWEST PRICES!
AT
Goodwin & Co.'s
FURNITURE WARE-ROOMS,
Nos. 508, 510, 518 and 528 Washington-st.
ja16 SAN FRANCISCO.

HEUSTON,
HASTINGS
& CO.
The Fashionable Clothiers
OF
SAN FRANCISCO,

Are now engaged in enlarging their already extensive European connections, and are offering the LARGEST, FINEST, AND MOST COMPLETE

STOCK OF

CUSTOM-MADE CLOTHING,

GENTS' FURNISHING GOODS,

TRUNKS, BAGS, VALISES, ETC.,

ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

AT

REDUCED PRICES.

je17-3m

FIREMAN'S FUND
Insurance Company.

PRINCIPAL OFFICE,
Montgomery street, San Francisco.

Capital fully paid in Gold Coin	$500,000 00
Surplus, April 30, 1866	154,824 57
Total Assets	$654,824 57

Insure against Loss or Damage by Fire, on Stores, Dwellings, Merchandise, Vessels and Cargoes in Port, and other insurable property.

$50,000 is the largest amount taken on any one risk. This Company reinsures whenever the risks are deemed too large for the locality.

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY of STOCKHOLDERS
Under the Constitution and Statutes of California.

ALL LOSSES PAID PROMPTLY IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN

W. B. BOURN, President.
D. J. STAPLES, Vice President.
CHAS. R. BOND, Secretary. au17 3m

AMERICAN HOTEL,
Main street, - - - Petaluma.
mar24-6m EMERSON & LAMBERTON, Proprietors.

QUINCY HALL,
545, 547, 549 WASHINGTON STREET.

THE LARGEST CLOTHING EMPORIUM in California. The daily sales from the establishment is a sufficient guarantee that the prices are less than those of any other house on the Pacific coast. Here you also find clothing of the best of California Cloth, both for Wholesale and Retail trade. Also, particular attention paid to making up fine clothing to order. jy21

RING'S
VEGETABLE AMBROSIA
IS THE MIRACLE OF THE AGE!

Gray-headed People have their locks restored by it to the dark, lustrous, silken tresses of youth, and are happy!

Young People, with light, faded or red Hair, have these unfashionable colors changed to a beautiful auburn, and rejoice!

People whose heads are covered with Dandruff and Humors, use it, and have clean coats and clear and healthy scalps!

Bald-Headed Veterans have their remaining locks tightened, and the bare spots covered with a luxuriant growth of Hair, and dance for joy!

Young Gentlemen use it because it is richly perfumed!

Young Ladies use it because it keeps their Hair in place!

Everybody must and will use it, because it is the cleanest and best article in the market!

For Sale by Druggists generally.

For sale, wholesale and retail, by
JOHN F. SNOW,
Sole Agent for the Pacific Coast, 24 Post street,
je23 San Francisco.

MEAGHER, TAAFE & CO.,
IMPORTERS AND WHOLESALE DEALERS OF
DRY GOODS, LINENS,
FURNISHING GOODS,
YANKEE NOTIONS,
FANCY GOODS, ETC.
AGENTS FOR THE
MOUNT VERON DUCK COMPANY
NO. 107 BATTERY STREET, NEAR PINE.
RETAIL HOUSE, - - - NO. 0 MONTGOMERY STREET,
jy21 3m Lick House.

MR. AND MRS. COGILL
AND SONS,
Teachers of Dancing,

CONGRESS HALL,
On Bush-st., adjoining Russ House.

SCHOOL—MONDAYS AND WEDNESDAYS. Ladies at 2 P. M. Gentlemen and Ladies at 7 1-2 P. M. Soirees every Friday Evening. Hall to rent. an5-3m

RATES OF POSTAGE.

Valuable letters may he registered on application at the office of mailing, and the payment of 20 cents registration fee.

Transient newspapers, periodicals, blanks, proof-sheets, book manuscripts, pamphlets, and all mailable printed matter, except circulars and books, 2 cents for each and every 4 ounces. Double these rates are charged for books.

Seeds, cuttings, roots, etc., 2 cents for each 4 ounces or less quantity.

All packages of mail matter not charged with letter postage must he so arranged that the same can he conveniently examined by Postmasters; if not, letter postage will he charged.

Unsealed circulars, to one address, not exceeding three in number, 2 cents, and in the same proportion for a greater number.

No package will he forwarded by mail which weighs over 4 pounds.

All postage matter, for delivery within the United States, must be prepaid hy stamps (except duly certified letters of soldiers and sailors;) otherwise, double the above rates will be charged on delivery.

Weekly newspapers (one copy only) sent to actual subscribers within the county where priuted and published, free.

Letters to Canada and other British North American Provinces, when not over 3,000 miles, 10 cents for each ½ ounce. When over 3,000 miles, 15 cents. Prepayment optional.

Letters to Great Britain or Ireland, 24 cents. Prepayment optional.

THE

AWARDED THE HIGHEST PREMIUM

AT THE

State Fair of California,

The only Fair on the Pacific coast at which any two double-thread Machines were exhibited in competition in 1865.

If there is a FLORENCE SEWING Machine within one thousand miles of this office that is not working well, it will be attended to if I am informed of it, without expense to the owner. SAMUEL HILL,

General Agent,

111 Montgomery street, San Francisco.

THE

FLORENCE

SEWING MACHINE

RECEIVED THE FIRST PREMIUM, A GOLD MEDAL, at the Great Exhibition of the AMERICAN INSTUTE, - - - New York, 1865.

my10-3m

A CARD.

Great Sale of Fine Clothing.

OUR WHOLE STOCK OF FINE CLOTHING and Gents' Furnishing Goods, for the next

THIRTY DAYS,

At Prices that Challenge Competition.

IT MUST BE SOLD, TO MAKE ROOM FOR OUR FALL AND WINTER STOCK.

J. R. MEAD & CO.,

Corner Bush and Montgomery streets, and corner Sansome and Washington streets, San Francisco.

au4

PACIFIC

BUSINESS COLLEGE,

751 MARKET STREET,

(BETWEEN THIRD AND FOURTH,)

SAN FRANCISCO

AN INSTITUTION designed to prepare boys, young and middle-aged men for the active duties of business in the shortest time possible and at the least expense. For "COLLEGE REVIEW," giving information, call at the College, or address E. P. HEALD, President.

au11 3m

THE ONLY LIVING ASTROLOGER,

PROF. COHEN,

530 California street, San Francisco,

THROUGH HIS NATURAL GIFT, can give correct information on the Past, Present and Future, on any subject that may be required so as to avoid trouble. As evidence of his reputation, he has received over 18,000 consultations during his residence of six years in San Francisco! Consultation fee, $2. By letter, $3. Letter box, 104. It is not necessary to give the age. Office, 530 California street. Hours from 8 A. M. to 11 P. M. je15 3m

EIGHT HUNDRED THOUSAND

IN USE!

THE ORIGINAL P. P. STEWART'S FUEL SAVING

Air-Tight Cooking Stoves,

FOR WOOD OR COAL.

IMPROVED IN 1861;

WITH NEW AND EXTRA LARGE FLUES, AND BY THE ADDITION OF THE CELEBRATED PATENT DOUBLE SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.

Attention is Invited to the following Points of Superiority:

1. DURABILITY.—Lasting, with proper care, at least twenty years. Stoves are now in use that were set up in 1838.

2. MANUFACTURE.—Every portion of the Stove is thoroughly constructed. Each Stove is submitted to a critical test, and none leave our works unless completely and perfectly finished.

3. CAPACITY.—Baking, Boiling, Roasting, and all other culinary operations performed at the same time.

4. ECONOMY.—Saving the cost of the Stove in one year in the cost of fuel.

5. VENTILATION OF OVEN.—In the Stewart Stove alone, the front doors open directly into the oven, (protected by letters patent) securing a direct draft through the top of the oven by means of perforated holes in the doors and back flues. It will be borne in mind that, as the heated air always rises, this method of ventilation is the only one of any value whatever.

6. ENTIRE CONTROL OF HEAT.—The heat generated by the Stove may be held therein and used or thrown into the room at pleasure.

7. THE DOUBLE SHEET BOTTOM FLUE.—By which a compressing and inverting action of heat is obtained, and the oven more evenly and efficiently heated than by any other known invention.

9. HOT WATER RESERVOIR AND WARMING CLOSET.—Both useful and convenient, supplied by the waste heat and without extra fuel.

10. WATER BACK.—An arrangement for supplying hot water for the bath-room equal to any range.

 Beware of numerous imitations in the market, many of which resemble the "Stewart" only in appearance, and none of them possess any of its peculiar qualities.

See that the name of P. P. STEWART is on each Stove. None other genuine.

For sale by CALEB M. SICKLER,
422 Kearny street,
Between California and Pine, San Francisco.
Repairs for Stewart's Stoves constantly on hand.

au25-4m

TOWNE & BACON

Book and Job Printers,
Book Binders,
Blank Book Makers,
Paper Rulers,
536 Clay St., opp. Leidesdorff,
San Francisco, Cal.

This Firm are large importers of Paper, Printers' Materials, Ink, &c.; and with the largest Printing Office in the State, are able to do good work with dispatch, at very low prices.

Parties sending orders from the Interior will be served as faithfully as though personally present.

Samples and price lists furnished if desired, and work guaranteed to give satisfaction.

Agents for H. D. Wade's Inks.

s8 tf

CANTY & WAGNER,

(SUCCESSORS TO J. REGAN,)

WHOLESALE AND RETAIL

Confectioners,

111 Montgomery street, bet. Bush and Sutter.

N. B.—All candies sold by us are warranted to be manufactured from Stewart's double refined Sugar, and to be equal to any manufactured in the State. Country merchants solicited to examine our stock and prices. Goods delivered to any part of the city free of charge. my24-3m

MASON & HAMLIN'S

CELEBRATED CABINET ORGANS.

New styles, with Automatic Bellows Swell, at warerooms of agent.

A. KOHLER,

s1 3m No. 424 Sansome street.

THE CALIFORNIAN.

TERMS—FIVE DOLLARS PER ANNUM, IN ADVANCE

A PAPER FOR THE TIMES

DEVOTED TO LIVE TOPICS,

THE DISSEMINATION OF A PURE LITERATURE, DEVELOPMENT OF HOME TALENT,

AND THE

BEST INTERESTS OF CALIFORNIA

Published

EVERY SATURDAY MORNING

AT

532 MERCHANT STREET,

BY

J. P. BOGARDUS AND C. H. WEBB.

No effort will be spared to enable THE CALIFORNIAN to appeal to the Public for support, not only as the

BEST JOURNAL ON THE PACIFIC COAST,

But also as being

THE EQUAL OF ANY ON THIS CONTINENT

THE BEST TALENT OF THE STATE

Is employed upon THE CALIFORNIAN.

The voluntary notices bestowed by the press of the Eastern cities have been no less warm and congratulatory than those which we have received at the hands of our cotemporaries of the Pacific. Their verdict is unanimously in favor of

THE CALIFORNIAN

and all join in pronouncing their unqualified approval of its unequalled merits.

Its reputation is now fully established. It is not

EXCELLED BY ANY LITERARY JOURNAL

on the Continent.

THE TERMS OF THE CALIFORNIAN are $5 per year, mailed to subscribers, invariably in advance; 50 cents per month served by carriers.

All communications and correspondence must be addressed to the Publishers of THE CALIFORNIAN,

No 532 Merchan street

SAN FRANCISCO.

FULL SETS

FROM THE COMMENCEMENT OF THE CALIFORNIAN

TO THE CLOSE OF VOL. IV.

Can be procured at the Office. Price, bound in muslin, per volume, $4. Two volumes bound together, $7. Unbound, per volume, $3.

OCCIDENTAL

INSURANCE COMPANY,

S. W. Cor. MONTGOMERY and CALIFORNIA STREETS

INDIVIDUAL LIABILITY.

CAPITAL STOCK, - - - - - - $300,000

LOSSES PAID IN UNITED STATES GOLD COIN.

THIS COMPANY will insure against loss by Fire on any Dwelling House, Buildings, Merchandise or other property, situated in the State of California. The largest sum they will take on any one risk is thirty thousand dollars.

CHRISTOPHER CHRISTIANSEN, President.
